MAY MEETINGS.

Y.M.C.A. Mission Band.

THIS Band, in connection with the Whittington-avenue branch of the Y.M.C.A., held their first anniversary meeting in the Lecture Hall, on Monday evening, April 23. Mr. W. H. Seagram occupied the chair. A brief report was read by the hon. secretary (Mr. J. H. Kelleway), which stated that the Band is the outcome of some mission services held at the Margate Y.M.C.A. during the Easter holidays, 1887. Since then, many branches of the Y.M.C.A. and other mission stations, have been visited, and the labours of the past year have resulted in much blessing. The band consists of about twenty young men, who divide themselves into small parties, conducting evangelistic services as opportunities offer, their one desire being to win souls for Jesus.

After the reading of the report, Mr. R. Burn. Rev. F. C. Stuart, Mr. George Holland, Mr, H. Chubb, Mr. J. James, and other friends, addressed the meeting.

Trinitarian Bible Society.

The annual meeting of this Society was held on Tuesday evening, last week, at Exeter Hall, Colonel Puget in the chair. The proceedings were characterised by much heartiness; one spirit pervaded the speeches, although many kinds and phases of work were spoken of. On the one hand, it was shown that the worldwide circulation of the Scriptures affords a blessed occasion for united labour on the part of Christians, whatever denomination they may be generally associated with; and, on the other hand, it was shown that, in a time when the Romish Church is receiving much support from sources whence she should only expect opposition, and also when fundamental truths are being set at nought or explained away by many who should defend them, there is a great work to be done by such a Society as this, which circulates only uncorrupted (Protestant) translations of the Scriptures, and is conducted on distinctly evangelical principles.

The fifty-seventh yearly report, an abstract of which was read by Rev. Dr. Bullinger, secretary to the Society, stated that 78,377 Bibles, Testaments, and portions had been put into circulation during the year, grants having been made to many institutions, agencies, and workers. The income amounted to £1977. Very interesting details were given of the marvellous results which have attended the circulation of the Society's Hebrew New Testament by the agents of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews.

A warm address having been delivered by the Chairman, speeches on the importance of the Society's testimony for God were made by Revs. James Ormiston and Walter J. Mayers, both of Bristol. It was powerfully held that present day controversies can only be settled by the Scriptures being recognised as the only Court of Appeal on doctrine. In proportion, also, as we cleave to the Word of God, believing it to be the sword of the Spirit, we shall, any one of us, be able, in Jehovah's name, to chase a thousand who may come up against the truth.

Rev. John Wilkinson spoke with great joy of the reception which the Jews have accorded to the Salkinson-Ginsburg Hebrew New Testament, of which 100,000 copies are in process of circulation. For six years now prayers have been ascending to the Most High, to bless the work among his ancient people; and recent events indicate that we are on the eve of a movement among the Jews such as there has not been since the days of the Apostles. Already about 30,000 copies of this New Testament have been distributed, and fresh doors are continually being opened. A resolution recording deep gratitude to God on this behalf, was also spoken to by Rev. H. Bradford, of Northampton.

The Strangers' Friend Society.

Under the presidency of the Lord Mayor of London, the one hundred and second annual meeting of subscribers and friends of this Society was held a few days ago at the Mansion House. The Society was founded for the purpose of visiting and relieving the sick poor at their own habitations, without any restriction on account of sect or country. The visitors, who number 239, are all voluntary agents, who inquire very carefully into the circumstances of each case before giving relief. The annual report stated that the funds at the disposal of the committee were not sufficient to assist any other than the sick, but local efforts made in late years by the district committees had enabled them to aid many cases of ordinary distress, besides supplementing the Society's grants.

The Earl of Aberdeen spoke with approval of the objects and work of the Society. Whilst they attend to bodily wants they also pay attention to the spiritual welfare of those assisted. The administration of outdoor poor-law relief is necessarily carried out under hard-and-fast rules, and it no doubt results in many very deserving persons being deprived of relief; it is these cases which the charitable societies of the country take under their care.

Sir R. Fowler, M.P., and Mr. W. A. McArthur, M.P., also addressed the meeting.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

The annual meeting of the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, or Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, was held on Friday last at Morley Hall, Regent-street, W. Lord Kinnaird presided, and the proceedings were very cordial throughout.

The secretary, Rev. A. H. Lash, read extracts from the report, and the honorary financial treasurer, Mr. W. T. Paton, read the balance-sheet. There were many reasons for thankfulness to God, and at the same time there were circumstances of a somewhat discouraging character. The work done by the agents of the Society was shown to be very important and highly successful. The statistics were eloquent in setting forth steady advance. The chief ground of discouragement was that the financial report showed an adverse balance of £685. An interesting item of intelligence was that the missionaries themselves had raised a sum of £2257 in the course of their daily work.

Rev. F. E. Wigram, honorary secretary of the Church Missionary Society, gave an account of visits paid by him to the Zenana Mission stations in 1886. Sir Thomas Crawford, Director-General of the Army Medical Staff, spoke at length on Medical Missions. He pointed out that in a country where Western medicine is highly appreciated, and where there are many practitioners of great ability and large experience, it is of the utmost importance that the qualifications of the ladies who go out should be such as will ensure for them respect and success. He remarked upon the excellent medical qualifications of the three ladies already sent out by the Society, and urged the need of sanitary science being cultivated as well as curative science. He also referred to the fact that the Society's stations are situated in just the places where they are most wanted.

Rev. F. B. Meyer delivered a brief address on the claims of India's women and of Christ. Having pictured some of India's woes, he spoke of what Christ has done for womankind. In conclusion he earnestly called upon the meeting to make an effort to wipe off the deficit on the accounts, so that the year might be begun without a financial burden. The appeal was not in vain, for promises, bank-notes, cheques, and gold were handed in with pleasing readiness, and in a few minutes about £300 had been raised. The Doxology was then sung with emphatic appropriateness and much spirit.

Reformatory and Refuge Union.

The annual meeting was held last week in St. James's Hall, Lord Aberdare in the chair. A choir of about 500 children, from various Homes in London connected with the Union, gave an attractive concert, as is usual at the annual meeting. Rev. John Parry, vicar of St. Stephen's, Canonbury, addressed the children on the words, "Stronger than he." (Luke xi. 22.) His method was very helpful, as he frequently questioned the children, and thus maintained their interest as well as driving home the lessons of his subject.

Mr. Bartley, M.P., in the course of a practical address, spoke of the difficulties that lie in the way of rescue workers among children. He said, moreover, that he believed the Society so steered its course that while on the one hand children were prevented from suffering from parental neglect, on the other hand parents were not allowed to escape from their proper obligations. Rev. C. H. Grundy and Sir William Vincent also made short speeches. Mr. John Bridge, the police magistrate at Bow-street, bore strong testimony to the value of the Union. There is not, he said, one of the Metropolitan police magistrates who does not receive the greatest possible assistance from the Union.

Christian Colportage Association.

The fourteenth annual meeting of the Christian Colportage Association for England was held on Thursday, last week, in Exeter Hall. The Association has ninety-two agents in different parts of the country, engaged in visiting from house to house, selling Bibles and Christian publications, and distributing tracts, while seeking opportunities of speaking to people concerning Christ and salvation.

Lord Kinnaird presided, and warmly commended the Association and its work to the support of the Christian public. He deplored the increasing popularity of literature of a questionable character, and spoke a word of warning against religious novels, which are by some good people not only recommended but circulated without any discrimination. Mr. H. D. Brown, secretary, read extracts from the report, showing that during last year sales were effected as follows:—42,363 Bibles and Testaments, 390,950 books, 370,700 magazines, and 152,470 Scripture text cards. In addition to that, half a million Gospel tracts were distributed. The total receipts were £7605, and the expenditure £7538. A new development of the work is an arrangement whereby hawkers and small shopkeepers, in villages and elsewhere are supplied with cheap books of a wholesome kind, to be sold instead of the trash which is only too generally offered for sale by small dealers.

A highly profitable address was delivered to the colporteurs by Rev. Archibald G. Brown, urging fidelity and humility on the part of those who claim to serve God. He took Eliezer as his model, and called attention to the record of his faithful discharge of duty in Gen. xxiv. How Eliezer left himself out of account! Introducing himself to Laban, he said, "I am Abraham's servant." He did not present himself as the "confidential agent" of Abraham, nor did he proudly put himself forward as his "steward." No, but he was content to name his master and leave himself in the background. "I am Abraham's servant." Mr. Brown further remarked that Eliezer used no high sounding title, such as "The Rev. Mr. Eliezer," nor indeed would he describe himself as "Reverend"; it was enough for him to be "Archibald Brown, servant of Jesus Christ." Then, again, Eliezer was in real earnest in the discharge of his duty. Invited to partake of food, he replied: "I will not eat, until I have told mine errand." Some who rank as servants of Christ, when asked to sit down to dinner would readily do so, and leave the telling of their errand until afterwards. Many other lessons were forcibly indicated. Mr. R. Paton and Mr. T. A. Denny also spoke, reminding the colporteurs of their high vocation, and exhorting them to rise to such a sense of their duty that discouragements shall not deter them, and success shall not prevent them from ever remembering that the fruit is of God, to whom all the glory also belongs.

Young Women in the City.

The City branch of the Young Women's Christian Association held its annual meeting at the institute, 14, Finsbury-square, on Thursday last week. A goodly number of friends and subscribers gathered, and the chair was taken by Mr. H. Campbell. The report showed that the various agencies have been well maintained, and that the advantages offered are greatly appreciated. The membership roll numbers 957, most of these being young women employed in the City. Bible-classes, lectures, services of song, and social evenings have been held; and a recent development of the work is a course of educational classes now in progress which promise much success. These include classes for reading, writing, arithmetic, dress-cutting, book-keeping, music, &c.

After prayer by Rev. J. W. Pratt, addresses were delivered by Rev. E. A. Stuart, Prebendary Billing, Mr. D. Marshall Lang, and Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, all of whom testified to the excellency of the work accomplished, and appealed for increased financial help.

German Y.M.C.A.

The third annual meeting was held in the Mildmay Conference Hall, on Thursday last week, under the presidency of Mr. J. E. Mathieson. In an admirable English address he pointed out the close connection between the English and Germans by race, and especially emphasised the great strong home feeling of love and purity which ought to unite the two nations closely together. Addresses were given in German by Messrs. T. P. Werner, J. M. Natorp, Pastor Oley, and Mr. A. Scholten, whilst Dr. Laseron and Rev. John Wilkinson, of Mildmay, gave each a stirring address in English.

The Association numbers 250 members, and, as the cash report shows, closed its third financial year with a small balance on hand, free of debt.

Young Abstainers' Union.

On Wednesday last week, at Exeter Hall, the Young Abstainers' Union held its annual meeting under gratifying circumstances. The Lower Hall was crowded, a very cheering report was read, and several really practical speeches were delivered. The object of the Union is to promote total abstinence from intoxicating liquors among the sons and daughters of the upper and middle classes, and it was shown that this object is being steadily attained, the Union's testimony for that attitude which ensures sobriety having already been productive of good results.

Sir Arthur Blackwood presided over the meeting, and, in the course of a brief address, he emphasised the great importance of temperance work among the young. Canon Wilberforce delivered a powerful address, urging the desirableness of all total abstinence advocacy being based on Gospel principles. Adverting to the fact that publicans are laying claim to compensation in case their licences should be withdrawn, he said that if the Parliament of England should recognise any such claim, it would be taking a step more retrograde than any that had yet been known. Observing, further, that the temperance movement is now passing through a time of crisis, he called upon his hearers to rest assured that God is greater than any House of Commons, and therefore his cause must in due time prevail. Mr. E. J. Kennedy also addressed the meeting.

The Paris City Mission.

The annual drawing-room meeting was held on Friday last, at Lady Ashburton's residence Kent House, Knightsbridge. Mr. J. M. Weylland, the hon. sec. for England, reported on the year's work. Whilst another missionary has been added to the staff, bringing the number up to eight, the funds sent from England have decreased; however, the amount raised by the French pastors shows an increase.

Lord Mount Temple, who presided, pointed out that the Mission reaches those who will not go to Protestant mission halls; the agents of the Mission visits the people at their homes. The work is beset with difficulties, but he held that victories gained in Paris are of great importance, as French ideas influence many other nations as well.

Pastor Fisch, of the Free Church of France, spoke at length on the work of the Mission. He said that tract distribution has proved fruitful of much good. Messrs. Lockie, G. H. Benson, F. Y. Edwards, William Noble, and others also delivered addresses.

Church of England Temperance Society.

The annual meeting of the total abstinence section of this Society was held on Wednesday last week, at Exeter Hall, the Bishop of London presiding. The large hall was crowded. The superintendent of the Society, Rev. G. Howard Wright, read an abstract of the report. March, 1887, it observed, marked the inauguration, by the Society, of the United Committee for the Protection of Native Races abroad from the ravages of the Liquor Traffic. That committee, which comprises members of the leading missionary and temperance Societies, has already collected a large amount of evidence, and successfully promoted a Standing International Committee. Cheering accounts are given of the work in many directions. It was stated that the Sunday closing petition, from the women of England, is seven miles long.

The Bishop of London, in a vigorous address, remarked that for years his heart had been entirely with temperance workers. He said: I cannot help being touched with a sense of shame when I think of what is going on in the Colonies and in foreign countries. Would to God that I might stir you all to indignation, fierce and hot, against the horrible mischief that English trade is now allowed to do in those heathen lands where people, unaccustomed to self-control, are being led to indulge in fleshly sin, where they are learning the lesson of self-indulgence without having acquired any strength to resist, and where they are bending down to deeper degradation than can be named to future generations. I believe that our Government is really doing what it can in the matter, but I wish we could make men all over the world feel for a short time what true manly Christians must feel when they think of such deeds of iniquity as those to which I allude. I hope we shall not let the subject drop; I hope we shall do our part to free England from such a reproach, such a scandal, among the nations of the world.

The Bishop of Sodor and Man, Mr. W. Johnston, M.P., and the Dean of Armagh, also spoke.

On Thursday, last week, the seventh annual meeting of the Women's Union of the Church of England Temperance Society was held at Grosvenor House, under the presidency of the Bishop of Sodor and Man. Miss Haslam, the secretary, read the report, which stated that the number of new branches is 19. The branch in St. Pancras Workhouse has completed three years of steady work, and it is resolved to extend the movement throughout all the London workhouses. Steps are being taken to establish a Home for Inebriate Women.

After a sympathetic speech by the Chairman, Lady Hope addressed to the meeting some hearty "Words of Cheer for Workers," and other ladies subsequently spoke on practical subjects.

The Country Towns Mission.

The annual meeting of the Country Towns Mission was held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening, last week. The object of the Mission is to employ missionaries, Scripture-readers, and female agents, in the cities, towns, villages, and agricultural districts of England and Wales; and it was shown that much work of a truly high order is being quietly done by the evangelists connected with the Mission.

Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard, who presided, pointed out the great need of Gospel preaching in many country towns and villages. Short addresses were also given by four agents of the Mission. All had interesting facts to communicate. One mentioned that he had been very successful in getting people round him at outdoor meetings, as he had used a hand-organ, by means of which he had accompanied the hymns which he had sung by way of attracting attention. Another told of good work done in tent preaching; a third declared that in some parts of Warwickshire miles may be traversed without coming near a place of worship in which the pure Gospel is proclaimed; and a fourth related many remarkable incidents of labour in public-houses and on cab-stands.

Mr. H. C. Nisbet, treasurer, also spoke, telling of the help which had been rendered by the Mission to local committees, who would not otherwise have been able to employ missionaries in places where they were greatly needed. Mr. H. W. Maynard and Colonel H. S. Clarke also addressed the meeting.

Wesleyan Missionary Society.

Recurring anniversaries of the Wesleyan Missionary Society are generally times of refreshing to those who, from all parts of the United Kingdom, assemble to hear of the progress of the Gospel in heathen lands by means of the agents of the Connexion. The annual meetings of the Society are, as a rule, associated with much enthusiasm; and that held on Monday, in Exeter Hall, was no exception to the rule. Mr. Isaac Hoyle, M.P., occupied the chair, and there was a large attendance of supporters, old and young, male and female.

An abstract of the report was read by Rev. G. W. Olvers. It showed that while the missions in Europe have been patiently guarded, the foreign stations are in a condition calculated to afford much encouragement. The total income from all sources last year amounted to £131,800, which was less than the expenditure by the sum of £6,100. There is now an accumulated debt of £16,869, but the Committee is hopeful that, by the hearty co-operation of all the friends of the Society, the funds will be so increased in amount that the missions may not only be sustained in their present vigour, but also extended as fresh doors for effort may be opened.

The Chairman's address was one full of sympathy with the Society's work. Having reviewed the past with its many encouragements, and surveyed the present with its pressing opportunities, he expressed a hope that, by the help of God, fervour and enthusiasm, and ways and means as well, will be forthcoming to support and extend the Society's operations.

Rev. J. Walton, President of Conference, who had worked in India and Africa, spoke in warm appreciation of the interest taken in missions by the Methodists at large, and maintained that the efforts that had been made to send the Gospel to the heathen had yielded a good return to Christians at home in the shape of impulses to work for God. Rev. S. Whitehead, from China, in the course of an earnest speech, said that, though called "Celestials," the people of China are of the earth, earthy, living in a sadly corrupt state, where lying is an art, and everything that is abominable is practised.

Mr. J. Barnsley, of Birmingham, delivered an eloquent address in support of mission work in general. Being a young man, he undertook to speak representatively, and declared that "Young Methodism" is really enthusiastic in the cause of sending a knowledge of God's love and Christ's salvation abroad among the nations of the world. Rev. Wm. Burgess, of Hyderabad, also addressed the meeting.

Freedmen's Mission Aid Society.

At the annual meeting last week, in the Clapham Presbyterian Church, Dr. Gwynne Jones, the secretary, reported that there are forty-seven missionaries in the field, which lies in the southern part of Sierra Leone, West Africa, a part of the colony wholly unoccupied by missionaries previously. There are now about 4000 converts, 800 of whom are in the day and Sunday-schools. There are also industrial institutions in connection with several of the stations where the arts of Western civilisation are taught, farming carried on, and shops where mechanics of every description ply their several trades. During the year a Training College was erected and opened at Shaingay, the chief station. The missionaries and their assistants itinerate into 400 towns and villages, and had there been more workers they would have been heartily welcomed in 300 more.

Dr. MacEwan endorsed the wisdom of the method pursued in selecting for the work men of the African race, who are able to stand against the baneful effects of a climate which is peculiarly fatal to white men. Rev. Ola B'N. Aboyami, the son of a Mahommeda a priest in the Soudan, delivered a very interesting address, wherein he showed that although Mahommedanism might be described as far superior to the degraded heathenism which prevails in Africa, it falls far short of Christianity in its civilising influence on the people. The Gospel of Jesus Christ alone can fully reveal the Father's infinite love to his erring children. Rev. Lawson Forster, LL.B., gave a stirring address in support of the Mission. Dr. Flickinger, who started the Mission thirty-three years ago, and who has superintended it ever since, gave an interesting epitome of the progress of the work, concluding a very eloquent address with a powerful and pathetic appeal for sympathy and help in carrying on this great work.

Church Missionary Society.

Sir John Kennaway, Bart., M.P., presided over a meeting held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday morning in celebration of the anniversary of this Society. There was a large audience, and the proceedings were very hearty throughout.

The report, read by Rev. F. E. Wigram, hon. clerical secretary, told of much work done by missionaries and native Christians alike in many lands, and indicated not a few tokens of progress and blessing in the field. The balance-sheet showed a deficit, though the receipts from all sources, except legacies, had been higher than for five years past.

In the course of a brief address, the Chairman alluded to the mistrust which some firm friends had recently entertained as to the policy of the Society, and, by way of answering inquiries, he pointed to the men who are being trained and sent forth, and to the character of the work that is being done by the Society's agents.

Other speakers also referred to the intention of the Society, with the help of God, to remain faithful to its evangelical principles, and urged the importance of supporters putting full confidence in the Committee. The Bishop of Rochester, in a telling speech, deplored that only one-third of the parishes in the province of Canterbury send a contribution to either of the missionary societies of the Church of England; only one-fourth of the parishes in the Metropolis send anything; and only £1000 out of £200,000 a year of the income of the Church Missionary Society is subscribed by persons having titles to their names.

Among the speakers were the Rev. the Master of Trinity, and Sir Rivers Thompson. Allusion was made to the recent controversy with reference to Mohammedanism, and one of the resolutions passed by the meeting heartily endorsed the action of the Committee in specially appealing for picked men to do battle with Islam. In the course of the morning many sums were given or promised towards covering the deficit in the balance-sheet.

National Temperance League.

The supporters of the National Temperance League have much reason to be gratified with the annual meeting which was held on Monday evening, at Exeter Hall. The Bishop of London presided over a large assemblage, and he was supported by many influential friends of the movement. While acknowledging that much has been accomplished during late years toward popularising the principle of sobriety, the speakers all had to deplore the prevalence of drunken habits among both young and old, and to admit that there is yet a great deal of temperance work to do. The Secretary of the League, Mr. R. Rae, in an abstract of the annual report, referred to the increased drink expenditure during the Jubilee year, and to the Local Government Bill, and forcibly held that "there is still much need for enlightening the people as to the true character of intoxicating liquors."

The Bishop delivered an address full of sympathy with the League in its work. He pointed out that indulgence in intemperance is not only attended by evils to the sinner and those connected with him, but frequently followed by a whole crop of crime. He analysed the claim put forward on behalf of moderate drinkers, that there is something more noble and manly in restraint and self-control than in total abstinence. Seeing, however, that God had made man for society, and not for isolation, the claim cannot be sustained, for the individual has a duty to others as well as to himself. The self-control of the moderate drinker is no example to the saints of Christ, nor to others who can do without his example. The weak and fallen who need sympathy and help get but a poor example from the man who takes in moderation what causes so much mischief on every hand. With great force the Bishop showed that true nobility and manliness is shown by self-sacrifice, and he called upon moderate drinkers to take up that light cross and show a disposition to suffer and bear a little in the Christian cause.

Addresses were delivered by Dr. G. P. Deeping, the Bishop of Sodor and Man, Rev. W. J. Woods, Mr. J. Rowntree, M.P., Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., and Rev. F. B. Meyer. Mr. Caine's speech was a strong condemnation of the conduct of the Government of India in thrusting drink-shops upon the most helpless and ignorant of the population, by means of what is known as the "outstill" system. He called upon total abstainers to use their influence to get a resolution passed in the House of Commons to at least secure local option to the people of India. The Bishop of Sodor and Man, in his speech, mentioned, by the way, that both his wife and the wife of the Bishop of London are total abstainers. The statement was loudly cheered by the audience.

SEPHARVAIM.—In a recent issue reference was made to a lecture on the discovery of Sepharvaim, or Sippara, an ancient city on the river Euphrates, and it was said to be "contended that the place "existed as early as the thirty-ninth century before the Christian era." This statement is certainly definite enough to excite suspicion. All that can be confidently said is that tradition (and on this full reliance certainly cannot be placed) carries the fame of the city back to a period before the Flood. Mythologies fill in an attractive picture, but there are no sufficient grounds on which precise dates can be named.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. John Nesbitt, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, brought to a close on Sunday, April 22, a happy three weeks' Gospel mission, at Rooskey, co. Monaghan.

Mr. Moody is making a very successful evangelistic tour beyond the Mississippi, taking Denver, Leadville, Pueblo, and Colorado Springs on his way. At Denver 300 conversions are reported in his meetings.

Mr. and Mrs. Mountain have been conducting a Gospel mission in Auckland, New Zealand. Interesting accounts of their work on the East Coast of North Island have awakened expectation of like blessings in Auckland.

Rev. A. B. Earle.—In a recent private note, our venerable and esteemed brother, Rev. A. B. Earle, the American evangelist, writes to us as follows:—"I have now held 38,460 public meetings; 21,160 of them preaching services. I have travelled to hold these meetings 350,000 miles. My health has been firm nearly all these years. Thank God!"

Mr. Herbert Francis has had wonderful tokens of blessing at a coloured College in Virginia, U.S.A. Deep conviction of sin has followed the preaching of the Gospel amongst the students, whose ages range from seven to over twenty. A special feature of the work was the way in which the young converts helped those who were seeking Christ, to grasp the way of salvation.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has had good meetings in several of the leading Churches of San Francisco. Much interest has been manifest, and there have been many conversions among both children and adults. A San Francisco paper says: "The need of more aggressive work on the part of well organised churches in this city is very apparent. It is within the power of these churches, working together, to reach a great multitude who are living in our midst, entirely uninfluenced by the Gospel." Mr. Hammond has now returned to Vernon Centre, Conn., his summer home.

Newcastleton, N.B.—In the little village of Newcastleton, N.B., a religious awakening has taken place, under the ministry of Rev. N. Paterson, Congregationalist. About sixty, old and young, have professed conversion during the past six weeks. The elders of the little church, and young converts, have thrown themselves heartily into the work; and members in connection with all the churches have been led to Christ. In one family four sons have been led into the light, and the father, a family grocer, has refused to renew his licence this year. The work has extended far beyond the village.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions have been arranged in connection with this Society for May. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by our readers:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken: May 6—12, St. James's, Belfast; 13—19, Parish Church; 20, 27, and June 3, Christ Church. Revs. W. Hay Aitken and A. R. D'Arcy: May 21—June 2, Ulster Hall. Rev. C. I. Atherton: May 5—11, Staverton, Totnes. Rev. R. Catterall: May 5—15, St. Matthias', Manchester; 7—12, All Saints'. Rev. W. E. Cleworth: May 11—18, Blackborough, Cullompton. Rev. Jos. Cullin: May 6, 13, 20, 27, Canterbury Cathedral. Rev. A. R. D'Arcy: May 6—12, Trinity Church, Belfast; 13—19, St. Stephen's; 20, 27, and June 3, St. Andrew's. Rev. J. H. Haslam: May 5—15, Kenley; 20, Higham, Rochester (preparatory visit). Rev. R. D. Monro: May 5—9, Holy Trinity, Nottingham. Rev. Dr. Morris: May 5—21, Lowmoor, Clitheroe; 27—June 6, Brailsford, Derby. Rev. J. Stephens: May 5—28, Carnforth, Warton, and neighbourhood. Rev. F. S. Webster: May 13—25: St. Simon s, Southsea.

PECKHAM N.V.A.—A well attended meeting of this branch of the Vigilance Association, at which great interest was manifested, was recently held in this rapidly increasing suburb, which is itself a large town. Mr. John Taylor presided, and the speakers were Revs. H. J. Perkins and J. T. Briscoe, as well as Mr. W. A. Coote and Mr. R. C. Morgan. The moving spirit of the work here is Mr. Vincent, the secretary, a thin, wiry, delicate-looking man, of singular courage and tenacity of purpose. We hope to give some of his adventures in an early issue. Meanwhile we shall be glad to learn that he and his coadjutors are as well supported as they deserve to be, both by contributions and personal co-operation.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Dr. Bruce, of Huddersfield, Chairman of the Congregational Union. The sketch of Dr. McCosh, announced last week, is postponed till our issue of May 18.

The Bishop of Rochester has, in a letter to his clergy, very justifiably and pithily declared that "the house of God must not be lightly degraded into a concert-room, merely because it may be found a convenient place for making money." But are not chapels as well as churches degraded, when, because they are to be had cheaply, they are turned into places of amusement for the people? The filling of a place of worship under such an attraction is no evidence of successful religious work, and we are sorry to see that this thing continues, and threatens to increase. Good men in churches must look to it. To entertain and amuse the godless in places of worship may bridge over the chasm between them and church buildings, at the expense of deepening the chasm between indifference and real spiritual religion. You may make sick children loathe wholesome food by feeding them on sweets.

There is in this connection an instructive account from Birmingham. A church in that town, called St. Mary's, surrounded by poor people, and most of them Roman Catholics, became all but entirely deserted. Like many city churches it stood as a melancholy and not very sightly monument of better days. Now the worshippers are so numerous that the outer gates have to be closed, because the galleries, aisles, and even sitting room on windows, can contain no more. The difficulty is to keep the people out, not to get them in. This has gone on for two years. No less than 1500, and even 1800, working men of Birmingham fill the church on Sunday afternoons. The secret, we are told, is not music or doubtful expedients, but the clergyman's free speech, his evangelical warmth, and manifest sincerity. Preachers never make a greater mistake than when they aim to gain the masses by trimming and compromise. May God in mercy give what the people are craving—a race of preachers who know nothing as they do their New Testaments!

Overwork on the railways continues to be a source of serious public danger. From a recently published Parliamentary return, embracing the employment of passengers and goods guards, engine-drivers and firemen, signalmen and examiners, the figures show that, upon five of the great English railways, there were about 440,000 cases in which, in the months of July and January, the employment ranged from thirteen to eighteen out of the twenty-four hours. In bringing these facts under notice in The Times, Mr. Thos. Sutherst well remarks:—

> If these figures are startling for so short a period, what must be the effect of the annual result! Such protracted periods of toil, besides being, as a rule, unnecessary, jeopardise the safety of the passengers, destroy the health and domestic comfort of the men, and, from an economic point of view, are opposed to the interests of the community at large.

It is unnecessary even to suggest arguments in favour of a sweeping reform in this department of railway management. On humane, let alone Christian, grounds, something should be done as soon as possible. Perhaps those who, from one reason or another, will not give weight to the high economic considerations involved will take alarm when the fact is realised that the majority of these overworked men are directly or indirectly responsible for the safety of railway travellers.

What to do with the children of the streets, and how to prevent them from swelling the ranks of the "dangerous classes," is a question of deep import to philanthropists and Christian workers. A correspondent of The Times has lately written an interesting account of a successful organisation for rescuing the street vagabonds of Paris, and known as "Le Service des Moralement Abandonnés," which term includes incipient criminals and unmanageable, destitute, or friendless children. Briefly stated, the aim is not to punish, but to reclaim, and to fit each child to be self-supporting. To this end the boarding-out system has been found most efficacious, except in cases of mental or physical defect, or extremely vicious propensities, which are sent to an asylum or reformatory school.

It is sometimes urged in extenuation of drunkenness that the unhappy victim is driven to the public-house as a refuge from the miseries of an ill-kept and neglected home. The Bishop of London, however, at a recent meeting of the National Temperance League, laid down a general rule that "drunkenness caused the wretched home, rather than the wretched home caused drunkenness." At this same meeting several Metropolitan workhouse masters and relieving officers bore very strong witness to the truth of the oft-reiterated statement that a large amount of pauperism and want of employment is due to intemperance, and the generally expressed opinion was that but for this cause the work of relieving officers would be much lighter. Per contra, it was stated that "it is rare, indeed, to find a person of temperate habits, not to say a total abstainer, applying for parish relief." We doubt not that this testimony could be amply endorsed by Poor Law officials in all parts of the country.

To pass the licensing clauses of the Local Government Bill in their present shape is to set back the clock of temperance reform. To diminish licenses whilst allowing compensation is to give with one hand and to take away with the other, and, as has been pointed out in the House of Commons, to saddle the closing power with conditions which will most seriously hamper its effectual exercise. The fatal fallacy which underlies the concession is the placing of the business of brewers and publicans upon the same level as that of ordinary tradesmen, the latter being, generally speaking, worthy and useful, whereas the former is destructive of health and morals, of body and soul alike. The Lord Chief Justice of England has recently stated that the discretion of the present licensing authorities is absolute; there can, therefore, be no legal grounds for compensation. As to the moral grounds, we think the less said by the publicans the better for them.

As will be seen from the Notes of our American correspondent, Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, is to visit England next month as a delegate to the Missionary Conference. We learn that among the delegates—some fifty in number—will also be Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, Dr. G. D. Boardman, and Dr. William Taylor, of New York; Mr. W. E. Blackstone, of Chicago (a living encyclopædia of missionary facts and statistics); Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, and General Clinton B. Fisk. Our American brethren will clearly be well represented at this world council.

M. de Lavaleye, the well-known Belgian publicist, writes again to The Pall Mall Gazette to say that he has been blamed for exposing, in his recent article, the intolerance of Roman Catholics, while leaving uncondemned acts of intolerance on the part of Freethinkers in France and Italy. M. de Lavaleye replies that he is hostile to persecution, wherever it is committed; but if Protestants persecute, it is in direct opposition to their avowed principles, while it is an express part of the authoritative creed of the Romish Church to extirpate what it deems heresy:—

> The Papacy has always considered the destruction of heretics a triumph for the Church. Before entering the Capella Sistina, in the Vatican, you pass through a hall, called the Sala Regia: on the walls are pictures by Vasari, representing the triumphs of the Roman Church. Four of these frescoes show the horrors of the massacre of the Huguenots on St. Bartholomew's Eve. Pope Gregory XIII. ordered the perpetuation on the walls of his palace of the memory of this crime, the anniversary of which drew tears from the eyes of old Voltaire. The residence of the Pope is the only place in the world where murder is publicly glorified.
>
> The Church has in no ways modified her dogmas; for in a work lately published by Canon Moulart, under ecclesiastical approval, and entitled "The Church and the State," we read on page 297, "It is truly impossible that the Church should not use her prerogative of afflictive justice against heretics. In the eyes of the Church heresy is an awful crime, a social crime, which affects the very foundation of the faith." When she deems it expedient to excommunicate heretics, all the faithful are bound to abstain from dealing with them. When circumstances permit it, she can even have recourse to the secular power, and demand the support of penal laws. In all treaties concluded with Catholic countries by Pius IX., it was stipulated that the Catholic religion should be the only worship tolerated, and the practice of any other was prohibited and prevented. It is therefore undesirable in the interests even of Catholicism that the priesthood should become all-powerful in Catholic countries, for they would take advantage of their power to persecute, and in our day this would cause a universal outcry.

This doughty defender of the reformed faith is doing good service in thus unveiling the horrors of the Romish system, which is nothing less than a calculated conspiracy against the elementary rights of mankind. How intelligent and truth-loving people can give credence or attach themselves to such a blasphemous imposture, is one of the insoluble riddles of human history.

Mr. E. C. Newbery, an earnest and active evangelist, writing from San Remo, discusses the question of giving or selling the Scriptures. For nineteen years Mr. Newbery has given away copies, in preference to selling them. He maintains that it is more reasonable so to circulate the Scriptures than to spend the cost of nine books upon the work of selling one. Arguing on behalf of free distribution, Mr. Newbery quotes from the Old and New Testaments, and among the passages thus mentioned are:—Deut. vi. 6—9; Isa. xxxii. 20; John xvii. 8; Matt. x. 8; Prov. iii. 27, xi. 24, 25; Luke vi. 38. Mr. Newbery tersely presents the problem by declaring that the sower's business is to sow, not to sell. Those who can promote this blessed dissemination are hereby urged to face the facts, and embrace their opportunities.

The question as to how far the arm of the Government should be used in sustaining Missionary work in a heathen country is not such a simple one as it might appear. But we think the meeting of the friends of African missions, held last week in the Westminster Palace Hotel, had a strong case in appealing to the British authorities for protection against the Arab slave-traders in the Nyassa region, and against Portuguese exclusiveness on the Zambesi. All the European nations are in a sense intruders in Africa, and it may not be easy to determine the validity of their conflicting claims to possession of territory. But Portugal has never been favourable to Protestant missions, and we should greatly regret to see her power extended in these regions. As for the slave trade, surely all civilised peoples might well combine to put it down with a strong hand.

A lady who was deemed the mainstay of a department of the Y.W.C.A. had it laid on her heart to go to Africa. But how could she be spared? Would not the work suffer? No: God is not reduced to one servant, or one handmaid. Miss Trotter went to Algiers, and Miss Beauchamp and other ladies took her place at home, with an increase of usefulness and efficiency.

The "Down Grade" seems to have reached Ireland, if this be true. A speaker at a recent Unitarian anniversary in Belfast stated that in one town where the Unitarian congregation has diminished, the diminution is due to the fact that the people have gone to the Presbyterian chapel, as the minister at the latter "held almost similar views to the other, and was a more eloquent preacher, which had attracted the people." At the beginning of the present century, it was not unusual to find the Presbyterian minister in Ireland classified as Unitarian, but surely that day has long gone by, and it is not unlikely that the one referred to above will by and by be called upon to explain as to his "similar views."

A correspondent, officially connected with an important London mission, writes to us:—

> At a recent meeting it was mentioned that a society received upwards of £20,000 within the last few days of its financial year. Doubtless other societies have the same experience. Do their subscribers know that to carry on the work the outlay continues with but little variation through each of the twelve months, and, in consequence, a large loan has to be effected in the autumn—a loan which of course bears interest. Could not many give in the summer and autumn as easily as in the spring; or, better still, give quarterly or monthly? That local treasurers ought to remit at least quarterly goes without saying.

A number of prominent Christian workers in Boston, Mass., are maturing an important immigration scheme. It seems that the New England States of America are suffering from the cityward tendency of young people, not a few desirable farms being consequently left desolate, while quite capable of sustaining in comfort many industrious families. The idea is to invite settlers from Great Britain—men of good character, and willing to become American citizens in deed, as well as in name. For it is felt that there are sadly too many people in the United States who are more or less under the sway of a foreign potentate, whose throne is in Rome, and it is hoped that this scheme will in its operation in some measure counteract the influence of the Papal party. A hearty welcome will be given to peaceable English-speaking immigrants who will identify themselves with the political interests of the country, and see it to be their duty and privilege to order their lives in the fear of God. Doubtless there are many intelligent English people who will be glad to avail themselves of such openings as are brought under notice by the American Committee on Immigration, of which Mr. H. L. Hastings (Box 250, Boston, Mass.) is chairman.

It is argued in some quarters, in extenuation of the Madonna and Child, and other graven images now set up in St. Paul's, that they are emblems, rather than objects for worship, and that if worship is directed towards them, as undoubtedly it is, it is addressed not to the images but to those whom they represent, the images being simply aids to thought. But there is not an idolatry under heaven which could not be justified by the same excuse. And, in point of fact, this is the pretence with which the more educated heathen confront missionaries to-day. But who is to explain these subtle distinctions to the common people? And who is to draw the delicate line of demarcation between what is allowable and what is wrong. Israel worshipped Jehovah under the form of a calf, but this did not secure them from the stern visitation of his displeasure.

The mind of man cannot, by its very constitution, make use of a visible emblem of the unseen, without, in process of time, attaching to the emblem an intrinsic sanctity. The very elements of the Lord's Supper, which were simply intended as mementoes, are literally worshipped in ten thousand churches through Christendom. And there is no doubt that many who now kneel in rapt devotion on the pavement of our great Protestant Cathedral, are fixing their minds exclusively on the images before them. And all the remonstrances of their mis-leaders cannot alter it.

The times are strangely out of joint! We notice that the Baptist Union, with two unimportant exceptions, has re-elected the Council, which has had the management of its affairs during the last six or twelve months, thereby ratifying its action, and empowering it still to act for the Union. Nothing could more clearly indicate the general current of feeling in that body, as against Mr. Spurgeon's action. We understand that many of the most earnest men are intending to remain in union with it, in the hope of moulding it, and changing its constitution and spirit. We admire their courage, but we cannot feel very sanguine of their success. We can only regret that, in the presence of all the sin and sorrow of the world, it should be necessary for so many earnest men to expend their energy in questions like these, so radical in importance, and yet so certain to divide their strength.

It is earnestly to be hoped that as a result of the Baptist Union decision a spirit of theological license may not grow. This is now the danger that menaces the churches. Already we hear a strange boast that men belonging to evangelical bodies claim to be heterodox. The consensus of theologians through all the Christian centuries is summarily set aside. Among preachers, some, who are older, dogmatically reason about the state after death, as though they could see in the dark; and younger ones rush in where angels would fear to tread. In all congregations there are men who want a change of doctrine, because they are impatient of evangelical restraints. Sure we are that the modern tampering with the supreme authority of Scripture means an inclined plane that will inevitably conduct to utter unbelief.

The copious and trustworthy evidence now being given before the Select Committee on the sweating system serves to strengthen the statements we have made from time to time as to the utter inadequacy of the present regulations to cope with the crying evils of the system. The opinion expressed by one of the witnesses, that the system is largely due to the unchecked immigration of foreigners, is one that calls for serious and patient consideration on the part of the authorities.

Two facts may be put side by side: the Bishop of Rochester has just met working men in South London. In a free Conference one of them said that the men wished the clergy would preach in a higher strain of intelligence; another, that secularists looked on Christianity as an imposture. How are working men being met? In Sheffield, where they are numerous and intelligent, the following hymn to Mary is used, not in a Romish, but a professedly Protestant church:—

> Mother of Mercy! day by day
>   My love of thee grows more and more;
> Thy gifts are strewn upon my way,
>   Like sands upon the great sea-shore.
>
> Get me the grace to love thee more;
>   Jesus will give if thou wilt plead;
> And, Mother! when life's cares are o'er,
>   Oh I shall love thee then indeed.

It seems incredible that such a farrago of falsehood, and blasphemy, should be permitted in a church of the Reformation, and there can be no ground for wonder that English workmen who hear of it are alienated from Christianity.

The Purity Movement is the forward motion of militant Christianity, and Christians are bound in a special way to fall into rank and join the aggressive march. This is being recognised all over the world. We are glad to be able to record the formation of a White Cross Society last month at Yokohama, in Japan. The occasion was notable also because of the valuable speech then delivered by Bishop Bickersteth, who presided over the meeting. Some portions of that speech are worthy of repetition here. Speaking of the principles which lay at the basis of the Purity societies, he said:—

> The first is the absolute obligation of the law of purity, as that law was enunciated by Christ and accepted by the Christian Church, and by very many beyond the Church. The second is the equality of this obligation on both men and women. The third principle is the identity of the obligation of the law of purity as between members of different nations. Whatever obligation an Englishman recognises towards an English woman, he must also recognise towards an Indian or a Japanese woman; and if the English woman is, so to speak, his sister, then so is the Indian or Japanese woman.

It is the third principle which requires emphatic repetition at this moment. If Englishmen in India and in the House of Commons can be persuaded to accept this principle of equality of all races in the presence of the law of purity, the ghastly sin of the English Government in India, in organising the sacrifice of Hindoo women to the lust of English soldiers, will be speedily ended.

It is a little strange to read of the Germans having an annual day of humiliation and prayer, for as a nation we feel ourselves much beyond that sort of thing. But we personally could wish that we also had such an institution. One day on which all churches would assemble their members and put before them the need of personal humiliation for private and national sins, and of earnest prayer for forgiveness and strength, might be a great help to the cause of true religion among us. Not, of course, that we are altogether without such days, observed by different bodies, but there is no day acknowledged by all the greater denominations, and there is consequently not the same national acknowledgment of sin which ought to be made.

We are asked to give the whole of the Resolution passed at the C.M.S. meeting referred to in our last; only a portion of it was quoted in our note:—

> That while the Committee, both in the selection of the Society's missionaries and the training of its students, have ever steadfastly kept in view the dissemination of the Gospel of Christ in its purity and simplicity, and while the Committee glory, and trust that they will ever glory, in a bold avowal of Protestant doctrine, both at home and abroad, and will always, by God's help, proclaim and maintain in the mission-field, with all the force and influence of the Society, the pure Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in accordance with the evangelical principles of the Church of England as set forth in her Prayer-book, Articles, and Homilies, they do not consider it to be part of their duty as the Directors of a Missionary Society to take any corporate action at home with regard to any erroneous doctrines or practices which may trouble the Church, unless it should become absolutely necessary to do so in order to preserve their own proper work from interference. The Committee feel they have a right to ask for generous confidence on the part of their friends, and a reasonable liberty of action in their attempt, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, to solve the many difficult and ever-varying problems which the rapid development of the work presents.

A friend writes that if the Pope would lend St. Peter's at Rome to the Church Missionary Society, or the Bible Society, with full liberty to have their own chosen hymns, Scripture lessons, and preacher, he would accept it joyfully, despite all the Madonnas. So would we, if it involved no apparent sanction of the idolatries perpetrated there, and offended no weak brother's conscience. The whole question as to what is right in such a case has been already settled by the Holy Spirit in 1 Cor. viii.

It is strangely inconsistent that men who, on account of the Popish reredos recently erected there, voted against the Church Missionary Society accepting the use of St. Paul's for a special meeting of their own, should have subsequently voted for the Bible Society going there on Tuesday last, to the usual four o'clock service. This we are assured, on good authority, is a fact.

Attacks on Christianity frequently bring about unintended results, when they evoke defences of the faith that entrench that faith more firmly than ever in the mind and heart of mankind. The author of "Robert Elsmere" has rendered this service to historical truth and doctrinal orthodoxy, in calling out Mr. Gladstone's very able rejoinder, which appears in The Nineteenth Century for May. Those who have tasted for themselves the powers of the world to come, and have known, in their own experience or that of others, the consolations of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, are not likely to be moved aside by speculative works of fiction. But waverers and questioners must surely be influenced by the fact that the possessor of one of the keenest and most penetrating intellects of this generation is not shaken in his acceptance of the supernatural, and the Divine aspects of the Christian faith, by all the assaults of human science, philosophy, and negation. If all the readers of "Robert Elsmere" will also read Mr. Gladstone's antidote, revealed religion ought not to suffer in the process.

Mr. Myers' article in the same Review on "The Disenchantment of France," furnishes a very suggestive object lesson as to the deplorable effects on a people of the decay of religious faith. We think the writer errs by way of omission in neglecting to show how the bastard faith of Rome is mainly responsible for the existing degradation of national life and literature in France, and for the loss of high ideals and principles of restraint. The only hope of France, as of every nation that falls into pessimistic unbelief, is a genuine revival of true and undefiled religion, in which faith and good works go hand in hand.

Two Methodist laymen offer £50 for the best essays on "The Class-meeting: its Value to the Church, and Suggestions for Increasing its Efficiency and Attractiveness." First prize, £25; second prize, £15; third prize, £10. Adjudicators:—Rev. Geo. Bowden, Rev. Charles H. Kelly; J. W. Lewis, Esq., Nottingham; and Lewis Williams, Esq., Cardiff. Each essay should occupy about ten pages of The Methodist Magazine, and should be sent in by August 1, to Rev. G. Bowden, Kingswood School, Bath. The little book "Conscience and System in the Stewardship of Money" (Morgan & Scott. 2d.), from which we have recently extracted, was the outcome of a notice in these columns last spring of a prize essay competition on that subject.

Dr. Clifford classifies "the real old Gospel" into facts, forces, and ideas. The Christian Commonwealth well remarks that "the precise statement under a triple enumeration of Gospel quantitative terms should be:—(1) Facts; (2) Commands; (3) Promises. The facts of the Gospel are the Birth, Death, and Resurrection of Jesus Christ. The commands are couched under the terms Faith, Repentance, Baptism. The promises of the Gospel are Remission of Sins, the Gift of the Holy Spirit, and Eternal Life. This is a display of Divine Truth which captivates souls even without the help of commanding eloquence. Any other presentation of evangelical truth, however it may coruscate and scintillate about a congregation, will but leave an unsatisfied void in longing hearts."

In connection with the recent death of Rev. A. O. Charles, a movement is on foot for the raising of a memorial fund, the proceeds to be invested for the benefit of Mrs. Charles and her family. Mr. Charles acted as honorary secretary of the Homes for Little Boys for ten years, during which period he had to bear the toil and burden which the work necessarily entailed. He devoted his life cheerfully to the work, and the measure of his success was one index of the extent of his self-denying exertions. Many friends of the young will be glad to join in this tribute of esteem for God's faithful servant. The treasurer of the fund is Mr. W. H. Willans, 23, Holland-park, W.

OBITUARY.

MR. LINCOLN, BERESFORD CHAPEL.

With deep regret we record the death of this much-esteemed preacher and teacher, on Wednesday last, at the age of sixty-three, after a long and painful illness. His remains were interred at Honor Oak on Monday last. Beresford Chapel, Southwark, was crowded with a sympathetic congregation for the funeral service, in which Mr. J. G. McVickar, Mr. C. R. Hurditch, and Dr. Owles took part. At the grave, in the presence of about a thousand friends and mourners, further words were spoken by Mr. Penstone and Mr. Horner. Carriages and vehicles brought large numbers of people from the country districts. Mr. Lincoln had in many respects a remarkable career. He was a man of great learning and classical ability, and wrote some important theological works, especially on prophecy. Next week we hope to give some details of his life.

MR. F. W. CHESSON.

We regret to announce the death, on Sunday last, of this well-known philanthropist. He was best known, says The Daily News, as the Secretary of the Aborigines Protection Society, a post he held for many years. Perhaps no living man was better acquainted with the social condition of our subject races. Mr. Chesson had made this subject his favourite study for the greater part of his life. He stood between the ignorant native and the oppression of private greed or of administrative tyranny. His modest office was really a department for the protection of the races under British sway. His eloquent protests shamed us out of the too common practice of laying savage settlements in ashes for every infraction of "international law." He humanised our relations with the native races, and thus worked in the true interests of Imperial unity in his own way.

DR. J. K. MACKENZIE, CHINA.

In the Presbyterian Church, Bristol, Rev. Dr. Millar Nicolson made the following reference to the recent sudden death of Dr. John Kenneth Mackenzie, medical missionary at Tientsin:—"A brilliant career of usefulness for the Master has been cut short. Dr. Mackenzie went out to China eleven years ago in connection with the London Missionary Society, and his work has been greatly blessed. Some years ago he was enabled to cure the wife of the Viceroy, Li Hung Chang, after she had been given up by all the native doctors. The gratitute of that nobleman was unbounded. He made a gift of a large building for a dispensary at Tientsin, and aided the work both by his influence and by his means. The work extended in the most gratifying manner. Only three months ago Dr. Mackenzie (then apparently in good health) wrote home to his father that the work last year had been more successful than ever, and especially that there had been more conversions. That letter arrived about the very time when the telegraph flashed the news that the writer had passed on before. The cause of death was inflammation of the lungs."

THE REREDOS IN ST. PAUL'S.—The Committee of the Protestant Alliance have issued an address to the members describing the "Down-Grade" movement towards Romanism in the Church of England as indicated, among other ways, in the erection of the crucifix in the great national Cathedral. A memorial on the subject to the Bishop of London has been prepared, and copies for signature may be had at the office of the Church Association, 14, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C. From the same office is issued a pamphlet "The Crucifix at St. Paul's" (6s. per 100) strongly condemning idolatrous worship in our cathedrals.

THE LATE MR. SAMUEL MORLEY.—Lady Frederick Cavendish has written to the papers, proposing a memorial to this well-known philanthropist. Among the many good works in which Mr. Morley engaged, none was nearer to his heart than the Royal Victoria Hall, which has for its object the brightening of the lives of the poor, by providing healthy recreation (apart from temptations to drink) and opportunities of instruction for those who desire them. It has occurred to those who worked with him that there could be no more fitting memorial to Mr. Morley than to establish this institution on a permanent basis. Under conditions involving the raising of £17,000, the Charity Commissioners will take over the hall as part of the scheme for People's Palaces in South London. Information will be readily given by Miss E. Cons, hon. sec., at the hall, Waterloo Bridge-road, S.E.

THE DOWN-GRADE COMPROMISE.

OPINIONS OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

The Rock:—By timely compromise and explanation, the Baptist Union has been saved from disruption. The differences that were left were not matters of principle, and were therefore not worth fighting for.

The Sunday School Chronicle:—The desirable end was attained without having recourse to any hollow compromise. We congratulate our Baptist friends on the issue, and trust that nothing now may arise to hinder brotherly love or interfere with denominational usefulness.

The Church Times (High Church):—The Baptist Union has come to an understanding about the Down-Grade controversy. The only remark we feel called upon to offer respecting the transaction is that either Mr. C. H. Spurgeon has been making a mountain of a molehill, or else that an accommodation has been patched up which leaves matters very much as they were.

The Baptist:—Where do we stand? Has anything been gained to either party; or will the communion or want of communion continue? Unity has scarcely been advanced; uniformity has, of course, not been secured. An abstract resolution, with no intention of legislation thereupon, has been adopted. To Dr. Landels, we believe, and to Rev. C. Williams, who has recently acted with Mr. James Spurgeon, largely belong the credit, if any, of this issue. Already, however, there is revolt. It is even said that Mr. Spurgeon is entirely disappointed, and refuses to be bound by the compact. Several of his leading students are certainly protesting, while, on the other hand, it is openly claimed that the Union has endorsed the "Larger Hope." It appears significant that the old Council is practically re-elected.

The Presbyterian Messenger:—What, then, is the nett result of all the movement and excitement that has taken place? Practically, the Council of the Union have vindicated their position. Further, the generally evangelical character of the Baptist ministry and churches may be said to be fully made manifest. That on the great cardinal doctrines of salvation, the teaching of our Baptist brethren has been always in accordance with the Gospel we have always been persuaded, and the adoption by the Assembly of the Union of the declaration passed by the Council ought to set it beyond question. We congratulate our Baptist brethren most heartily on the termination of an internecine strife, which was disturbing their peace and injuring their usefulness. These are not days in which Christians should turn their weapons against each other, and, least of all, those who belong to the Free Evangelical Churches of this country. We ought rather to close our ranks and draw nearer to each other in love and sympathy as we face our common enemies. For Mr. Spurgeon's own sake also we are glad the conflict is at an end, and we trust he will long be spared to enjoy again the esteem and confidence of all his brethren, as well as of Christians of every other name.

The Methodist Times:—We heartily congratulate the Baptist Union on the unexpected but happy result of the long and anxiously expected debate of Monday afternoon. If Mr. Spurgeon had persisted in a course which we have deprecated from the first he would have been defeated by an overwhelming majority. Experienced persons calculated that the Council would have won by a majority of at least four to one. But such a victory would have left division and bitter memories behind it. Mr. James Spurgeon and Mr. Cuff rendered great service to the universal Church of God by the gracious and conciliatory spirit which they displayed at the last moment. The Council now receive a splendid reward for the Christlike temper and patience which they have displayed throughout the agitation. We earnestly hope that the victory of brotherly love will be consummated by the return of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon to the Union. It is evident that there has been a great deal of misapprehension, and that the Union does not, in the least degree, deserve the designation of a "confederacy of evil." He has sufficiently vindicated his own loyalty to the truth, and although the Union has not declared its orthodoxy in the way that he suggested, it has yet done so in other ways so emphatically that he may resume with propriety his old place of highest love and honour among his brethren.

The Nonconformist and Independent:—The restoration of harmony in the Baptist Union will be a matter of joy and gratitude wherever the spirit of Christ rules the heart. A very little reflection will show how much ground has been gained for reason, moderation, and equity, in the interval of the last few weeks. It is now abundantly clear that many of the differences which have found so energetic expression in the course of this controversy were based on misapprehension, less of facts perhaps, than of supposed aims and intentions. It would be worse than useless to inquire who is to blame for these misinterpretations; it is enough that henceforth they will cease from troubling. Mr. James Spurgeon and his friends preserved intact their right to warn their hearers against a view which they hold to be without Scripture warrant. What they have undertaken is not to urge the fact of holding that view as a reason for declining fellowship with the holder.

The Freeman:—There is no victory. Mr. James Spurgeon and Mr. Cuff eagerly sought after the things which make for peace and things wherewith one may edify another. Throughout the negotiations they bore themselves as Christian men, and, with rare manliness, resolved to cease from strife. They who rule their spirits are stronger and braver than the men who take a city, and this courage was displayed by our esteemed brethren. On the other side Dr. Landels exerted all his influence and spared no pains to smooth the path and to remove obstacles out of the way of reconciliation. Mr. Tymms was no less active, and certainly contributed largely to the result. All that remains for any of us is to make the Baptist Union so Evangelical that non-Evangelicals will not care to be members of it; to abstain from the discussion of controverted dogmas and questionable doubts and hopes within the Union, and whereunto all have attained to speak the same things; to abjure Pharisaism of every kind; and to get to honest Christian work, such as the assistance of weak churches, ministry to aged and infirm servants of our Lord, and the evangelisation of our country. Such activities, baptized in the Spirit of Christ, will prove the best and surest guarantee of concord in the Baptist Union.

Word and Work:—A compromise was almost unanimously adopted in which a certain responsibility for the faith of the churches represented has been assumed, and a declaration of this faith made in the terms of the Council's recommendation. They declare themselves to be free from all taint of heresy. Do they expect any intelligent onlooker to believe them? A bold face does not always deceive. Within the Baptist Communion there are, we rejoice to know, many good men and true; but that there are no others who are doing their part in opposing the Gospel of grace is an assertion which, to be believed, requires extraordinary impudence in the speaker, and no less extraordinary ignorance in the hearer. There were men on the floor of the house known to members of the Council who have openly repudiated certain doctrines held and preached by the Pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Why were these gentlemen not asked to formulate the faith they vaunted as better? An opportunity for ascertaining the contradictory creeds received by its members has been lost by the Union, and instead an almost colourless declaration, flexile enough to mean much or little at will, has been introduced to conciliate all parties and conceal all differences. Will it serve the purpose? Will it secure peace with honour? Time will show.

The Record:—A compromise had apparently been arranged for, but the contrast between the peace concluded and the speeches in which the compact was considered is more than ludicrous. They suggest serious doubts whether, after all, the Down-grade incident is at an end. The withdrawal from the report of the Council of certain clauses may remove a technical difficulty, but how far is the real feeling of distrust and dissatisfaction assuaged? Is Mr. Spurgeon satisfied? Are those who protest against the recognition of false doctrine content with an abstract resolution practically affirming the old condition of affairs? For ourselves we desire to see no strife as strife. Our own sympathy with Mr. Spurgeon was sympathy with a protest against false doctrine in a very serious form. So far as the controversy has gone, we have seen no satisfactory evidence that Mr. Spurgeon's charges were unfounded, or the danger less real than he pronounced it. Peace which meant a return to the old paths might have been a basis for congratulation; but a compact patched up to present the semblance of a unity which has no real existence cannot last long. We are not surprised, then, at the dissatisfaction which found utterance before the Union had finished its sittings.

The Christian Commonwealth:—The general impression left by the session, which has happily put an end to an unlovely strife, is one of mystery. The murmuring protests of Revs. J. Douglas and H. D. Brown, two of Mr. Spurgeon's most esteemed friends, added to the inexplicable perplexity of the occasion. The result, however, was naturally received with almost unanimous satisfaction, seeing what a painful crisis has thus been escaped.

The Christian World:—We cannot but believe that out of all the disturbance of the past six months some real good will ensue, and that the progress of truth and Christian liberality will be advanced rather than retarded by what has happened. The fact that the most influential, and perhaps the most widely-loved and revered preacher of modern times, has been worsted in this crusade against the healthy religious movements of the times, and has found that the great bulk of his brethren were sternly, though sorrowfully, in opposition to him, cannot fail to have its effect on other religious bodies. What he has so vainly essayed to do, no other will dare to attempt, and it is probable that for some time to come we shall see no fresh endeavours to cramp the religious conscience and stifle expanding thought.

The British Weekly:—It is with the deepest thankfulness that we record the conclusion of an honourable peace in the Baptist Union. Both parties, as represented by their leaders, have acted in a spirit of Christian forbearance, and a calamity of the first magnitude has been averted. Without altering their constitution or imposing a creed, the Baptist Union have made clear their evangelical character and basis. The real difficulty rose in connection with the question of eternal punishment, and that, on the whole, has been satisfactorily settled. We cannot profess to attach any importance to the condemnation of the doctrine of Purgatory. Purgatory means the torment of believers after death. It has as much connection with the doctrine of probation after death as it has with the Tenterden steeple or the Goodwin Sands. It is a doctrine which has not been held, is not held, and we may safely say never will be held, by any Baptist minister. But the condemnation of dogmatic Universalism is very important and significant, and a real concession to Mr. Spurgeon. Men are not to be condemned for "hopes," large or small. But the positive assertion of Universalism is condemned by the Baptist Union. We think this is right.

The Sword and The Trowel:— I am forced to read the resolution in the light of remarks made at the Council, and specially by the light of the speech of its proposer. To the uninitiated reader the foot-note which encumbers the declaration is simply a plain statement—a fact which no one can dispute; but the question suggests itself: Why is the statement made at all? To this there might be readily found an unobjectionable answer; but the speech of Mr. Williams launches us upon a shoreless sea. Unless his remarks about a 'larger hope' arose out of his view of the foot-note, we cannot see their relevancy. It would never have occurred to us to see in that simple statement any recognition of the "larger hope," whatever that may mean; but when the proposer coupled it with his motion he threw a doubt upon the meaning of his text. He left the aforesaid 'larger hope' in such a chaotic form that it might mean nothing at all, and it might mean all or any one of those pestilences which walk in darkness, slaying souls by myriads. How can those of us who are of the old faith accept language thus interpreted? My brother stated plainly that he did not second the speech of the mover, but only his resolution. If that distinction could be established in the minds of all who voted for it, the question would not need raising; but I feel morally certain that many favourable votes were gained, and many unfavourable votes were prevented, by Mr. Williams' statements, and, therefore, a measure of moral weight is due to them, and a still greater measure will be claimed for them. I have had to wait before I could write decidedly; but I am not convinced that we have a real peace before us, or that we can ever arrive at a successful blending of two parties which so greatly differ from each other. As one outside of the Union I have no right to have anything further to do with its creeds or its declarations....All has been done that can be done, and yet without violence to conscience we cannot unite: let us not attempt it any more, but each one go his own way in quiet, each striving honestly for that which he believes to be the revealed truth of God. I could have wished that instead of saving the Union, or even purifying it, the more prominent thought had been to conform everything to the Word of the Lord.

THE SALVATION ARMY IN FRANCE AND SWITZERLAND.

By Colonel BOOTH-CLIBBORN.

Aigle is a town of 5000 inhabitants in French-speaking Switzerland, where we have a hall, holding eighty people, in which upwards of eighty souls have come to the Saviour's feet within six weeks.

Bordeaux, on the Bay of Biscay, is one of the five large seaport towns in which we have opened stations within the past three months. The hall is crowded each night, and last Sunday eight people came forward to seek salvation.

The report of the last week's work of our Paris Training Homes runs as follows:—Beside the nightly meetings in Quai de Valmy Hall, and the daily lectures and home duties, the cadets have visited 750 cafés on the King's business, made personal salvation calls in 740 private houses and shops, held nine "cottage" meetings in Parisian "flats," seen five persons seek salvation in these cottage-meetings, sung the songs of Salvation in sixty courts, and sold 619 copies of our Salvation paper, En Avant, in the streets. In Switzerland 22 per cent. of our soldiers have become officers; in France, 11 per cent.

Dunkerque is a French North Sea port, in which we have just opened a station. Captain Chuard, a French officer, is in charge. Pray for blessing.

En Avant, our French weekly illustrated paper, is increasing its circulation slowly, but surely. We issued last year 728,500 copies. Keep your children's French up by ordering this Salvation messenger from Major R. G. Thonger, 187, Quai de Valmy, Paris; five shillings in English postage stamps is the yearly subscription.

Five halls were recently secured in German Switzerland in the following towns:—Soleure, Niederbipp, Feldmeilen, Oberutzwyl, and the university town of Winterthur. This is a real victory, for so great is the determination of the powers of darkness to boycott the Heilsarmée and block its progress, that on an average twenty halls a month have been refused to the scouts of Major Patrick. One Jew had been so impressed with the good accomplished by the Army in one town that he determined to help it come to his own town, and bought a house to let to us for meetings. The whole population rose against him, and his life was threatened; boycotting was prophesied, but, though he courageously refused to strike his colours to these menaces, he surrendered when the devil's agents changed tactics and laid some bank-notes on the table. From the lofty watch-towers of journalism signals keep rapidly flashing from city to city, warning the threatened Jerichos of the movements of our spies.

God's blessing is acting sweetly upon our beloved officers all over the field; they are getting to know Him better every day as "the Lord mighty in battle." United as the fingers of a hand, to use a French saying, they are strong to be, to do, and suffer for Him. Full salvation enjoyed as a personal experience puts them in possession of the same conditions of victory as Joshua's troops—(1) union in their personal state. holiness; (2) union in their object and work, the conquest of the country for God's glory. The best way to be united in work is to be united in state. Oil and water will not unite, but oil and oil will.

Der Kriegsruf is the name of our German paper for the north of Switzerland; we printed 81,000 last year, and many people have written, thankfully acknowledging that they have been brought to the knowledge of the Lord by its means. Captain Anna de Watteville having lost her way in Winterthur, was kindly led a short distance by a little woman, to whom in parting she gave a Kriegsruf. She read it, and was so convicted that she came by train to Zurich to our hall, and sought and found salvation.

Lyons is the second city of France, where, in our new hall in the revolutionary quarter, saved anarchists, drunkards, lost women, and formalists, are testifying to Jesus' power to deliver and to keep. In a solemn enrolment meeting lately eleven converts received the S.S. from Major Rabey, and one soul came to Jesus at the close. The latter officer writes that he is delighted beyond degree with the blessed work which is going on there.

Marseilles, the third city of France, is a city of 360,000 inhabitants: men of all nations throng its busy streets. Its gaily lit cafés of La Cannebière are densely crowded with people, who have godlessness in their every look, and word, and action. On January 1 we opened a hall in this city, in the ancient Rue de Rhone, and the work is now going forward prosperously, under the lead of two Frenchwomen, one a Parisian, converted in the Quai de Valmy hall.

Novels, as everyone knows, are the moral "meat and drink" of the youth of France. Every French daily has a serial novel running across the bottom of the columns of its every number. When a new novel comes out illustrated in large book form, the first four pages with a striking picture are given away for nothing in all the book-shops merely as a bait. Last year we started a series of striking Salvation tracts, got up in the same style, with two columns to the page. These have been so successful that we have printed during the year 142,000 of them in French and German. A Russian friend is having them translated into that language. 109,000 hymn-books were also published during the year, so great is the demand for them in our halls.

Orbe is a town in the Canton of Vaud, where we have a small hall, formerly a hen-house, and which was fitted up for us at the back of his house by the bookseller who, when we were dispossessed of our blacksmith's shop, determined that we should not be without some place to meet, but who for his kindness was nearly killed upon his own doorstep. That fowl-house has been the birthplace of many souls, of whom nine are now working as officers on the field—among others, the three brothers Thiébaud. Encouraging, is it not?

Progress in France and Switzerland has been steady, but not slow. During the last few years the work has increased, not merely in arithmetical, but in geometrical progression, doubling each year on the 2, 4, 8, 16, 32, 64 system. This is cheering when one thinks of all the peculiar difficulties and bitter opposition we have had to face. During the five years 237 native officers have been raised, trained, and sent to the war.

Quai de Valmy, Paris, is the address to which subscriptions to our funds can be sent, addressed to Mrs. Booth-Clibborn. Help is very pressingly required to sustain and extend such work as the above, done in the power of the blessed Spirit and on the lines of full surrender and full salvation; and to God be all the glory.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for May 10 (Isaiah xlvi. 4):—"And even to your old age I am He; and even to hoar hairs I will carry you: I have made, and I will bear; even I will carry, and will deliver you."

FUNDAMENTAL TRUTH.—A conference on the Fundamental Truths of the Gospel has been held in Hope Hall, Liverpool. Subjects similar to those treated at the recent meetings in London were ably dealt with by local ministers, and the time was by many felt to be one of great spiritual profit.

MANCHESTER WORKING LADS' ASSOCIATION.—Some account of this capital institution is given in a pamphlet recently issued, entitled "Fifteen Months' Work at the Hulme and Chorlton-on-Medlock Lads' Club and Gymnasium." Fourteen hundred lads have made use of the club, and many have been turned away on account of the space at disposal being limited. The experiment has demonstrated that even the roughest lads can be weaned from base attractions, and drawn to ennobling pursuits. Besides field and other games, the Association provides for the educational, social, and spiritual needs of the members. The general secretary is Mr. Alex. Devine, York-chambers, Brazenose-street, Manchester.

PROGRESS IN BASSIM.

Dear Sir,—We are having some encouragement in the work. There are signs that the Lord is working in the hearts of the people. An educated Hindu takes three Christian papers, and many of his friends read them. One man, a school teacher, said to our native evangelist, "Some things in one of those papers make me think in spite of myself." I find, too, that several are interested. We are encouraged to extend the work. Some Swedish friends in New York, U.S.A., support a native evangelist. Other Swedish friends have sent us a year's salary for another evangelist, whom we shall place in a new centre as soon as we get him.

Yesterday some money came from an American lady to start a village school. We have been praying for the means to start village schools, and the Lord is answering. All missionaries know the important part that Christian mission schools have in evangelising the heathen. We are praying and waiting for the Lord's leadings in the matter, and are glad to have the privilege of starting one school at least. W. A. Moore, Missionary.

Bassim, Berar, India, March 21.

A CONFERENCE ON REVIVALS.

A highly successful Conference on this subject took place in Stirling on Tuesday, last week. Mr. D. Keith Murray said, if they looked round the land, and more especially to the country districts, they would find that many of their churches were cold and lifeless. Many churches were without prayer-meetings; and without prayer it was utterly impossible for a church to be revived. An address on "Hindrances to Revivals" was delivered by Dr. Black, of Glasgow. Among these he emphasised the divisions at present existing in the churches. Christians should rise above party names and sectarian differences, and love all who love the name of Christ. Want of faith in the power of the Holy Spirit is another serious hindrance.

Rev. J. Stalker, of Glasgow, spoke on "The Secret and Source of Revival." The supreme source of revival is in God, though much can be done by human effort. Ours is a time of immense religious activity, and when efficiency is rewarded as it has never been before. Of the human sources of revival, prayer is the first, then God employs a revived man to revive others. The Conference was continued in the afternoon, and in the evening Rev. John M'Neill, of Edinburgh, conducted an evangelistic service. He said that if this century knew the gift of God, not the best hundred books, but the Book—if they knew that it was God in Christ come near to them, as near as He possibly could, salvation would take place in the case of thousands.

FRANCE.—In last week's paper mention was made the fact that the French Government had suppressed the Paris and Montauban Faculty of Theology. This was accomplished by the suppression of the budget of the Faculty; but, as it afterwards appeared that this could not be done to an institution that was still resting on a law, the budget was re-established. Suppression in due legal form next year will not come as a surprise upon the Faculty.

THE EX-KING OF SAMOA.—At the earnest request of Rev. Dr. Turner for many years missionary in Samoa, who has revised and edited several editions of the Bible in Samoan, the British and Foreign Bible Society have sent two copies of the Book (by different channels), in the hope that, at any rate, one of them may reach the ex-King Malietoa, who has been deported by the Germans from his own island to the Cameroons on the Bight of Biafra. The German Governor, Von Soden, seems kindly disposed to the exile.

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE IN SPAIN.—A telegram from Madrid says:—"A Catholic priest, the rector of one of the principal parishes in Malaga, published a violent pamphlet against Protestantism. To this a Protestant clergyman, Don José M. Vila, minister of the Reformed Spanish Church, replied in another pamphlet. Thereupon the Catholic priest immediately asked the Public Prosecutor to take proceedings against the Protestant pastor, on the ground that he had criticised and attacked the State religion. This is an offence which the existing penal code punishes severely. The Protestant clergyman was tried in the Criminal Court at Malaga. His counsel in vain cited the Eleventh Article of the Constitution, which says no Spaniard shall be molested for his religious belief. The Court condemned the accused to two years and four months' imprisonment, and to pay a fine of 250 pesetas and costs. The Protestant clergyman will appeal to the Supreme Court at Madrid."

NOW READY.

By the REV. J. A. WYLIE, LL.D.,
Author of "The History of Protestantism;" "The Papacy: its History, Dogmas, Genius, and Prospects," &c., &c.

WHICH SOVEREIGN:
QUEEN VICTORIA, or THE POPE?

ABRIDGED EDITION of 100,000 Copies. Price Threepence, or 2s. 8d. per Dozen.
Special Terms for Large Quantities, for Distribution, on Application.

This telling Treatise by the veteran Protestant writer, Dr. Wylie, could not have appeared more opportunely than in the present year (1888)—when we are about to commemorate the TER-CENTENARY, or the three-hundredth Anniversary, of the defeat of the attempted Invasion of our country by the Spanish Armada; and the BI-CENTENARY, or two-hundredth Anniversary, of the Accession in 1688 of the Protestant dynasty to the throne of the United Kingdom.

"This is an abridged edition, at a cheap price, of a very important work, which ought to, and does appeal to all sound Protestants to hold by the faith handed down to them by their fathers, and to combat against the pretensions and corruptions of the Papacy. The subject is treated in an able, thorough, and independent manner, with a spirit of investigation and a love of truth which is inestimable.'—Jarrow Express.

"The question here discussed is old, but ever new, and it is argued with all the author's well-known ability. There can be no manner of doubt, as the author remarks truly, that the wisdom of the 'Revolution Settlement' is attested by the instant leap taken upwards by our country. Long may such a state of matters continue, and long may men like Dr. Wylie stand on the watch-towers and 'tell of danger nigh,' so that we may be prepared for all emergencies. The getting up of the book is admirable, and reflects high credit on the enterprising firm by whom it is published."
Leeds Times.

"It is an undeniable fact that the stern opposition to Rome which animated our Protestant forefathers has given place to an easy indifference at the alarming progress of the Catholic Church. The greatest danger undoubtedly exists in the Church of England herself, and if she is to remain a Protestant Church she must very soon set about reforming herself on the principles of the Reformation. We commend this little work to all interest in the subject."—Stroud News and Gloucestershire Advertiser.

"Than Dr. Wylie there is not in the three kingdoms a more tried or learned apologist for the Protestant faith. Since the publication of his work, 'The Papacy,' he is ranked facile princeps as an expositor of the Popish question and controversy.

"The abridged edition is a handy little volume of 110 pages, neatly got up, and full of an admirably clear and complete digest of the claims, pretensions, and subtile workings of Popery. It is meant for, and is well suited for wide-spread circulation."
Hawick Advertiser.

THE LABOURER IN THE MIDST OF HIS WORK.
THE WORK GOING ON.
THE LABOURER CALLED ASIDE.
THE LABOURER IN THE SUNSET OF HIS SHORT DAY.
APPENDIX.

"From Messrs. Morgan & Scott we have a touching tribute to one who filled up a short life with bright and blessed service. The volume is entitled, 'JAMES SCOTT, a Labourer for God,' and is from the loving pen of Dr. Andrew Bonar. Mr. Scott was converted through the instrumentality of a devoted 'elder,' Mr. John Muir, of Glasgow, who visited him as a 'seat-holder,' and unfolded to him the way of life. A rich encouragement this to the 'elders of the church' to use their office well! Who shall tell how many James Scotts are just ripe for such influence as theirs?"
British Messenger.

Neatly printed in Red and Black. Suitable for enclosing in the ordinary square envelope, 1s. per dozen, or 7s. per hundred, post free.

"It was a dark page in my experience, when first I knelt at the feet of a mortal to confess what should have been poured into the ear of God alone. I cannot dwell upon this; but a brief time before it would have for ever put to rest my longings after Romanism. Though I believe my confessor was, on the whole, as guarded as his manner was kind, at some things I was strangely startled, utterly confounded."—Extract.

About a year and a half ago MISS MARGARET BAXTER, of 1, Adeline Terrace, Beckenham, was brought to Coombe Lodge by her mother on the recommendation of a lady friend. Consumption had been in the family. The young patient had been affected for two years, first of all with a bad cough and weakness, for which she was taken to the Victoria Children's Hospital, and afterwards to Margate Infirmary, without benefit. Lately she had been spitting blood.

At this time the cough was very bad, with much yellow expectoration, frequently tinged with blood. There were pains in the left side, breathing short, very irregular action of the bowels, loss of flesh, &c. Examined by Dr. B——. Report: "Phthisis, second stage, especially marked in upper lobe of right lung."

Examined again two months after commencing my treatment: "Less signs of active mischief. Cough easier, no blood, condition of the bowels corrected."

After this, letters spoke of her as "a little better, improving gradually," "better and stronger," "I am grateful for your kindness, my dear daughter is very much better," &c., &c.,

In November last, Mrs. Baxter writes me: "I write to thank you for what your medicines have done for my little girl. She was very bad when she first came to you. Your Balsam is most valuable. You are at liberty to publish this."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

JOHN AND HIS PIGEONS.

Poor John was given up for lost by well-nigh everybody. Even his mother had long since ceased to try and influence him for good. As for his wife, she had learnt to dread his footstep as she would that of a madman. And yet he once was kind; but that was in the long ago, which had become a mere memory of the past. The demon drink had made him brutal, both to wife and children. About the only things he seemed to care for were his two dogs and his prize pigeons.

Such was John's condition when a revival broke out in the Staffordshire village where he lived. Amongst the first to be won for Christ were John's father, mother, and wife. As may be imagined, these lost no time in seeking to bring John into the same happy condition as they, through grace, now enjoyed. Cottage prayer-meetings were frequently held in their humble home; and earnest prayers, watered with tears, were sent up to the throne of grace on John's behalf. For many months these seemed of no avail; for when Sunday morning dawned, instead of going to the house of God, John would take his dogs and pigeons, and join a godless, blaspheming company of men, who spent the sacred day in gross and glaring sin. He had never been to the mission services but once; then the preacher had told him that there was no salvation for him until he parted with his dogs and pigeons, and came out from amongst the ungodly. John answered, with an awful oath, "Then I'll go to hell, for I will never part with my pigeons or dogs to please anybody."

It was shortly after this occurrence that I first heard of John, on visiting his family. Very soon I got on speaking terms with John. To his utter astonishment I patted his dogs and admired his pigeons, and listened with interest to all he had to say about them. Consequently John heard all I had to say about the Gospel. Ultimately I induced him to come to the mission and hear me tell the story of my life. Towards the close of my remarks I said many young men were kept away from Christ because they believed that being converted would involve giving up all they liked best, and attending Bible-classes and prayer-meetings. I went on to say that since my conversion God had not forced me to give up anything, neither had He forced me to do anything, but that I did know by happy experience what it was to hate the things I once loved, and love the things I once hated.

At the close, I was delighted to find that John remained to the prayer-meeting. I pressed on him the great importance of accepting Christ without delay. Poor fellow! he was quite broken down. He felt himself a sinner; but he said, "I can never give up my pigeons." I handed him my Bible, and said, "John, show me where God says anything either about your pigeons or dogs. It is yourself whom God wants." By and by his aged mother and father and his wife knelt by his side, weeping and pleading and praying in turns. Just as the clock struck eleven, John sobbed out a verse he had learned when a lad at the Sabbath school:—

> Nay, but I yield—I yield,
> I can hold out no more;
> I sink, by dying love compelled
> To own Thee conqueror.

Night by night found him in the meetings, at peace with God; yet not so happy as others who had been converted. Truth to tell there was a struggle going on within about his dogs. Towards the end of the week he met me with a face beaming with joy and said, with a smile, "Ah, you knew what you were about when you spoke to me." I asked what he meant. "Well," says he, "I should never have been saved if you had told me that I should first have to give up my pigeons and dogs; but, after I was saved, I went straight home, and looked at the pigeons and said, 'You'll have to go,' for I knew while I kept them I should have to be a companion of pigeon-flyers. But I kept my dogs four days; it seemed hard to part with them, and I never could have done it if my heart had not been changed. On the fifth day I got rid of them, too. And now I feel so happy. I never dreamt that religion was anything like this."

From that day to this John has been a joy to his parents, his wife, and children, and a humble worker for Christ amongst working men. But you could never induce him to ask a man to give up pigeons or dogs. He always says, "No; get him to give himself to Christ; then Christ's love will constrain him to do the rest." And so it is, I believe. I have known men who have signed the temperance pledge over and over again, but have never been able to keep it till they were converted and had Christ "to walk the paths of danger by their side." I have known others who had a passion for theatres and music-halls; but who, as soon as they had come to Christ, felt an awful loathing towards these and similar places. "For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit. For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God." To try to induce a man to give up evil before his heart is changed is like putting a worthless watch right by moving the hands. The works of the watch must be attended to; so the heart of the sinner must be changed. "Ye must be born again."

A GLANCE AT SINGAPORE.

Every ship that comes here brings opium; and so many are the licensed houses for its sale, and that also of strong spirits, that in one short drive through part of the town on our way back to the ship, I counted (on one side of the roadway) no less than fifteen! Little, low, wretched-looking dens with—outside each one—the same evil sign on a black board, in Chinese character on one side, and English letters on the other, "Licensed to sell spirits," or "Licensed to sell opium."

The horrible Acts are in force here, and each unfortunate brought under their sway is obliged to pay one dollar monthly to the [British] Government! One of the missionaries here told me that, morally, Singapore is a very hell! Numbers of poor Japanese girls and Chinese and Russian are brought, under false pretences, with the awful circumstances from which they can find no way of escape. And our Government not only licenses these houses of infamy, but actually makes direct gain from the degradation of these souls and bodies! "O Lord! how long?"

Terrible as the Acts are, they are yet here some protection, for now the poor victims of this awful system cannot be put out of existence without being missed, as so usually they were in the past. Earnest evangelists are indeed needed here, to reach the Europeans, as well as to travel up and down the coast amongst the Malays and Chinese. Though living is rather expensive, I am told that such men could well manage on £100 a year, or, if married, on £150. It would not be easy for a man to be self-supporting, though an opportunity of doing something towards it might offer in teaching.

Sea Shells.—Miss Edith Binsteed, 60, Shooter's Hill-road, Blackheath, S.E., asks for small shells, suitable for filling match boxes. They are a great delight to London children who have never seen the sea.

Ragged School, Amlwch, Anglesea.—Mr. Richard Morgan writes on behalf of this school, asking for help. He says: "Much blessing has resulted from our exertions for the poor children of this small seaport town, but the expenses are very heavy."

Letters to the Editor.

"BAPTIZED, THOUGH NOT A BAPTIST."

Dear Sir,—I have read "M.D.'s" letter in your last issue, and cannot understand why he should go to a Baptist for baptism. Surely if he had doubt, because of infancy or the mode of administering, as to the validity of his baptism, his own parish clergyman would have baptized him with the hypothetical form provided in the Prayer-book.

I always contend that we and the Baptists are at one on this subject, with an exception. We both hold "believers'" baptism, i.e., we both baptize only those who profess their faith in Christ. We both hold that those who are baptized, having declared their faith, are regenerated. Why Baptists should charge Churchmen with holding Baptismal Regeneration (a doctrine which I abhor), I cannot understand.

But in the case of infants we allow the profession of faith to be made by older believers for them, making provision that that profession shall not be held to be valid, if it is not, in their maturer years, upheld and openly declared by themselves.

I am, yours faithfully, Vicar.

THE S. A. AND BAPTISM.

Dear Sir,—In the conversation between your representative and Commissioner Tucker, contained in your issue of yesterday, there is no mention made of baptism, and some of the secular papers report that the Salvation Army do not baptize their native converts. I trust this is incorrect, for I could not place any confidence in the profession of Christianity not sealed by baptism. I was forty years in India, and a zealous supporter of all Protestant mission societies, and can speak with confidence as to the absolute necessity of testing the profession of Christianity by requiring baptism.
—Yours, An Old General Officer.
Greystones.

[We are strongly impressed with the importance of Baptism as the Lord's own command, for which we have no right to substitute anything else; but it may be observed that the profession of the S.A. converts is so openly made, and identification with it so manifest, that so far as separation from heathenism and profession of Christianity are concerned, the effect is probably as complete as if they were baptized. We should be glad of information as to this.—Ed.]

THE C.M.S. AND ST. PAUL'S.

Sir,—As your paper circulates in the foreign missionary field, I do not like to let your note, referring to the Church Missionary Society, pass by unnoticed.

A simple Protestant service in connection with the C.M.S. was held in St. Paul's Cathedral three or four days after the unveiling of the Reredos. You say that thereby the Committee of that Society acquiesced in the error taught by the Madonna. How so? Does the Bible Society, which your paper tells me holds its annual service in that Cathedral on Tuesday next, acquiesce in the error? Am I to be charged with approving of theatres because I now and then preach in one with all the stage scenery at my back? If I give a Gospel temperance address in a schoolroom that is the property of the Unitarian body, do I thereby acquiesce in the doctrine of the same?

Highbury, April 28.

[Does our esteemed correspondent think the cases are quite parallel?—Ed.]

THE BAPTISMAL QUESTION.

Dear Sir,—I think with "M. D.," that you have laid your finger on the solution of this question at present troubling the consciences of many children of God. Many Baptist ministers have, unwarrantably, it seems to me, looked upon this sacred rite not simply as a profession of faith, upon which the disciple is to be baptized into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, but as the entrance door into the particular church over which the administrator presides—a sequence which some intelligent Christians have been unable to accept.

The consciences of faithful Christians will be satisfied with nothing less than implicit obedience to the explicit commands of Him whom they call Lord and Master, but they must move in the matter themselves. The ministers of the various denominations are so hampered by the circumstances in which they are placed that they cannot, convinced although many of them are. But why, as you suggest, "should not those who wish be baptized as believers, and still retain their special views in matters of church order, remaining in the church with which they have been previously identified? "

There are a number of Baptist ministers already liberal-minded enough to recognise this. In this city I have known of several instances where Dr. Landels has not hesitated to act in the same manner as Mr. Spurgeon, baptizing Christians belonging to other denominations, aiding them thus to take one step at a time as they have been taught of God.—
Yours faithfully, H. M'INTOSH.

The Love of God.

A SOUTH WINDOW; or, "Keep Yourselves in the Love of God." By G. F. Pentecost, D.D. This is a beautiful little book, having for its object the setting forth of the glad tidings of the love and favour of God. The author well says: "There is no lesson more difficult for the Christian to learn than that of 'salvation by grace.' We, through grace, 'begin in the Spirit,' and then, unless we are careful to know the mind and heart of God towards us, we seek to 'make perfect by the flesh.' Nothing but 'grace—free, unbounded grace'—will suffice for our need. That grace of God hath now appeared ,bringing salvation to all men, being poured out upon us abundantly by Jesus Christ (Titus ii. 11—14). It is our unspeakable privilege to live in it, and to walk in 'and know the love of God, which passeth knowledge.' We cannot be presumptuous in sitting, standing, walking, working, and living in the 'south window of his love.'" (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton).

Three Books on Missions.

PROTESTANT MISSIONS IN PAGAN LANDS. By Rev. E. Storrow, Brighton. 3s. 6d. J. Snow & Co. Since Professor Christlieb's well-known book we have not seen so much missionary information well conveyed in a moderate compass. Mr. Storrow writes from a catholic point of view, drawing the line, quite rightly in our opinion, at Protestant efforts in heathen lands. After dealing in a spiritual and masterly way with the right roots of all missionary operations, the author traces their widespread branches and gracious fruit in all parts of the world. In chap. xi., "The Sources and Cultivation of the Missionary Spirit," missionary workers will find many useful hints, while several useful tables, some new, some familiar, complete this most serviceable volume.

ARE FOREIGN MISSIONS DOING ANY GOOD? Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. These fifty pages form a brief for Missions that every deputation and missionary agent ought to master. Leaving purposely untouched the spiritual effects of modern missionary effort, the writer quotes Government Blue-books, secular papers, leading reviews, eminent statesmen from Lord Palmerston to Lord Dufferin and Sir B. Frere, on the social effects of Protestant missions. The answer given to the question heading the pamphlet is splendidly unanimous, and couched in no half-hearted language. The writer ask sceptics: (1) To look at the social condition of countries long Christianised; (2) to heed the verdicts of independent travellers to the scenes of missionary work; lastly, to compare Africa, Japan, Fiji, not with long Christianised regions, but with their social condition thirty or fifty years ago. Unnecessary as the opening question seems to all who are not ignorant or prejudiced, it is still asked by many, and a more triumphant answer we can hardly imagine. Let all missionary workers order a copy.

Popular Hymns.

A HUNDRED HYMNS. Last year the readers of The Sunday at Home were invited to send in lists of the hundred English hymns which stood highest in their esteem. Between three and four thousand responded, and in these pages we have the hundred which received the majority of votes. The list is, indeed, a grand one, and, as the hymns are generally presented in their original form, and accompanied by a brief account of their authorship and origin, —including portraits of the chief writers—this is undoubtedly a pamphlet which many persons will read with pleasure and profit again and again. (Religious Tract Society. 2d.)

The Book of Esther.

AN EXPLANATORY COMMENTARY ON ESTHER. By Professor Paulus Cassel, D.D. Translated from the German by Rev. Aaron Bernstein, B.D. This, the 34th volume of Clark's Foreign Theological Library, is a work of great erudition and sterling value. The object is to expound the Book on grammatico-historical lines, and not to indicate in detail the many moral and religious lessons that may be learned from the stirring events of Esther's day. The author holds that, while this remarkable Book affords a picture of Persian court life, such as is nowhere else to be found, its main, indeed its sole purpose, is to record the wonderful interpositions of Providence for the deliverance of the Jewish people from what appeared to be certain destruction. The Book is tersely described as a memoir, written by a Jew, for the information of all his people scattered in the extensive countries of Persia. Among some valuable appendices is a translation, with notes, of the Second Targum on Esther — a Jewish expository paraphrase dating from the sixth century of the present era. (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark.)

The Expositor's Bible.

TWO more volumes of "The Expositor's Bible" have recently been published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton—namely, THE BOOKS OF SAMUEL. They are certainly very useful works, serving to open up important parts of Holy Writ in a remarkably lucid manner. Both are from the pen of Rev. Prof. W. G. Blaikie, D.D., of New College, Edinburgh. The first book is dealt with in thirty-six lectures, and the second book in thirty-three. The style is easy and vigorous, history and exegesis being helpfully blended with New Testament illustration and much practical Christian teaching. The lives and times of Samuel, Saul, Jonathan, and David, are in these volumes portrayed with great clearness, the many lessons of the books being beautifully indicated and applied. These expositions will be as welcome to students as they will be serviceable to plain English readers. Dr. Blaikie has ever a word in season of warning and exhortation, of counsel and consolation, for old and young alike in all positions and relations of life. The outstanding events of Israelitish history and the smaller incidents of the lives of the men of old, are here exhibited in such a way that the books of Samuel are shown to be eminently "profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness."

Unsystematic Theology.

OLD AND NEW TESTAMENT THEOLOGY. By Heinrich Ewald. Translated from the German by Rev. T. Goadby, B.A. New volume of Clark's "Foreign Theological Library." T. & T. Clark. Ewald was a voluminous writer, and this book is made up of selections from the latest of his many works. At times philosophical and mystical, Ewald was ever stronger at analysis than at synthesis, and he is rightly classed as belonging to the semi-rationalist school of Biblical expositors. He cultivated what has come to be known as the "historical sense," at the expense of the important faculty whereby, with his great learning, he might have forcibly presented Scripture teaching in its actual character and due proportion. Unfortunately for modern religious thought, Ewald's originality was, to a large degree, destructive; even the more sound of his critical writings show little or no desire to exhibit Biblical theology in anything like a systematic form. This book contains the well-known scholar's maturest impressions and convictions on many themes of great present interest, and many will peruse it with pleasure and profit. An acquaintance with German theological literature is almost a pre-requisite to a profitable reading of the book. Moreover, students who would use Ewald's learned work to the best advantage need carefully to discriminate between human speculation and Divine truth. The translator has added some useful explanatory notes.

Science and the Gospel.

NATURAL LAW AND GOSPEL TEACHINGS. By Herbert W. Morris, D.D. 1s. These pages are devoted to a consideration of present-day attacks upon the Christian faith. The sections dealing with providence, prayer, and the hope of resurrection to a better life are specially attractive and very useful. This book presents facts which go a long way towards enabling Christians to give a scientific as well as a scriptural reason for the hope that is in them. In publishing such works the Religious Tract Society does a conspicuous service to the Church of Christ.

A Book on Holiness.

HOLY IN CHRIST. By Rev. A. Murray. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. Books and tracts on holiness abound in our day. Books teaching Scriptural holiness are by no means common. Some teach little more than religious activity; others are full of fancies and errors. One sentence from Mr. Murray's book must serve as a specimen of its truth and spirituality: "Lowliness is taking the place that becomes me; holiness is giving God the place that becomes Him. If I be nothing before Him, and God be all to me, I am in the sure path of holiness. Lowliness is holiness, because it gives all the glory to God." "Never imagine that you attain a state in which self or the flesh is absolutely dead." For each day of the month Mr. Murray give precious meditations on holiness, and in all he points to Jesus as the Source, and the Spirit as the Imparter of Divine holiness to believers.

Christian Evidences.

UNITY OF FAITH A PROOF OF THE DIVINE ORIGIN AND PRESERVATION OF CHRISTIANITY. 4d. Rev. Dr. Stoughton is the author of this, the fifty-seventh number of the excellent series of "Present-Day Tracts" (Religious Tract Society). The argument, in brief, is that without allowing that the Divine Hand laid the corner-stones, and the Divine Spirit preserves the edifice, there is no accounting for the large measure of unity of faith which, as represented in creeds, biography, and hymns, has from the first existed among Christian people in general.

THE BRITISH SOLDIER IN INDIA. 6d. Marshall Bros. A very readable little book, closing with an appeal for Scripture-readers for British soldiers in India.

No. 55 of "The New Biographical Series" (Religious Trast Society) is devoted to Ulrich Zwingli, the Swiss Reformer. The very interesting sketch is from the pen of Rev. Dr. Salmond.

THE A.B.C. (LONDON AND SUBURBAN) CHURCH AND CHAPEL DIRECTORY. (2d. Banks & Son.) This annual publication has made its twenty-seventh appearance. It is a very useful hand-book of information with respect to matters ecclesiastical.

SELECTIONS FROM THE BOOKS OF EZRA AND NEHEMIAH (ANNOTATED). Edited by Rev. H. M. Clifford, M.A. 1s. Oxford University Press. We welcome another volume of this excellent and convenient series. It contains two first-rate maps of Canaan and the lands of the Captivity, besides several useful tables, e.g., texts referred to, and places and persons referred to in these two Books, chronological tables, and short articles on the customs of the Jews in captivity, are affixed. The notes placed parallel with the text are not only good from a critical point of view, but bring out the spiritual teaching with fulness and force.

Y.M.C.A. Bible Lessons.

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, May 13.

THE CENTURION.—LUKE vii. 1—10.

THE weighty words of Jesus found a fitting sequel n his mighty works. Note the happy transition from "his sayings in the audience of the people" (ver. 1) to the narrative of healing that follows t. A centurion was a captain, having authority over a hundred soldiers. Something good is said of each of the persons of this class mentioned in the New Testament. One of these was devout, and feared God (Acts x. 1, 2); another showed courtesy to a servant of God (Acts xxvii. 3); and another said of Jesus, "Truly, this was the Son of God" (Matt. xxvii. 54). Note, concerning the centurion, whose case we are to consider:—

(1) HIS REGARD FOR HIS SERVANT (ver. 2), "dear."—The way in which men use power reveals character. Regard for servants was enforced by the law (Exod. xx. 17), and is so no less by the Gospel (Col. iv. 1).

(2) HIS GOOD REPUTE.—Jews had but little regard for the Romans, but for this man they had much regard ("he is worthy"). See how integrity and uprightness command respect and goodwill. The friendship of the Jews was not a mere sentiment; it was practical. They went to Jesus in his behalf (1 John iii. 18).

(3) HIS REGARD FOR ISRAEL.—"Loveth our nation." Gentile, though he was, He found a place in his heart for Israel (Ps. cxxii. 6). See love taking a practical form here ("built us a synagogue"). Comp. the goodwill of Cyrus (Ezra . 3) The Roman soldier did more than some who were of Israel (Hag. i. 4, 5). The last in privilege are sometimes first in loving service.

(4) HIS HUMILITY.—Friends said, "He was worthy." He said, "Not worthy." Comp. confession of Jacob (Gen. xxxii. 10), and of John the Baptist (Matt. xi. 11). Humility is beautiful anywhere, but especially in high places. Comp. "thy king...lowly" (Zech. ix. 9). Not worthy to be host or guest. Jesus is willing to be the guest of any who will receive Him (Rev. iii. 20), and the host of those who will come to Him (John vi. 37).

(5) HIS FAITH.—This faith "came by hearing" (ver. 3; comp. Rom. x. 17); was revealed in the request sent to Jesus. (Large faith asks for large blessings. See Paul's prayer, Eph. iii. 17—19); was not dependent upon sight (he had not seen Jesus; Comp. John xx. 29); and realised the power of the word of Christ. (See how much Jesus accomplished by one word, Mark vii. 34). The centurion regarded the forces of Nature as being as much under the control of Christ as the soldiers were under him. We may marvel that there should have been faith in such a person (comp. Heb. xi. 31) in the midst of such surroundings, and of such a character. We need not marvel that it was what it was, if we remember that God wrought it.

(6) HIS REWARD.—Note that (a) His servant was healed. (Comp. Heb. xi. 23; Mark vii. 29, and Tim. i. 5.) (b) His faith was extolled. The works of a Samaritan were better than those of priests and Levites (Luke x. 36, 37), and the faith of a Gentile exceeds that of the chosen people of God (Matt. viii. 11).

REV. DENNIS OSBORNE and family, from Mussoorie, India, recently passed through London on their way to America. He goes at the call of the Missionary Society to arouse the churches as to the pressing needs of Indian mission work.

JEWS AT CHURCH.—On Sunday week Rev. M. Wolkenberg preached at Christ Church, Leicester, on "God's Testimony in the History of the Jewish People." The vicar of the parish, Rev. A. A. Isaacs, had previously issued a circular invitation to the Jews, informing them that such a service would be held, and that the sermon was designed to instruct both Jews and Christians. As a result of the invitation, it was the pleasure of the Vicar and Mr. Wolkenberg to see about a hundred Jews in the crowded audience. At the close of the service two representative Jews thanked the preacher for his discourse, one of them saying, "If such sermons were preached all over the country much of the misunderstanding now prevailing between Jews and Christians would vanish, and, with the removal of prejudices, more kindly feelings of one another would be entertained on both sides."

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, May 13.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

MATT. xxvi. 17—30. Golden Text: Cor. v. 7.

Feast of unleavened bread.—Passover so called because everything leavened was to be excluded from the house during the seven days of the feast. Leaven signifies evil, because fermentation, or leavening, is a species of putrefaction. This putting away of leaven, the symbol of evil, reminded the Jews of the holiness that became God's redeemed. It teaches us that we must part with sin if we would enjoy Christ.

I will keep the Passover at thy house.—Though Jesus commands as a King, He knows the boon will be given gladly. The owner's name is not given, but it is known in heaven. How wonderfully he was rewarded for his hospitality. Here, in his house, Jesus took his last rest, and ate his last meal. This was the first house visited after He rose again. Here the apostles met and prayed. We never do so well for ourselves as when we give to Jesus Christ. This man gave a room only; how much better if we give Him the room He loves best—the heart!

He sat down with the twelve.—Matthew omits to tell of the strife which arose among them as they came to take their places at table (Luke xxii. 24—30), also of the lesson in humility given by Jesus when He washed their feet (John xiii. 4—11).

One of you shall betray Me.—John says, He was "troubled in spirit." The emphasis must be laid on the "one of you." Teachers will do well here to point out, and to execrate the sins of ingratitude and unfaithfulness to a trusting friend. Nothing cuts the heart like this, and nothing so shameful. Point out what Jesus had done for Judas, and had been to Him through these last three years. First, he betrays Him! For what? Thirty pieces of silver, which He can never use. There is no fool like the sinner, and no sinner like him who betrays his Master.

Lord, Is it I?—It speaks well for them that each turned upon Himself, and not on his neighbour—there is a beautiful touch of humility here. The question anticipated a negative answer, and = It is not I, is it? No one seems to have suspected Judas.

He that dippeth his hand with Me, &c.—I.e., the betrayer is even one of you, now about to eat with Me. To an Eastern mind this eating together made the betrayal peculiarly horrible. The dish of vinegar, dates, figs, and spice stood in the centre of the table. Into this each dipped his bread and meat and herbs, and this dipping of the food in the one dish was a solemn symbol of friendship.

It had been good for that man if he had not been born.—Does not this show incidentally, and therefore more powerfully, that there will be no restitution for the traitor. His doom is final; for if there were eternal glory beyond the doom, this sentence could not have been spoken.

Judas...said, Master, is it I?—He spoke, lest his silence should betray him. Thou hast said.—"Thou hast named him." It is probable that while John reclined on the one side of Jesus, Judas reclined at the other, so that this answer would be heard by Judas only, just as the answer given to John (John xiii. 23—26) was whispered to him alone. By this talk, Jesus warned Judas that his treachery was known. How wonderful Christ's forbearance and gentle patience towards Judas! How fearful the condition of a man who is possessed by some great purpose of evil!

As they were eating, Jesus took bread, &c.—It seems probable that the eating of the Passover lamb was now over. Custom had now prolonged the feast. Also, a comparison of Mark xiv. 20, 21, Matt. xxvi. 24, 25, and John xiii. 30 makes it probable that the presence of Judas, connected by Luke with the Lord's Supper (Luke xxii. 15—21), is really to be associated with the Passover meal, and that he had now gone out to do his awful work. This is my body.—Make very clear to the children that this is only another of the many strong figures of speech used in the Bible, which were so natural to Orientals. When our Lord spoke thus his body was still unbroken, and his blood unshed; so it was impossible for the disciples to believe that they ate the real body and drank the real blood of of Christ.

Again, after He had blessed the cup, He calls it "the fruit of the vine." So it was wine still. Similar figures.—"The seven good kine are seven years" (Gen. xli. 26); "God is a sun" (Ps. xxxiv. 11); "For this Agar is Mount Sinai in Arabia" (Gal. iv. 25); "That Rock was Christ (1 Cor. x. 1); "I am the door"; "I am the vine," &c. This is my blood.—The emblem of his blood, and so of life given for others. Testament, better covenant.—The covenant is that God will receive and save everyone who really trusts and obeys Jesus Christ.

This is the new covenant, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." For the remission of sins.—Show clearly how Christ must die if man is to be forgiven. God must be just as well as loving, so sin must be punished; if not in Christ, who stands in our stead, then in us, the sinners. Show that Christ, the sin-bearer and substitute, is God's gift of love, given in order that "He might be just, and yet the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission to be conducted by Miss L. Smith and Miss Bax, at the Baptist Church, Camberwell.—For blessing on special services in the Old Welcome, Cross Key-square, E.C., May 8 and 14, by Dr McKilliam, Mr. Spencer, and Miss Doswell.

OUR OPIUM TRADE WITH CHINA.—On April 25, Rev. Goodeve Mabbs addressed the congregation of Clifton Down Chapel, Bristol. Rev. P. W. Dainton, B.A., presided. On the 26th, Mr. Mabbs delivered a lecture at the Y.M.C.A., Birmingham, on "Our Opium Trade as it is, and our Duty with regard to it." Councillor F. C. Clayton presided.

FOREST GATE Y.M.C.A.—It is hoped that this Association has a career of much usefulness before it. The first annual report contains many cheering facts, and the number of members, associates, and hon. members is set forth as over a hundred. General Sir R. Phayre presided over the annual meeting, held a few days ago, at which several friends delivered addresses. Mr. A. Strangman is the hon. secretary.

ST. BRIDE'S YOUTHS' INSTITUTE.—The sixth annual report of this Institute, situate in Shoe-lane, Fleet-street, E.C., and connected with the London Working Lads' Institutes, states that there are now 200 members on the books. The various agencies are being successfully worked, with results that greatly cheer those who have the management of the institution. Mr. Henry Hill is the honorary superintendent.

MOUNT HERMON GIRLS' ORPHAN HOMES.—These institutions, in Cambridge-road, Kilburn, and Mill-lane, West Hampstead, were founded by the late Miss Mary Ann Cole, and have, since 1864, been instrumental of much good. Destitute orphan girls, between five and twelve years of age, are received without voting, and are carefully brought up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." The twenty-fourth annual report shows that during 1887, nineteen new cases were received. All communications respecting the Homes should be addressed to Mrs. Parry, Mount Hermon, 55, Cambridge-road, Kilburn, N.W.

LONDON CABMEN'S MISSION.—The seventeenth year's work has just been entered upon by Mr. John Dupée, the minister and superintendent. While the Gospel is presented to the cabmen and their friends, due regard is also paid to the temptations and difficulties peculiar to a cabman's life; so while the Saviour's love is proclaimed, the claims of temperance are constantly put forward. Every night in the week, and during the whole of Sunday, meetings of one kind or another are being held in the Mission Hall, King's Cross. Blessing has attended the efforts put forth in the Sunday-school, and good has come of the sale of Bibles and Testaments on the cab-ranks. Every day there is a prayer meeting in the hall between the hours of one and two, and visitors are always welcome.

RAILWAY OFFICIALS IN FRANCE.—Two years ago, while passing through the Cevennes, I distributed some Gospels among this class, and was much encouraged by the eagerness with which they were received. I have returned from the same locality; and having received from the Trinitarian Bible Society 500 New Testaments for free distribution, I had the pleasure of placing copies in the hands of the men employed at nearly all the stations from Marseilles to Paris. I was greatly pleased at one station to meet a porter who, with beaming face, declared his love to Christ; he rejoiced to see his fellow-officials becoming possessed of such a treasure as the Word of God.

June 27, 28, 29.

Beloved Christian Friends,—It is again our privilege, in the good providence of God, to invite you to the Mildmay Conference. And in so doing we cannot forget that one, who has been associated with us in the issue of this annual call to praise and prayer ever since the beloved founder of the Conference was taken from us, has also now left our side. Our loved and honoured friend, Lord Cavan, who so enjoyed the hallowed gatherings, whose voice was often heard there, and whose ripe Christian experience was of such value to us all, has been called to the still more blessed gathering on high. We thank God for him who has "departed this life in His faith and fear," and, as our thoughts follow him into the Master's glorious presence above, we desire to resume with increased earnestness the work we were permitted to share with him here.

The need for coming together for mutual counsel and encouragement seems to increase as the days pass. The world moves more rapidly; the purposes of God unfold more clearly; the great enemy of souls is more busy than ever; should not then the servants of the Most High draw more closer to the centre and thus to each other—"so much the more, as (we) see the day approaching"?

There is an evidently growing desire for unity among the people of God, a more earnest longing for increased conformity to the image of Christ—a keener apprehension of responsibility as his witnesses to the world around. Perhaps the two most striking features of Christian life at the present time may be said to be the yearning for a more thorough consecration to God, and the movement of the missionary spirit in the hearts of many of his children.

We think then that our Conference will be in harmony with these spiritual impulses, if we propose as the main subject for consideration that of Progress—progress in the inner life of the soul, and progress in the great work which the Lord has committed to his Church. And we believe that if He is pleased to bless us as we come together to praise and pray, to speak and hear of the things concerning the kingdom of God, in its inward growth and outward extension, we shall find that our communion thereon will be a means of rich refreshment to our own souls, and afford a glorious stimulus to renewed dedication to his service.

You will see from the passages from the Word of God which we have named as appropriate to each division of the subject the manner in which, as it seems to us, it may be helpful to consider it; and we propose that both aspects of the division appointed for each day shall be taken up at the different meetings, so that those intending may enjoy the advantage of having the two sides of the same truth, its inward application, and its outward manifestation, equally presented.

But oh! beloved friends, let us above all things remember that it is the power of the Holy Ghost alone that can make our Conference truly profitable; that can cause it to be for the edification of those who attend it, and for the glory of God. We earnestly ask you to pray that we may be prepared to receive a large measure of blessing, that we may come together to wait "only upon God," desiring in all sincerity to learn what He may be pleased to teach us, and to be made what He would have us to be.

Our needs are indeed great; the needs of the world around us are vast; but his resources are infinite; and we have the blessed assurance that He will "supply all (our) need, according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." He has said, "Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it;" and we are persuaded that if we "prove" Him by the unconditional surrender of all, He will fulfil his promise, and "open the windows of heaven, and pour (us) out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."—In this hope, we remain, beloved friends, your affectionate fellow-servants,

S. A. Blackwood. A. R. Pennefather.
James E. Mathieson. J. Herbert Tritton.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 27, 1888.

Progress—The Law of the Kingdom.

I.—In Life.

Grow in grace. Be no more children. Grow up into Him in all things. They shall mount up. Still upward—still upward—still upward. From strength to strength. From glory to glory. More and more unto the perfect day. Conformed to the image of his Son. Like Him.—2 Pet. iii. 18; Eph. iv. 14, 15; Isa. xl. 31.; Ezek. xli. 7; Ps. lxxxiv. 7; 2 Cor. iii. 18; Prov. iv. 18; Rom. viii. 29; 1 John iii. 2.

II.—In Labour.

Divide for an inheritance the land. Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you. And the man waxed great, and went forward, and received in the same year an hundred-fold; and the Lord blessed him. So built we the wall. So we laboured. So the wall was finished. Preach the Gospel to every creature. Always abounding in the work of the Lord.—Josh. i. 6, 3; Gen. xxvi. 13, 12; Neh. iv. 6, 21; Neh. vi. 15; Mark xvi. 15; 1 Cor. xv. 58.

THURSDAY, JUNE 28, 1888.

Hindrances to Progress.

I.—In Walk.

He lingered. His wife looked back. He saw that rest was good. At ease from his youth—settled on his lees. A little sleep. A little slumber. A lion in the way. His heart was not perfect. He pitched his tent before the city. Is there any secret thing with Thee? Thou restrainest prayer.—Gen. xix. 16, 26, xlix. 15; Jer. xlviii. 11; Prov. xxiv. 33, xxvi. 13; 1 Kings. xi. 4; Gen. xxxiii. 18; Job xv. 11, 4.

II.—In Work.

Strength decayed. Much rubbish. Hands hang down. Feeble knees. The wind was contrary unto them. We sailed slowly, the wind not suffering us. Being armed, they turned back. He went not with them to the work. Slack to possess the land. Cannot see afar off.—Neh. iv. 10; Heb. xii. 12; Mark vi. 48; Acts xxvii. 7; Ps. lxxviii. 9; Acts xv. 38; Josh. xviii. 3; 2 Pet. i. 9.

FRIDAY, JUNE 29, 1888.

Helps to Progress.

I.—In Sanctification.

Laying aside every weight. They lightened the ship. Be filled with the Spirit. Looking unto Jesus. Beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord. The sincere milk of the Word. Holding the Head. By joints and bands having nourishment ministered. Let us go on. Let us cleanse ourselves.—Heb. xii. 1; Acts xxvii. 18; Eph. v. 18; Heb. xii. 2; 2 Cor. iii. 18; 1 Pet. ii. 2; Col. ii. 19; Heb. vi. 1; 2 Cor. vii. 1.

II.—In Service.

Zeal as a cloke. A live coal—from off the altar. Loins girt about with truth. Feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace. The love of Christ constraineth us. Moved with compassion. The voice of his Word. Exceeding great and precious promises. That blessed hope. Isa. lix. 17; Isa. vi. 6; Eph. vi. 14, 15; 2 Cor. v. 14; Matt. ix. 36; Ps. ciii. 20; 2 Pet. i. 4; Titus ii. 13.

GENERAL ARRANGEMENTS.

Tickets are not needed except for reserved seats (the whole of the area being reserved). These tickets may be secured both for the morning and evening meetings, on payment of 2s. 6d. for each day. Postal Orders to be sent to Mr. James E. Mathieson, Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, N. Applications for tickets to be made to Mr. Mathieson; a stamped and fully addressed envelope to accompany each application. Envelopes should be about 5 in. long by 3½ in. wide in order to cover tickets, with lithographed plan of hall, and seat marked.

THE SERVANTS' INSTITUTE AND CONFERENCE HALL, 435a, Norwood-road, S.E., with its branch, the Safety Rescue Home, 1, Beadman-street, West Norwood, fulfils a very useful mission. The conference hall was erected last year, and meetings are held in it every day throughout the week. The annual report shows that during the past twelve months about 130 girls found a home in the Institute, and through the registry office were, with the least possible delay, provided with suitable and good situations. Hundreds of other girls also entered their names on the books in the registry office, and almost without exception they had done well in their places. The many additional agencies seem to be working with much vigour. Mrs. Woodford Fawcett, Bressay House, Tulse-hill, is the founder and hon. president of the Institute and Home.

"NOT TO THE SWIFT."

Eccles. ix. 11.

Not to the swift Life's race?—ah, no!
The swiftest foot will fail;
It ran too fast, it ran too strong;
Now as the sunbeams pale
There comes a voice, "Thy race is run;
The shadows fall: thou hast not won!"

Not won! and was it all in vain
The heart that beat so fast,
And almost broke to reach the goal,
By slower footsteps passed?
"In vain! in vain! thy race is run;
The shadows fall: thou hast not won!"

Oh, empty hands, stretch up to God!
Oh, broken heart, be still!
Beyond the stars, life stretches on
To the everlasting hill
Beyond the stars. The race is won,
And God will crown earth's crownless one.

THE POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE.

Two columns in a recent issue of The Times are devoted to a description of the Polytechnic Young Men's Christian Institute in Regent-street. It owes its existence and maintenance, as our readers know, to the energy and munificence of Mr. Quinton Hogg, who for years has devoted his evenings to work among the boys and young men of London. Roughly speaking, Mr. Hogg has spent £100,000 upon the Polytechnic Institute, in which technical training, that has been highly praised, is given every evening at little more than nominal cost. The Commissioners of City Charities have just agreed to endow the Institute on certain conditions, one of which is that the sum of £35,000 be first raised by private subscription. Already £18,000 has been promised, and, when the remaining money has been collected, steps will be taken to establish the Institute on a permanent working basis.

Sir Lyon Playfair, M.P., distributed the prizes to the successful students of the Institute on Friday last. A statement made by Mr. Hogg showed that the number of members and students on the books at the present time is 10,000. In the course of an interesting address Sir Lyon Playfair said that the secret of Mr. Hogg's success in the promotion of technical education was that he had adapted the training to the locality and to the capacities of the students, the result being that the Institute may be made a model for all similar schools in the country.

OUR FISHERMEN.—Dear Sir,—In consequence of the fact that but few of our vessels are proceeding to the North and Irish Seas this season, I shall not need a supply of books, &c. I trust, however, that my kind helpers will remember my needs for next year's work, if God should spare us.—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully, J. T. Almy, Brixham, Devon. Baptist Minister.

GREAT YARMOUTH.—A long-desired Seamen's Institute has recently been opened at Great Yarmouth, for the Missions to Seamen Society. The building is of two stories, the ground floor being a hall to seat about 240 seamen and fishermen, and intended to be used as a reading-room, and for the purpose of recreation; whilst the upper story is fitted up as a church, where mission services for seafaring men will be conducted. Writing tables, pictures, books, a piano, and other furniture are still needed.

THE YOUNG MEN OF SOUTHWARK mustered in goodly numbers on Thursday last, at the invitation of Mr. G. Williams, who was the host at a social gathering held in the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. in Newington Causeway. Nearly 200 partook of tea, and at the meeting after the lecture hall was crowded. Mr. Russell Hurditch delivered a Gospel address of much power and pathos. The Secretary, on the following day, by first post, received a letter from a young man, a commercial traveller, who stated that he had entered the meeting with the determination to commit suicide that night; but that the Word laid hold of him, and he entertained the "hope that even he, vile as he was, might yet be saved." The Secretary visited him, with the happiest results. Other cheering accounts have already reached the Secretary of blessing and salvation, the outcome of the social meeting.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Dr. Crowther, the coloured Bishop of the Niger region, who was formerly a slave boy, has arrived in England, and was one of the speakers at the annual meeting of the Church Missionary Society on Tuesday evening.

In the course of his visitation charge, the Bishop of Bath and Wells spoke very strongly on the duty of maintaining the essential and characteristic doctrines of the Reformation. While we are ready, he said, to tolerate many things that perhaps our own judgment does not exactly approve, and while we can work heartily and lovingly with brethren who differ from us, yet when the vital principles of the Reformation are being destroyed, and doctrines for which our forefathers laid down their lives are ignored, and systems that they died to get rid of are sought to be re-established, we feel bound to strongly protest.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The London Evangelisation Committee intend to prosecute open-air work with vigour during the summer.

Miss Barnet has been accepted by the English Presbyterian Church Women's Missionary Association for work in China.

Rev. John M'Neill, of M'Crie Roxburgh Free Church, Edinburgh, has declined the call to the church at Highgate.

Canon Lloyd, of Newcastle, has been entertaining several ministers during the meetings of the Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England. Among his guests were the Moderator of the Irish Synod, and Rev. Dr. Robson, a delegate from the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland.

METHODIST.

The Wesleyans of Rochdale have started a Mission Central Hall on the same lines as the missions in Birmingham, Manchester, and London.

Rev. T. Champness is contemplating retirement from circuit work in 1889, in order that he may devote himself entirely to the ever-extending Joyful News Mission.

Rev. John Smith, of Aliwal North, South Africa, has arrived in England. A committee has been appointed to confer with Mr. Smith in making necessary preparations for the new mission in Central Africa.

Mr. O. L. Heatley for two months has been conducting special services in each of the Wesleyan Chapels of Devonport, and as the result of combined effort and prayer the mission has been blessed of God to the salvation of some 120 souls.

At Walkden, Rev. T. Waugh has held a special twelve days' mission, which has resulted in much blessing. There were over 400 inquirers, of whom many, including a large number of the elder scholars in the Sunday-school, have been brought to Christ.

The annual census of Church membership in the Methodist body in England has recently been taken, and the returns show an increase of over 4000 members, the largest additions having been made, it is stated, in the Nottingham district. There is an increase, too, in London, but a small falling off is reported from Swansea and Cornwall.

A striking illustration of the sympathy shown by other churches in the London Wesleyan Mission occurred on Sunday week, when collections, which amounted to the noble sum of one hundred guineas, were made on behalf of the Mission in Westminster Congregational Chapel, morning and evening. Mr. John Cory has given a donation of £1000 for the building fund of the permanent structure which it is hoped will in time be provided for the West-end Mission.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. E. J. Dukes, of Bridgwater, has declined the call to the Union Church, Shanghai.

Rev. E. V. and Mrs. Cooper have arrived in Sydney from Huahine, Society Islands, having come seeking change on account of health.

The Congregational Union meets in the City Temple on Tuesday next. The presidential address will be delivered by Rev. Dr. Robert Bruce, and the missionary sermons in connection with the London Missionary Society will be preached by Revs. Dr. E. R. Conder and C. A. Berry on Wednesday, at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. respectively.

The completion of thirty years of pastoral work in North Bow was celebrated on Tuesday, last week by Rev. E. and Mrs. Schnadhorst. During these years Mr. Schnadhorst has voluntarily devoted his energies to sustaining Gospel work in the district; while his wife has been active in all kinds of mission, Band of Hope, and Sunday-school work.

"Twenty-one Years" is the title of a sketch of the work of Stapleton-road Church, Bristol, from its formation in 1867, when seventy-three persons were united in fellowship. Twenty-six of these are still members. The Sabbath-school has 1623 scholars and sixty-three teachers; and at the mission school in Brick-street there are 341, with thirty teachers. During the twenty-one years, 1265 members have joined the church. The number on the roll at the end of last year was 585. Rev. John James, of Maesteg, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate.

A Flower Mission is carried on in connection with the King's Weigh House Church every Saturday during the summer months, from April to August, when flowers are taken to the homes of the poor people living in the neighbourhood of the Mint and London Docks. The supply of flowers is kept up by friends in the country, and work was resumed for another season on Saturday last. Help is asked in contributions of flowers, or personal help as visitors. Letters should be addressed, Miss Kemp, Darby-street Mission Schools, Royal Mint-street, Minories, E.C.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Howard Nicholson gives a very cheering description of united Gospel meetings in Ontario, with 160 professed conversions.

As a result of four years' evangelistic labour at Woonton-Almeley, Herefordshire, a new meeting-house is being erected, and on Sunday evenings the old house is well filled.

Indianapolis has been the scene of a remarkable gathering of women Friends. Lady professors, scholars, and missionaries read papers and deliberated. Great power and union were realised. Work among the Indians, on Lebanon, in Palestine, Japan, Mexico, Jamaica, and the far West, came under review, with the result that (1) Junior and Juvenile Departments; (2) Systematic giving; and (3) General Literature are recommended to women Friends everywhere.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Army has now 14 stations in Gujerat, and 500 native soldiers enrolled in that province alone.

At Vredy (Holland), a centre of Socialistic and Jewish people, some of the vilest and worst characters have professed conversion.

The Staff Council in India held by Colonel Weerisooriye resulted in the spiritual quickening of officers and soldiers, as well as in the salvation of many persons of all classes.

One hundred and fifty candidates for active service as Salvation Army home and foreign missionaries were recently interviewed by Mr. Bramwell Booth at Manchester, as well as a large number at Leeds.

The work of the Army amongst children is rapidly assuming large proportions. Officers in all parts of the kingdom are being set aside for the superintendence of the "Junior Soldiers' War," and a more complete and better organised plan of operations is being carried out.

During the few weeks the Army has been working in Christiania, Norway, 1300 persons have publicly professed conversion, and one evening last week 150 soldiers were sworn in and enrolled. The city is divided into districts, which are systematically worked and visited, and it may fairly be described as being in a state of siege.

BAPTIST.

Mr. Thomas Whitley, whose son, Rev. H. G. Whitley, died last year on the Congo, has paid the outfit and passage of a man to take his son's place.

Rev. G. M. M'Elwee has been appointed pastor of Mansfield-road Church, Nottingham, as successor to Dr. Samuel Cox. Dr. Cox has been asked to retain his connection with the church by becoming pastor emeritus.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Rev. W. W. Shaw, of China, has been addressing a number of meetings in the interest of missions during the past week.

A London gentleman has made the generous offer to the Irish Presbyterian Church to pay the salary for three years of a medical missionary, and also the salaries of two native assistants to assist him in his work. The appointment must be to a station not hitherto occupied by a medical missionary.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Mr. Joseph Glenny, of Warrenpoint, co. Down, aged 78 years, an earnest Christian.—Rev. Asa Bullard, well known in America for many years for his active work in connection with the extension of Sunday-schools.—Rev. J. H. Ouston, Congregational minister, of Lymm.—Rev. John S. Anderson, pastor of Zion Baptist Chapel, New Cross.—Professor W. N. de Regt, of the American Board's Mission, Ahmednagar, India.

THE BIBLE IN FRANCE.—The French Bible Society will hold its general assembly on Sunday, May 27, when M. Dhombres, the president of the Society, will preside. The British and Foreign Bible Society held its anniversary in April, in the Rue Royale McAll Mission Hall. 135,733 copies of the Holy Scriptures were sold in 1887, being a great increase on the previous year. Sixty-two colporteurs are employed. 4000 Bibles and Testaments were distributed among the liberated troops in the Haute Garonne.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The Local Veto (Scotland) Bill, known as Mr. McLagan's, has passed its second reading.

In various districts in Scotland there has been some reduction in the number of licences issued.

Dr. Thorold, Bishop of Rochester, calls attention to the danger through questionable amusements at temperance gatherings of vulgarising the cause.

The Manchester Justices have memorialised Government in favour of the treatment of drunkards apart from ordinary criminals, and for prolonged periods.

Mr. F. W. Newman points out that where landowners have annihilated the liquor trade on their estates, "neither publicans nor brewers have been impudent enough to ask compensation."

Speaking in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, a few days since, the President of the Wesleyan Conference described the chiefs of Pondoland as the idlest and most sensual of the Kaffirs, nearly all being slaves to the drink.

A great meeting is to be held in Exeter Hall on Saturday, May 5, to oppose the compensation clauses of the Local Government Bill. Cardinal Manning, Archdeacon Farrar, Sir Wilfred Lawson, M.P., and Mr. Caine, M.P., will be among the speakers.

FOREIGN.

Seven counties of Canada have given up the Scott Act, and returned to licence.

The Parliament of Norway has accepted a Government proposal to increase the spirit duties.

Mr. Francis Murphy has followed Mr. Moody, and has been speaking on temperance in the great Louisville Tabernacle, and with large results.

Major and Mrs. Evered Poole addressed large gatherings last Sunday at Frome on intemperance and other national sins. This week they are holding meetings in the Isle of Wight.

LONDON POLICEMEN. — Mrs. Rusher, of Dover, has presented the London police force with a house in that town worth £3000, to be used as a convalescent home for members of the force.

THE WHITE CROSS SOCIETY.—An appeal is made by the Bishop of Durham for the extension of the work. The policy of the Society is especially to influence young men of all classes, and in all conditions of life—boys at school, undergraduates at the universities, clerks in business houses, soldiers and sailors, artisans, labourers in the country villages, &c. The spread of the Society within such organisations as the Y.M.C.A., Young Men's Friendly Society, the Church of England Young Men's Society, the Church of Scotland Young Men's Guild, &c., is strongly recommended. The diffusion of healthy literature, setting forth a high ideal of manliness, has been systematically undertaken, and more than a million of the White Cross Series have been circulated. Upwards of five thousand were given away during a general mission recently held in a large manufacturing city.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

A VERY PRESSING NEED.

IN a village in the West of Ireland a Scriptural School has been carried on with much success for many years. It has been maintained by the personal efforts of the family of the resident proprietor, whose means, under existing circumstances, do not admit of his rebuilding it. The School is attended by over Forty Children, who are daily instructed in the Word of God, but the School House is in a state of irreparable decay, the walls being held together by props. A new building is absolutely necessary if a Romish education, without the Bible, for the villagers is to be prevented.

"Clarisford, Killaloe, Co. Clare.

"I most cordially recommend the Appeal for the rebuilding of Ardrahan School House, the advantages and importance of which I am well aware of.

"WM. B. KILLALOE."

"I beg fully to concur in his Lordship's recommendation.

"HORACE W. TOWNSEND, Clerk, M.A.,
11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C."

Contributions towards this proposed new School House will be gratefully received and acknowledged by—

MRS. SMYLY, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-st., Dublin; or,
MRS. HATT NOBLE, Ardmore, Bray.

The estimated cost of the Building needed is £320, of which £230 1s. has now been subscribed. With so much in hand the work has been commenced, and help is earnestly asked towards the £89 19s. still required, so that no debt may be incurred.

Mrs. Smyly returns her thanks for £183 6s. already acknowledged, and for the following:—Amied, £10; Rev. Eden S. Grenville, £5; Mrs. Butler-Prior, £1; Rev. S. Minton-Stenhouse, £1; Miss Richardson and Miss Warde, 5s.; J. C. Whitty, Esq., £1 1s.; the Misses Radcliffe, £1; H. CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY 12,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity. Hundreds of poor men have been gathered in, and their need supplied, while scores have been turned away, for want of room, in the most destitute condition.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the EDITORS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

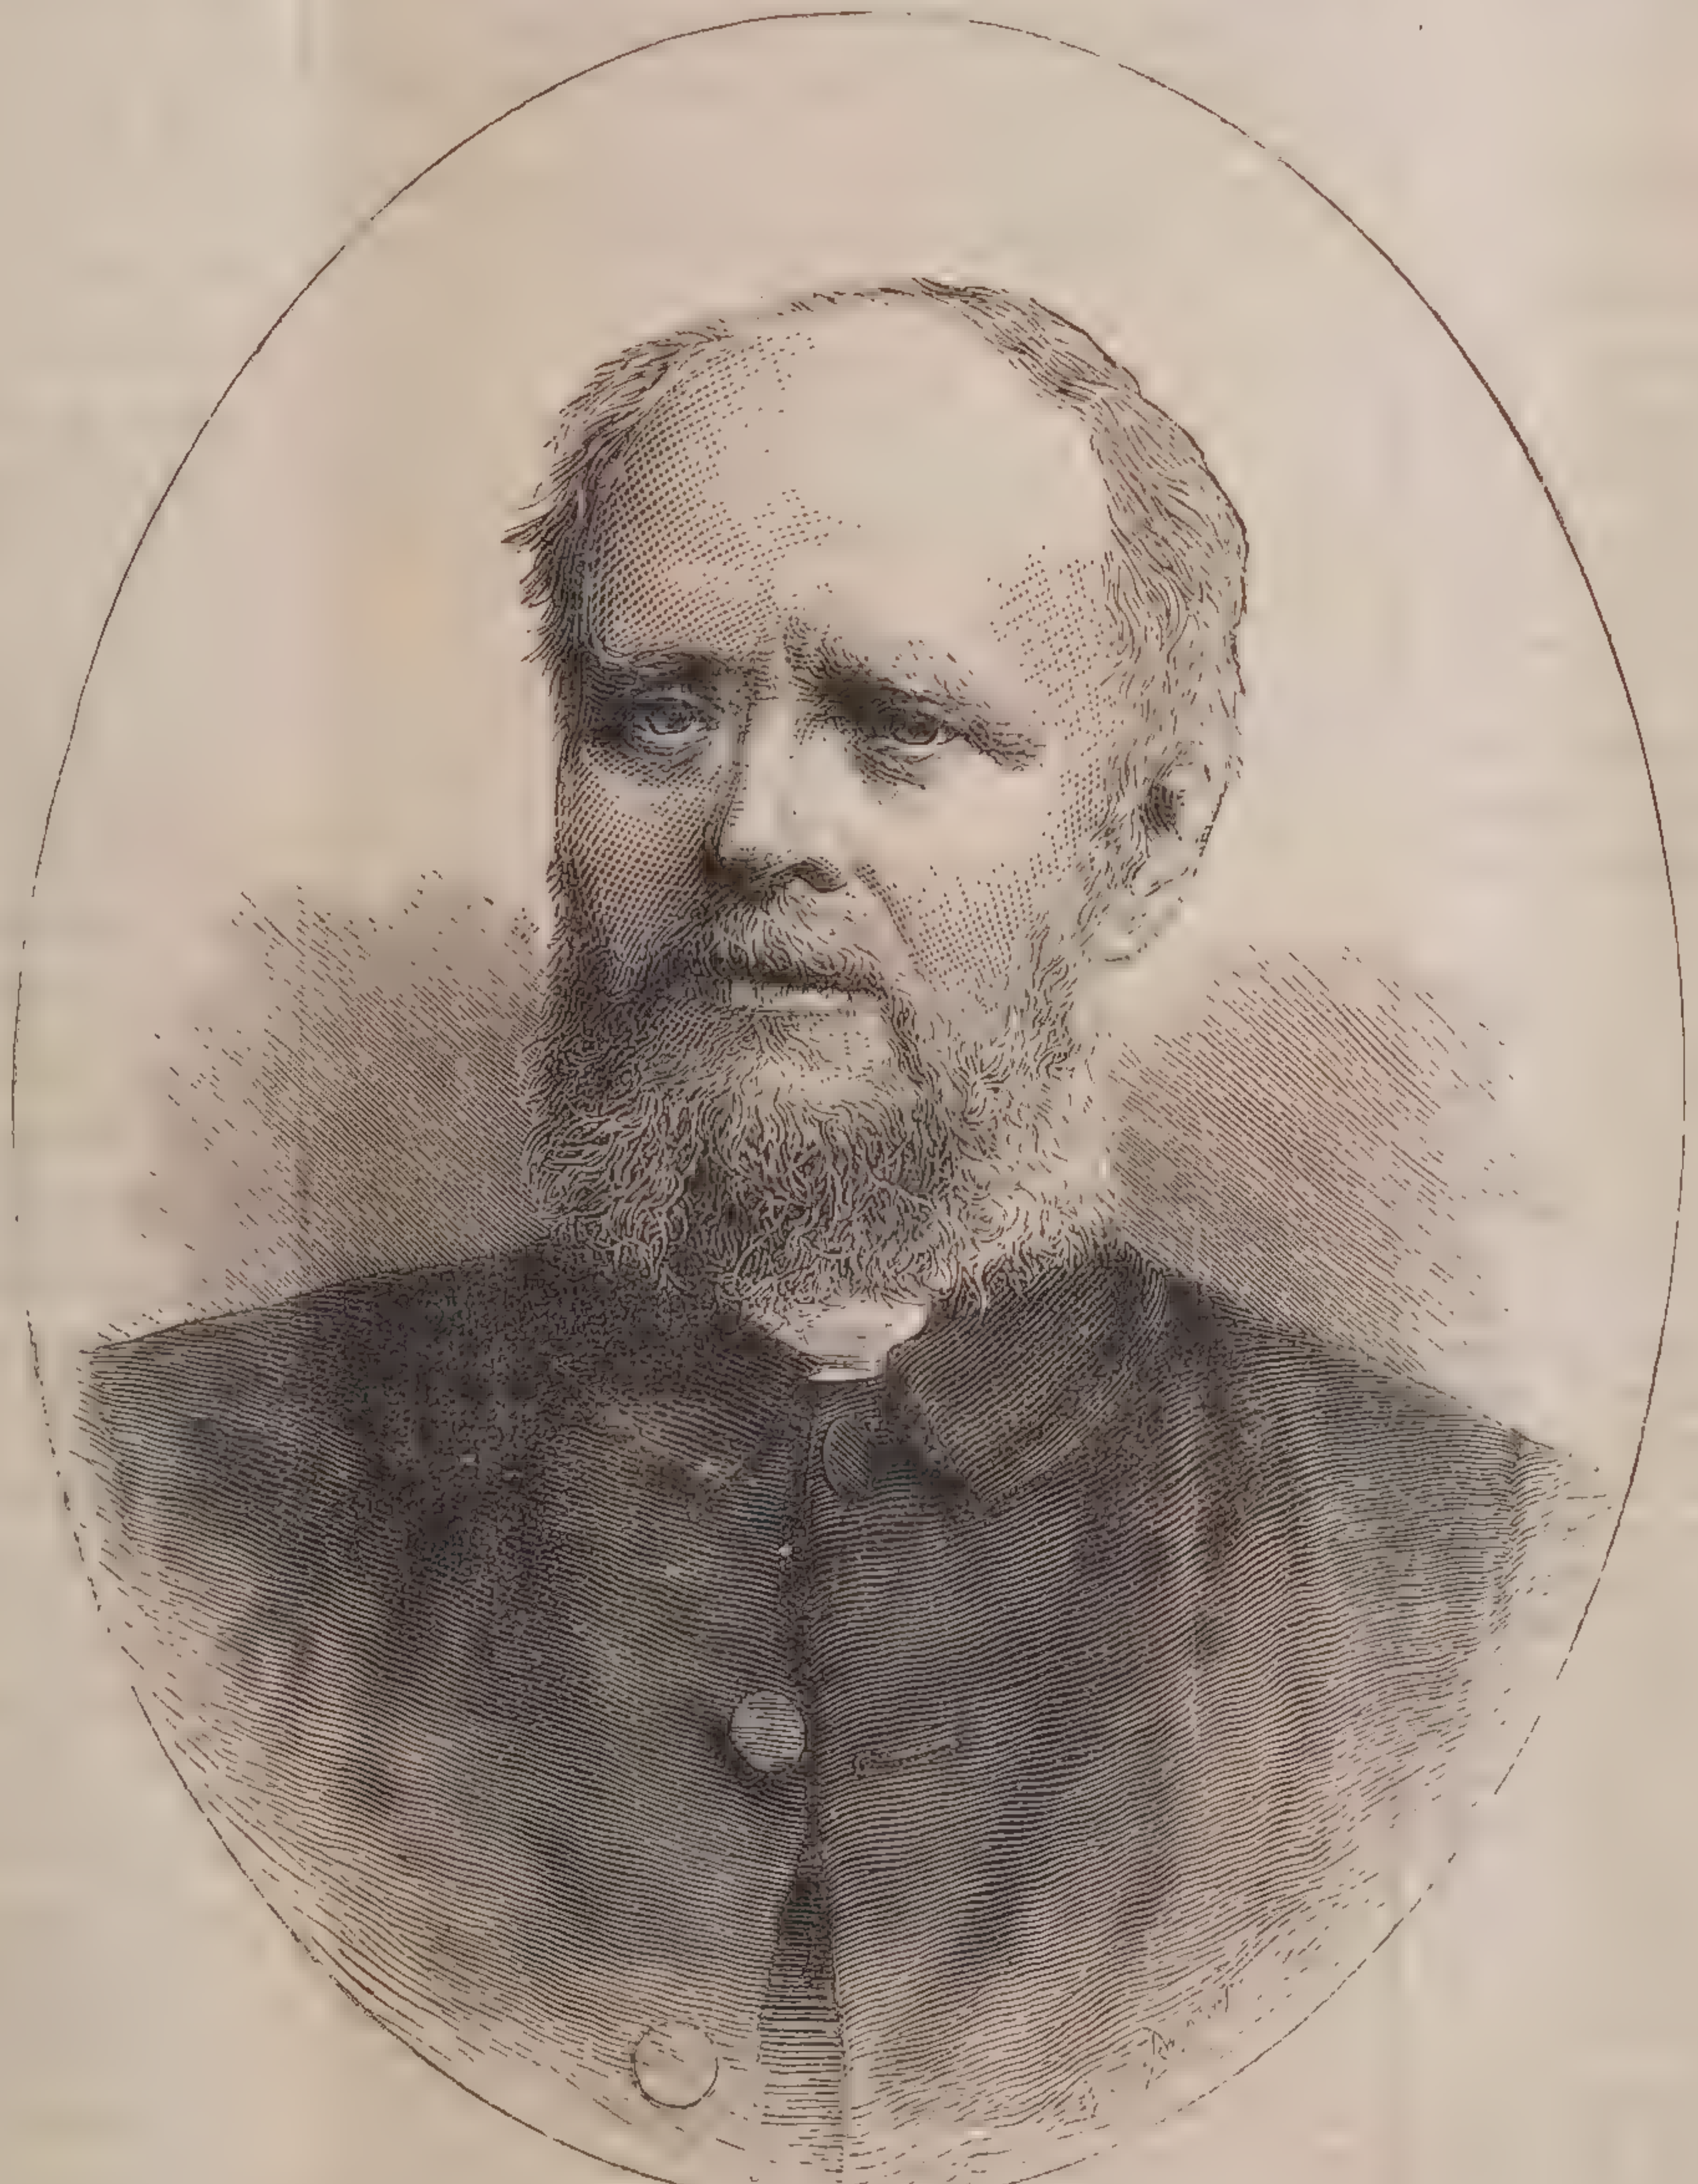
REV. ROBERT BRUCE, D.D.

Chairman of the Congregational Union.

THE President of the Congregational Union of England and Wales for the official year which has now begun, brings to bear upon his many duties a long ministerial and pastoral experience, combined with ripe Christian scholarship and large spiritual knowledge. Though more intimately known in the northern counties of England than elsewhere, he has, nevertheless, come to be held in widespread regard, his reputation being readily associated with sound doctrine, sober judgment, and earnest purpose. Dr. Bruce's talents and time have been long devoted to the service of God, and his labours have been attended by tokens of Divine approval in the shape of blessing to those with whom he has come into contact. Accordingly, as the years go by, it becomes more emphatically true of Dr. Bruce that "his praise is in all the churches."

Born in 1829 near Inverurie, Aberdeenshire, Dr. BRUCE is now in his fifty-ninth year. His father was a farmer, held in high estimation by his neighbours, and is still remembered as the founder of the Inverurie Congregational Church, of which he was also a deacon. Young Robert Bruce received some of his earliest religious impressions at that church, and he has ever since been consistently and conscientiously attached to the evangelical principles and independent polity in which he was thus carefully reared. Passing from the Grammar School of Aberdeen to the University of that city, young Mr. Bruce graduated with the highest mathematical honours in 1848, while only nineteen years of age.

Having been very successful in his academical career, receiving prizes in many subjects, Mr. Bruce directed his attention to the work of tuition. It was soon evident to him, however, that his lot in life lay in another course, and in 1851 he entered the Lancashire Independent College as a theological student. In 1853 he was invited to the pastorate of Highfield Congregational Church, Huddersfield, and he has held the charge ever since. The attachment was warm at first, and has remained so without interruption; in fact, the people were so anxious to secure the preacher of their choice that they elected him eight months before he had completed his college course, and patiently waited until he was at liberty to preside over them. Thirty-four years is a long pastorate, and it is extremely gratifying to know that it has been a profitable one in the highest sense of the word.



(From a Photograph by Mr. J. E. Shaw, Huddersfield.)

Highfield Church has a membership of some 350; during the present pastorate over 800 members have been admitted. Flourishing Sunday-schools are associated with the chapel, and a new branch school has been erected, at a cost of some £3150, which was opened at Easter; being in a poor district it is likely to become an important centre for evangelistic and educational work, and is already well filled. Meanwhile the two Congregational churches have multiplied into six, with large and commodious schools, all self-supporting, and in these extensions Dr. Bruce and his friends at Highfield have taken a leading part.

Even as a young pastor Mr. Bruce was by no means careful to confine his labours to his own church and congregation; while as years passed and his influence increased, his field of operations was the county rather than the town in which he lived. He has always taken a deep interest in home missionary work, and in the improvement of the position of rural ministers. His advancing usefulness and patient application to the varied duties of a religious teacher and educationist were duly noted in his native county, and in course of time his alma mater recognised his intellectual strength and theological eminence by conferring upon him the degree of Doctor of Divinity.

For many years now Dr. Bruce has done his full share of Christian work in the county of York. Some time ago he was chairman of the Yorkshire Congregational Union; for several years he has been chairman of the Rotherham College, and honorary secretary of Huddersfield College. Besides his active service in promoting local philanthropic institutions, Bible and tract societies, savings bank, &c., he has acted as a member of the Huddersfield School Board, being Chairman of the School Management Committee; his great experience of the whole subject recently led to his being examined as a witness before the Royal Commission on Education.

A painstaking preacher as well as a diligent student, Dr. Bruce expends much care in the preparation of his sermons. His attention has been so absorbed in actual Christian exertion that little or no opportunity for literary work has presented itself. He has, however, published several sermons and lectures in a separate form, as well as a centenary memorial of Highfield Church, and a Jubilee memorial of the Sunday-school. The most extended holiday he has allowed himself was in 1875, when, in company with the late Dr. Alexander Raleigh and Rev. J. Viney, he made a tour through Egypt, Palestine, and Turkey.

It is a matter of surprise to many that Dr. Bruce was not elected before to the presidential chair which he now occupies. The honour thus conferred was quite unsought, for Dr. Bruce is neither obtrusive nor self-seeking. In fact, the election was a great surprise to him. We sincerely hope that, consequent upon having faithfully served his brethren in the Union, Dr. Bruce will, in coming years, find himself more able than heretofore to discharge the onerous, though more general, duties of the responsible position to which God in his providence has called him, and in which He has, so far, graciously sustained and greatly blessed him.

OPEN DOORS IN JAPAN.

Dear Sir,—Your readers may not be aware of the wide field for Christian life and effort which Japan offers at the present time to consecrated men and women from this and other countries. The marvel is that a country so highly favoured of God as to physical beauty generally, temperate climate, and a variety of domestic resources answering to a great extent to those of this country, has not drawn the attention of a number of zealous-hearted ones, who feel they cannot go to India, China, or Africa.

There are more than one million gentry in Japan who, with a few exceptions, are practically unreached. The literati of Japan are a very large and most influential body. A Japanese writes: "Immediately after the disestablishment of the native religions—viz., Shintoism and Buddhism, twenty years ago, the gap was filled with political and philosophical works from the 'West' (a word identical with Christianity and civilisation). Montesquieu, Mill, Adam Smith, Paine, &c., were everywhere read, and were upon the lips of almost all educated people." This writer further says, "Christianity is rapidly advancing, but its extension will be quicker if more well read and competent and selected missionaries are sent out. It is absolutely necessary to have men who can convince by word as well as by their own personal conduct, because many are ready to judge of the religion by the daily conduct of its believers. In fact they are in want of being led, informed, and convinced."

Any who are definitely exercised about Japan are invited to call on me at the following address, either by appointment, or on Wednesdays and Saturdays between 11 and 1 o'clock, when I shall be glad to answer questions relative to missionary work in that country.

SUNDAY TRAVELLING.—At the third annual meeting of the members of the Anti-Sunday-Travelling Union, which was held last week in the Council Room at Exeter Hall, Mr. George Williams stated that there are now between six and seven thousand members of the Union. They have fifty-three local secretaries, who represent the Union in various parts of England, Scotland, Ireland, Bombay, and the Cape.

NOTES ON DOCTRINES.

IMPUTED RIGHTEOUSNESS.

As the word "substitution" falls short of the whole truth, so does the term "imputed righteousness." The righteousness of Christ is ours, because He is Himself our righteousness. The straightness of a straight line cannot be placed to the credit of a crooked line. God is good: the goodness of God cannot make evil good. Christ is righteous: the righteousness of Christ cannot make unrighteousness righteous. Scripture does not separate the righteousness of Christ from Christ Himself. A coal heap covered with snow, or a white glove upon a dirty hand, is no true representation of the righteousness of Christ imputed to a believer. His righteousness is ours because we are one with Him. We are his bride, and "as He is, so are we in this world." "The Church is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." He is the Head, "from whom the whole body, fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the building up of itself in love." "For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones."

Unrighteousness came by doubting God; just as departing from a right line is unrightness. Righteousness is restored by believing God; as identification with a right line is rightness. Therefore Abraham's faith in God was counted, reckoned, unto him for righteousness. He was justified not by works but by believing God.

Jesus Christ, the Word, came forth from the bosom of the Father to reveal God to men. He who saw Jesus saw the Father. He who believes in Jesus believes in God, and by confessing his own and the world's sin and sinfulness justifies God in all He has spoken, and in all his judgments. And thus justifying God, and identifying himself by this his faith with God's righteousness, he himself is righteous, and is therefore counted righteous, i.e., he is justified by his faith in Him who raised up from the dead Jesus our Lord, who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification.

With this presentation of the truth by Paul that by Peter is in absolute harmony: "Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot; who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you, who, by Him, do believe in God, who raised Him up from the dead and gave Him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God." God is the ultimate object of our faith, and we believe in Him by Jesus Christ. Jesus is the way to God.

THE NEED OF THE TIME.

"In face (1) of the rising missionary interest, (2) of the approaching International Conference, and (3) of the unhappy divisions, is it not more than ever important that we should be kept steaming straight on our course, evangelising at home and everywhere abroad?

"We want thousands more to help at home—men and women known for their holy living—and tens of thousands more abroad, whose holy lives are so manifest that the heathen can read and love them, and believe in them, before they can, perhaps, understand their message.

"How can The Christian paper best help to keep us so steaming on direct for this goal, and save us from being delayed or diverted to the right or left? I do not know: God direct us. But He gives me to look joyfully to Himself for far greater things than we have seen.

"You started as The Revival, and now let us pray and labour that the pages of The Christian may have to record a world-wide revival."

So writes one of our oldest friends and contributors, who has always been in the van of evangelistic and missionary progress, and has done as much as any living man to bring about the present revival of apostolic Christianity. For, all the error notwithstanding, there is such a revival—a revival of hearing that word of the Lord, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the good tidings to every creature." The greatest of all errors is to disobey that great commandment. How monstrous it must seem to the angels in heaven to hear saved sinners on earth inquiring into "the larger hope," while millions of our people are living lives which have no hope for time or eternity; and discussing the future condition of the heathen, while neglecting to carry to them the Gospel which can convert them from heathen into saints.

To make light of doctrine is, indeed, as unreasonable as for a physician to decry the theory of medicine, or for an engineer to disregard mechanical forces. But here also the children of this age are wiser than the children of light. So soon as men make a new discovery, they immediately apply it to practical purposes, and the highest science is adapted to common use—e.g., the mysterious agency of electricity is utilised to light our railway carriages, and ring our domestic bells.

But the children of light, with eternal and saving truth doubly revealed in the Personal and Written Word, are still inordinately exercised over the doctrine, and, nearly two millenniums after date, have scarcely yet begun to apply these great revelations to the purpose for which they were made—the salvation of the unnumbered millions, on behalf of every one of whom Jesus died.

The great need of this and all other times is "power from on high." Probably the explanation why so many earnest and apparently intelligent people go off into bypaths, and follow this or that mischievous pretension, is that they feel the need of the power of the Holy Spirit, and, not finding it in orthodox circles, they are deceived by some impudent imitation of it. The only effectual remedy for error is the truth proclaimed in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. Let this be the one aim of all believers, and the results will infallibly appear.

Leaves from my Note-Book.

By Rev. W. HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life."

VI.—ASHAMED TO DIE.

I was called in haste one day to visit a gentleman who was supposed to be dying. I had noticed him in church several times; but latterly I had lost sight of him, and did not know where he lived or lodged.

On going into the sick man's room I recognised him at once, and was sorry to find him looking so ill. In conversation, I soon ascertained that he was thinking more about his soul than his body. He had very little hope for his recovery, but he was not thinking so much about that; his great anxiety was concerning his spiritual state.

I asked him whether he was saved.

He answered, "I thought so when I was hearing you; but I have been so miserable since."

"What is it about?" I inquired; "tell me, and I will see if I can help you."

"Yes," he continued, "I am saved; I was converted years ago. I am not in trouble about my conversion; but, here on my death-bed, I see that my life has been lost! I have been saving and keeping my life for my own business and pleasure, and now it is gone—I can never have these years over again. I am not afraid of death; but I am ashamed to die!"

What could I say to this? How many there are, who are selfish enough to take their salvation, and even enjoy it, while they never think of living for God's service. Like this gentleman, they may not be afraid to die; but they have not yet arrived at being ashamed to die. Such persons will inevitably be ashamed, at the Lord's appearing, to find that they have done nothing for Him, who gave up all for them.

I could not help thanking God for my friend. I said to him, "Better late than never. I thank God you have been enabled to see the difference between salvation and life. Salvation is what God gives you, and life is what you give to God. He has shown you that, although you accepted his salvation, you have not given Him your life."

"Yes, yes, exactly, that is what I feel and regret, particularly now, when I have no time or opportunity to mend it."

I said, "God does not upbraid us for the past. If He has shown you your fault, it is that He may pardon you: and not only so; but He can restore the years the canker worm has eaten."

"Thank you so much," said the poor gentleman, "for this word of cheer. Can God—will He—forgive the past?"

"Yes," I replied, "He can, and He is willing. He wounds to heal, and kills to make alive. What is more, He can yet raise you up, and give you a longer continuance here, to be a witness to others."

"Oh, thank you, thank you so much for this encouragement; but I am ashamed," said the sick man, "I feel unworthy to ask Him for all that!"

I answered, "I am very glad you feel your unworthiness; and, no doubt, it is a hundred times worse than you think. It is for this very reason that God has provided the worthiness of Christ for you! You and I are worthy of the cross, and the shameful death that Christ bore; but He willingly took that place, that his worthiness might be applied to us. 'He was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him.' (See 2 Cor. v. 21.)"

"I am overwhelmed with the thought of all this," said my sick friend. "What can I say, or do?"

"Do," I repeated, "do the first thing. Ask God to forgive the past, and bless your dying testimony, if you are called away, to others who are living as you have lived."

"Yes, that I will," he said heartily, and at once he made his double petition, with great earnestness and many tears.

I responded with "Amen," from my heart. Then it came to my mind to ask God to raise him up, and make him an example of Christian living. We have many witnesses for salvation, would we had more; but surely we do need witnesses to testify of the reality and power of Christian life.

In prayer, I was led to say, "Lord, now that Thou hast opened thy servant's eyes to see his past fault, forgive him for Jesus' sake, and for the same Lord Jesus' sake raise him up from his bed of sickness, to glorify Thee upon earth."

The dear man wept very much, and, after a little time, interrupted me while I was speaking to him by saying, "I believe that God has forgiven me, and I believe also He will restore me to health again."

I said, "Let us then thank Him together. There is nothing too hard for Him to do, and I have reason to testify to his willingness and ability, for He raised me up from a greater sickness than yours, many years ago."

It was a joy to visit that dear man day by day, and to see him gaining strength of body, and, better still, gaining strength in the Lord.

"I want to give myself," he said, "a whole thankoffering—spirit, soul, and body—to be henceforth and for ever the Lord's."

"That is right," I answered. "Now do not believe in your giving, but in God's taking. If you believe He has accepted your offering, thank Him for having done so."

"Do you mean," asked the gentleman, "that God has taken me already, spirit, soul, and body?"

"Yes, according to your faith. If you only believe in your giving, you are not further on than that; but if you believe in God taking, then you are there; and He has taken you. If I put this book on the table, the table has it."

"I do not think," said my friend, looking down, "I half understand about faith—I have much to learn."

This gentleman was in such a childlike and teachable frame of mind, that he was bound to grow and become a happy witness for God.

He left his sick-room a new man, full of zeal for God and love for souls, especially for saved souls, who were living in neglect of God's service as he had been. He longed that they also might be brought to live for God. He did not forget the unsaved, or lose an opportunity of urging them to accept salvation; but his specialty was to wake up believers to their privilege of working in the vineyard.

The vineyard should not be confused with the harvest field, or the work of the evangelist. A vineyard is the place where the vine is cultivated as to its branches particularly. These need tending and training, propping and pruning. Young believers should have some one to look after them, and to encourage them to abide in the way of the Lord. They should be upheld in the time of temptation and depression; and their young zeal needs to be judiciously and carefully moderated.

This gentleman of whom we have been speaking used to say to every believer he had intercourse with, "Give yourself to God as a thankoffering; offer and present yourself a living sacrifice upon the altar, Christ, which sanctifies every gift."

We want more of such men. May the Lord raise them up.

REV. ALBERT NORTON, of the Koorkoo Mission, Bhaisdehi, C.P., India, writes:—"What a shame to English and American Christian women, that so very few are willing to come out here to teach Christ to the perishing little ones; and a deeper shame to the Christian men, that a still smaller number of them are willing to give up home and native land to make known the Gospel to these perishing millions! Englishmen have succeeded in establishing large numbers of prosperous plantations for growing tea, coffee, and indigo in this land. Why cannot Christians in England, with a little capital, establish self-supporting mission stations or farms on the many highland districts of India, where there is a climate suited to Europeans?"

M. COILLARD IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

M. Coillard, in recent letters from Sefula, Upper Zambesi (viâ Kimberley and Mangwato), says:—

The story of the foundation of the Barotsi Mission is no exception to the general rule. It is one of ten years of travels, labours, conflicts, and trials; but it is also one of the goodness and the faithfulness of God, one of many blessings and great deliverances. It was in 1877 that we took up our home in Basutoland for the unknown region of Bangou land, and those of the upper Zambesi, but it was only in 1887 that we definitely reached our destination in the Barotsi Valley, to build and begin work.

The valley is really the basin of a dried-up lake of about 300 miles by 40 miles, through which the Zambesi flows. Every year it is inundated for several months, the villages are deserted, and the people go and live in the sand and woody hills that border it. In May the south-east wind sets in, and the flood subsides; but the drying of the mud, the putrefying of the rank grass and jungles, the numberless lagoons and marshes that remain, all contribute to make it a hotbed of fever, and all sorts of diseases.

In the midst of much manual labour, teaching and evangelistic work have not been neglected. All the villages around are regularly visited. I wish I could say that we had already succeeded in forming a regular congregation. Sometimes we are full of hope, when we have as many as 100 or 150 persons to the morning meeting, but at other times, from one cause or another, we do not succeed in inducing the people to come. A day-school was started in April, and it has been carried on regularly ever since. We soon had some thirty names on the list, but most of them sons of Chiefs, whose own personal servants also attend, although they cannot be got to believe that the teaching is for them too.

Our experience of the past year convinces us that the work here is susceptible of great extension. Had we the men and the means, we might have a boarding school to wean the children as much as possible from a rotten system of caste and slavery. That would certainly be the surest way of exercising over this tribe a wide and lasting influence.

If we have had much to endure from inveterate thieves, we have had still more to suffer in our souls from all the scenes of murder and cruelty that are here of common occurrence. Witchcraft is a terrible instrument of vengeance in the hands of anyone, and of a king especially. Age, past services rendered, name and social position, none of these can shield a man from the dreaded accusation.

I can well understand how difficult it is to commend our Mission to the prayers and liberality of Christians who have never seen us. We do appreciate all the more their contributions. We stand in great need of a brick-making machine, a saw-bench with circular saw, and a steam-engine powerful enough to work the saw.

LONDON ALL-NIGHT MISSION.—Mr. James Pye, whose address is 22, Ifield-road, Fulham-road, S.W., has issued the fifteenth annual report of the Gospel All-Night Mission in the streets of London. The work is well spoken of by those who are acquainted with it. During the year 3200 calls and visits were made at the homes of the fallen and others; and 168 meetings of various kinds were held or assisted at by Mr. Pye.

CONVALESCENT HOME FOR YOUNG CITY WORK-WOMEN.—Clark's Cottage, Epping New-road, Buckhurst-hill, managed by the Misses Reynolds, is a Home where over-tired and ill girls and women are received for rest and change free of charge to themselves. It is kept open all the year round, and is never without constant applications for admittance. In June next the Home will have been opened six years, with an average of two hundred inmates annually. Communications of any kind, subscriptions, or gifts (furniture and good or cast-off clothing), should be sent to Miss Helen Reynolds, at the Home.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

X. "He staggered not."—Genesis xv.

Four phrases occur in this chapter for the first time in Scripture, but each of them is destined to be frequently repeated with many charming variations. We may speak then of this precious paragraph as of some upland vale where streamlets take their rise which are to flow seawards, making glad the lowland pasture lands on their way. Now, first, we meet the phrase, "the word of the Lord came." Here, first, we are told that "the Lord God is a shield." For the first time rings out the silver chime of that Divine assurance, "Fear not." And now we first meet in human history that great, that mighty word, "believed." What higher glory is there for man than that he should reckon on the faithfulness of God? For this is the meaning of all true belief.

The word of the Lord came to Abraham about three distinct matters.

1. God spoke to Abraham about his Fear.—He had just returned from the rout of Chedorlaomer and the confederate kings in the far north of Canaan, and there was a natural reaction from the long and unwonted strain as he settled down again into the placid and uneventful course of a shepherd's life. And in this state of mind he was most susceptible to fear, as the enfeebled constitution is most susceptible to disease.

And there was good reason for fear. He had defeated Chedorlaomer, it is true; but in doing so he had made him his bitter foe. His arm had been long enough to reach to Sodom; why should it not be long and strong enough to avenge his defeat upon that one lonely man? It could not be believed that the mighty monarch would settle down content until the memory of his disastrous defeat was wiped out with blood. There was every reason, therefore, to expect him back again to inflict condign punishment. And, besides all this, as a night wind in a desert land, there swept now and again over the heart of Abraham a feeling of lonely desolation, of disappointment, of hope deferred. More than ten years had passed since he had entered Canaan. Two successive promises had kindled his hopes, but they seemed as far from realisation as ever. Not one inch of territory! Not a sign of a child! Nothing of all that God had foretold!

It was under such circumstances that the word of the Lord came unto him, saying, "Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." Ah! our God does not always wait for us to come to Him; He often comes to us; He draws near to us in the low dungeon; He sends his angel to prepare for us the cruse of water and the baken cakes, and on our souls break his tender assurances of comfort, more penetrating than the roar of the surge, "Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid."

But God does not content Himself with vague assurances. He gives us solid ground for comfort in some fresh revelation of Himself. And oftentimes the very circumstances of our need are chosen as a foil to set forth some special side of the Divine character, which is peculiarly appropriate. What could have been more re-assuring at this moment to the defenceless pilgrim, with no stockade, or walled city in which to shelter, but whose flocks were scattered far and wide, than to hear that God Himself was around him and his, as a vast, impenetrable, though invisible shield. "I am thy shield."

Mankind, when once that thought was given, eagerly caught at it, and it has never been allowed to die. Again and again it rings out in prophecy and psalm, in temple anthem and from retired musings. "The Lord God is a sun and shield." "Thou art my hiding-place and my shield." "Behold, O God, our shield, and look upon the face of thine Anointed." "His truth shall be thy shield and buckler." It is a very helpful thought for some of us! We go every day into the midst of danger; men and devils strike at us; now it is the overt attack, and now the stab of the assassin; unkind insinuations, evil suggestions, taunts, gibes, threats; all these things are against us. But if we are doing God's will and trusting in God's care, ours is a charmed life, like the man who wears chain armour beneath his clothes. The Divine environment pours around us, rendering us impervious to attack, as the stream of electricity surrounds the jewel-case with an atmosphere before which the stoutest attack of the most resolute felon is foiled. "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper." "Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night, nor for the arrow that flieth by day, nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday. A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand, but it shall not come nigh thee." Happy are they who have learnt the art of abiding within the inviolable protection of the eternal God, on which all arrows are blunted, all swords turned aside, all sparks of malice extinguished with the hissing sound of a torch in the briny waters of the sea.

Nor does God only defend us from without. He is the reward and satisfaction of the lonely heart. It was as if He asked Abraham to consider how much he had in having Himself. "Come now, my child, and think; even if thou wert never to have one foot of soil, and thy tent were to stand silent, amid the merry laughter of childish voices all around, yet thou wouldest not have left thy land in vain, for thou hast me. Am not I enough? I fill heaven and earth, cannot I fill one lonely soul? Am not I 'thy exceeding great reward,' able to compensate thee by my friendship, to which thou art called, for any sacrifice that thou mayest have made?"

Our God, who is love, and love in its purest, divinest essence, has given us much, and promised us more, but still his best and greatest gift is his own dear self; our reward, our great reward, our exceeding great reward. Hast thou nought? Is thy life bare? Have lover and friend forsaken thee? Art thou lonely and forsaken of all the companions of earlier, younger days? Well, answer this one question more, Hast thou God? For if thou hast, thou hast all love and life, all sweetness and tenderness, all that can satisfy the heart, and delight the mind. All lovely things sleep in Him, as all colours hide in the sunbeam's ray, waiting to be unravelled. To have God is to have all, though bereft of everything. To be destitute of God is to be bereft of everything, though having all.

II. God spoke to Abraham about his Childlessness.—It was night, or perhaps the night was turning towards the morning, but as yet the stars were sparkling in the heavens in their myriads; the watchfires of the angels; the choristers of the spheres; the flocks on the wide pasture lands of space. The patriarch was sleeping in his tent, when God came near him in a vision, and it was under the shadow of that vision that Abraham was able to tell God all that was in his heart. We can often say things in the dark which we dare not utter beneath the eye of day. And in that quiet watch of the night, Abraham poured out into the ear of God the bitter, bitter agony of his heart's life. He had probably long wanted to say something like this, but the opportunity had not come. But, now, there was no longer need for restraint, and so it all came right out into the ear of his Almighty Friend. "Behold, to me Thou has given no seed: and, lo, one born in my house is mine heir." It was as if he said, "I promised for myself something more than this; I have conned thy promises, and felt that they surely prognosticated a child of my own flesh and blood; but the slowly moving years have brought me no fulfilment of my hopes: and I suppose that I mistook Thee. Thou never intendedist more than that my steward should inherit my name and goods. Ah, me! it is a bitter disappointment, but Thou hast done it, and it is well."

So often we mistake God, and interpret his delays as denials. What a chapter might be written of God's delays! Was not the life of Jesus full of them, from the moment when he tarried behind in the Temple, to the moment when He abode two days still in the same place where He was, instead of hurrying across the Jordan in response to the sad and agonised entreaty of the sisters, whom He loved. So He delays still. It is the mystery of the art of educating human spirits to the finest temper of which they are capable. What searchings of heart, what analysing of motives, what testings of the word of God, what upliftings of soul, searching what, or what manner of time, the Spirit of God signifies! All these are associated with these weary days of waiting, which are, nevertheless, big with spiritual destiny. But such delays are not God's final answer to the soul that trusts Him. They are but the winter before the burst of spring. "And, behold, the word of the Lord came unto him, saying, This shall not be thine heir; but thine own son shall be thine heir. Go forth and tell the stars. So shall thy seed be." And from that moment the stars shone with new meaning for him, as the sacraments of Divine promise.

"And he believed in the Lord." What wonder that those words are so often quoted by inspired men in after ages; or that they lie as the foundation stone of some of the greatest arguments that have ever engaged the mind of man? (Rom. iv. 3; Gal. iii. 6; James ii. 23).

He believed before he underwent the Jewish rite of circumcision.—The Apostle Paul lays special emphasis on this, as showing that they who were not Jews might equally have faith, and be numbered amongst the spiritual children of the great Father of the Faithful. The promise that he should be the heir of the world was made to him, when as yet he was only the far-travelled pilgrim; and so it is sure to all the seed, not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all.

He believed in face of strong natural improbabilities.—Appearances were dead against such a thing as the birth of a child to that aged pair. The experience of many years said, It cannot be. The nature and reason of the case said, It cannot be. Any council of human friends and advisers would have instantly said, It cannot be. And Abraham quietly considered and weighed them all, without being weakened in faith (Rom. iv. 19, R.V.). Then he as carefully looked unto the promise of God. And, rising from his consideration of the comparative weight of the one and the other, he elected to venture everything on the word of the Eternal. Nay, that was not all; as shock followed shock, and wave succeeded wave, booming with crash of thunder on his soul, he staggered not; he did not budge an inch; he did not even tremble, as sometimes the wave-beat rock shivers to its base. He reckoned on the faithfulness of God. He gave glory to God. He relied implicitly on the utter trustworthiness of the Divine veracity. He was fully assured that what He had promised He was able also to perform. Ah! child of God, for every look at the unlikelihood of the promise, take ten looks at the promise; this is the way in which faith waxes strong. "Looking unto the promise of God, he wavered not through unbelief, but waxed strong."

His faith was destined to be severely tried.—If you take to the lapidary the stones which you have collected in your summer ramble, he will probably send the bulk of them home to you within a few days, with scanty marks of having passed through his hands. But some one or two of the number may be kept back, and when you inquire for them, he will reply: "Those stones which I returned are not worth much; there was nothing in them to warrant the expenditure of my time and skill; but with the others, the case is far otherwise, they are capable of taking a polish and of bearing a discipline which it may take months and even years to give; but their beauty, when the process is complete, will be all the compensation that can be wished."

Some men pass through life without much trial, because their natures are light and trivial, and incapable of bearing much, or profiting by the severe discipline which, in the case of others, is all needed, and will yield a rich recompense, after it has had its perfect work. God will not let anyone of us be tried beyond what we are able to bear. But when He has in hand a nature like Abraham's, which is capable of the loftiest results, we must not be surprised if the trial is long continued, almost to the last limit of endurance. The patriarch had to wait fifteen years more, making twenty-five years in all, between the first promise and its fulfilment in the birth of Isaac.

His faith was counted to him for righteousness.—Faith is the seed-germ of righteousness, and, when God sees us possessed of the seed, He counts us as also being in possession of the harvest which lies hidden in its heart. When a man believes, it is only a matter of education and time to develop that which is already in embyro within him; and God, to whom the future is already present, accounts the man of faith as dowered with the fruits of righteousness, which are to the glory and praise of God. There may be a deeper meaning than this in the possession of a kind of judicial righteousness before God. But it is enough for our present purpose to show that faith is the tiny seed which contains all the rare perfumes and gorgeous hues of the Christian life, awaiting only the nurture and benediction of God.

The righteousness of Abraham was not a child of works, but of his faith. "He believed God, and it was reckoned to him for righteousness. Now it was not written for his sake alone that it was reckoned unto him, but for our sake also, unto whom it shall be reckoned, who believe on Him that raised Jesus our Lord from the dead." Oh, miracle of grace! if we simply trust in Jesus Christ our Lord we shall be reckoned as righteous in the eye of the eternal God. We shall share in that good pleasure with which the righteous Father regards our Lord Jesus, and all who are represented in Him before the throne. But, also, God will foresee in us all those fair graces which shall flower and fruit amid the genial influences of his husbandry and the climate of eternity, and He will credit us with them with tender anticipation.

We may not dwell now, for space forbids, on the answer which God gave to Abraham's natural misgiving about his inheritance of the land. We will reserve it until another paper gives us more ample scope to consider it.

DR. ZIEMANN IN DRESDEN.

We extract the following from Dresden reports:—

"Dr. Ziemann, who was invited by the Church Congress assembled in this place to take part in the Conference on Home Missions, has made a deep impression. His name was not quite strange to us. From time to time we had heard rumours of the wonderful results of his labours in Germany; at last we had the privilege of seeing and hearing him. He had been especially requested to speak on the Purity question from a medical point of view; but it was soon perceived that he was no specialist, but that his all in all was the Gospel. On the unity of the Church of Christ, on the Gospel as the only power for social reform, on the difference between the spirit of the age (Zeitgeist) and the Holy Spirit, on true service of God, on the call of each individual Christian as a missionary—on all these things he spoke alike with deep understanding and warm enthusiasm. He soon arrested the attention of the audience. At first caught by his somewhat English mode of expression, they then listened with rapt attention to his words, which are so simple and clear, and, at the same time, so penetrating, deep, and earnest."

The Dresdener Nachrichter of April 20 gives the following account:—

"An impression so powerful and thrilling as that produced by Dr. Ziemann's address in the Tivoli Hall two mornings ago is perhaps without parallel there. Over 3000 men filled the hall and galleries to overflowing. However varied were the motives which brought together this numerous assemblage, the effect was the same on all—impressive in the highest degree. If one could go away unmoved he can have neither heart nor conscience. The speaker exposed, with the glowing eloquence of an inspired philanthropist and the courage of a man of mature experience, the frightful evils of our social life. He struck deep, leaving in the conscience of his hearers a wound which they will not soon forget. The speaker knew well how to lay hold on heart and conscience, and to strike chords in these which will long reverberate.

"While the address lasted it seemed as if an oppressive thunder-cloud hung over the hall, and it was characteristic that a few of those present fainted. Then the spell was broken, and in the most intense applause that could almost be conceived the assemblage expressed to the speaker their gratitude and appreciation of his heart-stirring words. Pastor Klemm announced that Dr. Ziemann had been invited to return to Dresden, and that there was a prospect of his complying with their request."

"WHENCE COMETH MY HELP?"

When I look out across the lovely land
At break of summer morn, far o'er the meads
Flecked with the shifting shadows of the clouds
That sweep before the vap'rous sweet south wind,
The mountains lift unto the roseate sky
Their sloping shoulders golden with the gorse;
And, dark amid the bracken's feathery fronds,
The lonesome cromlech rises sharp and clear,
'Neath which the Celtic King, blind to the dawn,
Sleeps, undisturbed by songs of moorland birds.

From tint to tint they change throughout the days,
Until the twilight deepens, dusk and warm;
And, flooding all the valley with soft light,
The crescent moon glides up beyond the pines
On green Tibradden, which stands far and dim,
As are the hills of heaven in wistful dreams
Of those whose life drifts to the tideless sea
Bordered by flowery fields of asphodel.

Then through the lanes wheat-crowned Harvest strays
With Autumn apron-filled, and in the fields
The reapers sing amid the royal sheaves;
And over all the beach's flameless fire,
The amber of the chestnut's fading leaves,
The scarlet of the rowan's lurid fruit,
The spectral pomp of summer's ling'ring death;
The mountains many-coloured stand heath-clad;
Against a sky barred with deep crimson streaks,
And streamers running swift before the gales
That herald winter.

The sad months die down
In ruddy sunsets, and in storm and snow,
The sullen ocean murmurs in the gloom,
The mist swirls up and sweeps around the vale,
Hiding the hills in cere-clothes wan and weird;
And in my heart is born a nameless dread
That only in a dream I saw their slopes,
Purple in shimmering sheets of heather bloom;
Or watched their outline in the eventide
Sharpen against the saffron sky, and fade
Into the starlit night. But as I muse
How all things change and crumble into dust,
Above the sighing of the homeless wind,
The loving promise of our God I hear:
"The mountains shall depart, the hills remove
But yet my kindness never shall depart,
Nor shall my covenant of peace be moved."
And so I lay me down in trust and sleep,
Childlike within the everlasting arms.

THE UNCHURCHED MILLIONS.

The ministers and churches of London might do more to recover the non-church-going. The great mass of the population still remains outside the churches, halls, and mission-rooms, estranged from God, and unwon to Christ and salvation. The result is simply appalling, for in London alone only one million out of four millions of the inhabitants attend the churches and the means of grace on the Lord's Day. The moral condition of these three millions of human beings in London is deplorable, and wretched in the extreme, and should rouse every Christian Church to put forth efforts full of apostolic zeal. What Christian can contemplate without a shudder of horror the fact that amongst this 3,000,000 of non-church-going population there are 40,000 poor fallen women, who are perambulating the streets of the Metropolis, daily and nightly, for the purposes of immorality; while an equal number of abandoned men are prowling about on a similar errand.

Add to these terrible evils the misery-breeding agency of hundreds of public-houses, the continual sources of vice and crime. Add still further the deleterious influence of a diabolical infidelity, working openly and secretly among the masses, and sapping the very foundations of all morality, religion, law, and government. If the Churches would but revert to the old Divine plan of preaching the Gospel out of doors as well as indoors; if the ministers of Christ would but set their flocks the example; then days of Pentecostal blessing would come, conversions would be the rule, and not the exception; the churches would be crowded, benevolent agencies would be increased, and it would be seen that the Lord was working with them, and confirming the Word with signs following.—Light of the World.

REVIVAL IN NEW YORK.

ONE of the most extraordinary revivals on record (says the New York Witness) is going on in this city, in the Central Methodist Episcopal Church. Rev. Thomas Harrison, "the boy preacher," who conducts it, does not usually make any attempt at preaching. He keeps the people singing or praying almost all the time, occasionally making a few energetic remarks, and again, walking up and down the aisles, looking keenly around for anyone who might be under conviction. He is assisted by a corps of earnest workers who seek to find out unsaved souls among the audience and lead them to Christ.

The great power in this work is the power of prayer. So far as Mr. Harrison's words have anything to do with the result, it seems to be through the simple way in which he speaks. He does not attempt to instruct the people, but assuming that they all know enough to find salvation, and taking for granted that they all mean to find it some time, urges them to take it now. He persuades people to accept Christ by speaking of it as the most natural thing in the world for them to do. One Sunday night a family of five persons were converted at the same time, and for every conversion that is announced the meeting is called upon to sing the doxology. It is reported that the converts number more than a thousand.

Special jubilee services were held to commemorate the one-thousandth conversion. These lasted three days. Mr. Lane, the former pastor of Central Church, said: "The work has been of the most thorough character. I have employed missionaries to go about among those who have professed conversion, and I find very few indeed who are not sticking fast to their professions. One of the foremost men of our church said to me that he was afraid this man Harrison would disgrace the church. I said to him it was time Central Church was disgraced, then. His coming has solved the problem of how to reach the masses." Dr. J. M. Buckley, editor of the official Methodist organ, The Christian Advocate, said he had never seen or participated in a revival nearly as great as the one now shaking New York. An immense crowd thronged the church to hear Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, the famous Brooklyn pastor, who had consented to preach the jubilee sermon. "People ask me, too," he said, "if I believe in Harrison. They might as well ask me if I believe in the noonday sun. Under the power of his ministry two of my children were brought to God. One of them is now dead. Of Brother Harrison's converts it may be said that they all stick. I have known him for years, and I never knew of a backslider....Let us form a conspiracy, brethren, not to rest till we have converted the world."

Mr. Harrison made a short address after Dr. Talmage had concluded. He said:—"Last night the proprietor of a prominent hotel in Broadway broke an engagement to a card party to come to this meeting. He had been here before. He was converted. His wife had been here before. She was converted. They found God here last night. They went home, and there at midnight they two began a prayer-meeting in one of the rooms of the hotel alone by themselves. Two guests dropped in to see what they were about, and were converted. Then an actress came in to find out what they were shouting for, and she was converted. I have the cards of all, here in my hand. They sent them round to me to-day. And they are probably in this house praising God."

The meetings will be continued indefinitely. They continue to attract immense throngs, and the remarkable interest seems unabated.

[A different estimate of Mr. Harrison's work has been expressed in other quarters, and we shall be specially obliged by further particulars from other sources.—ED.]

For the Young.

A VISIT TO A PLAYROOM.

EVERY Wednesday evening you may see a little crowd of children clustering round the iron gates of the Lambeth Ragged School, a large stone building in one of the poorest parts of Lambeth. All the boys and girls of the neighbourhood know the "Ragged," as they familiarly call the place, where kind friends try hard to help them, teaching them about the "Friend for little children" on Sundays, holding meetings during the week, providing food and clothes for the poorest in winter, and in the summer arranging pleasant country visits for ailing children who droop in unwholesome courts as flowers would droop in a hot close room; and once a year giving all the scholars who attend regularly a delightful holiday, that is really and truly a "treat" to them all.

But, much as the children love the "Ragged," and value all its meetings, Wednesday evening is the favourite gathering of the youngest scholars, for then they come to the Infants' Playroom. Boys and girls who read this paper in happy homes, rich in many blessings, cannot guess how the neglected children of dreary, often wicked, homes, who have no playground but the streets, so full of dangers to body and soul, look forward to the rare pleasure of playing with nice toys in a warm bright room, on this one evening, too often the brightest in their week.

The time for opening is six o'clock, but the eager children come very early—one little girl has even been known to wait on the steps from half past two! So, when the doors are at last opened, you can fancy how gladly the little feet patter upstairs, and what bright faces answer "teacher's" smile of welcome. They sit quietly in the gallery while a hymn is sung, and then half of them go with some teachers into the toy-room, while the rest play such merry games as "Blind Postman," "My Lady's Toilet," "Here we go round the Mulberry Bush," until half time, when they change places with the quieter party in the toy-room, where there are treasures that the children positively love. Trumpets, tops, balls, puzzles, reins, and a large rocking-horse for the boys; Noah's Ark, dolls' rooms, a doll's house, dolls of all sorts and sizes, and a much-admired doll's tea service, with real tea, sugar, &c., for the girls.

How happy they are! Forgetting with childish readiness the many trials which cloud their young lives, they play with the greatest zest. Dolls' houses are arranged in grand style—saucepans on the drawing-room mantelpiece, couches and sideboards on tables, and bedroom furniture in the kitchen, for these poor children come from wretched homes, and hardly know by name furniture that we use every day. Boys ride by turns on the wooden horse, until they grow so fond of it, that it is hard to say goodbye for a whole week, and some of the youngest boys drop tears into Neddy's stubbly mane. Little girls sit round the fire dressing and undressing dolls, with many kisses and loving hugs, and frequent exclamations of "Oh, I wish this dear dolly was mine to keep!"

But the evening flies all to quickly for the happy children. At a quarter past seven they are told to put away their toys, and busy little hands wash the tea service, and pack the boxes. Now and then regret at leaving the playthings tempts them to dishonesty, but this is very seldom, while the teachers are often delighted to see unselfishness, self-denial and generosity, that some richer children would do well to imitate.

One little lad will rock the horse for other boys a whole evening, without taking a single ride himself; and a dear child named Minnie, who is seven years old, always brings her baby brother and looks after him like a little mother, seeming quite satisfied if Joey is happy. And Minnie cares for other little ones too, for she will sometimes beg to leave her own play that she may nurse some little trot who is sleepy. If given cakes or sweets, most of the boys and girls save them to share at home, and they are nearly always kind to the very tiny ones.

Before leaving, they are again seated in the gallery, some well-known hymn is sung, and a friend prays in simple words that the smallest child can understand, and very regretfully they go home, beginning already to talk about "next Wednesday," while the teachers who have been happy in making their scholars' happiness go away also wishing that rich boys and girls could see these needy ones.

Surely some young disciples of the Lord Jesus who read this page can help the school. You can pray for God's blessing on the work, you can send toys, clothing, or money, to the secretary, Mr. Nicholls, 106, Leathwaite-road, S.W., and helping these ragged children will be doing something for the loving Saviour in the person of these little ones. M. JENNIE STREET.

MOTHER IS "GOAL."

"The weather is cross," the children say,
"Or else forgets it's a holiday."
Down in torrents, the cold rain pours,
No chick or child may peep out of doors.

Good little scholars the school week through,
On Saturday pant for something to do,
And when the sport begins to flag
What is so fine as a game of tag.

Over the carpets go nimble feet,
Boyish laughter peals loud and sweet,
"Mother is goal," the racers cry,
To mother in turn the racers fly.

Dear little sons, in life's real race,
When hardest you struggle to win your place,
Pressed by pursuers that mean you ill,
"Mother is goal" be your watchword still.

—Mary D. Bruce, in "St. Nicholas."

BUBBLES.*

A child with the face of an angel fair
Watching a bubble ascend on the air,
O'er the golden curls of his bright young head,
As upward and onward its way it sped,
While the hues that blend on the wild dove's throat
With the tints of the rainbow within it float:
"O nothing so fair on this earth can roam,"
Said the child; "'twill rise to the Angels' Home."

But just as he watched with those earnest eyes
That were blue and clear as the summer skies,
When fairest and brightest its beauty shone,
It burst, and the vision of light was gone.
O child, not in heaven it had its birth
Its beauty was drawn from the things of earth,
And each earthly joy that thy heart shall chase
Will vanish and leave but a vacant space.

DEACON ABRAHAM AND HIS ORPHANAGES.—Mr. H. Tasker, of Brookside, Andover, Hants, has just issued a pamphlet, in which a deeply interesting account is given of Deacon Abraham and his work among the Nestorians at Geog Tapa, Ooroomiah, Persia. Many supporters of the Orphanages will be glad to possess this pamphlet, which is embellished with several illustrations.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

THE report for the past year is full of facts of an instructive and cheering character. The extent of the Society's operations may be indicated by a few figures: donations and subscriptions, £11,982; places supplied with preachers, 1101; number of meetings held, 20,301; estimate aggregate attendance, about 3,000,000; number of evangelists who have taken meetings, 220.

Captain William E. Smith, honorary secretary of the Society (21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.), thus speaks in the report:—

"We have always maintained that the Gospel, and the Gospel alone, is all that is needed to meet the wants of this half-heathen country. And more strongly than ever do we, at the end of our twentieth year of experience of its power and attractiveness, maintain this. From all parts of the country the testimony is the same, that the people come willingly to hear the Gospel, the unadorned Gospel, when it is preached within their comprehension. And as to the results there is no disappointment, when we are content to leave the Word of God to bear fruit, and do not seek to know prematurely which seed has germinated and which is lying dormant. Often where we see the least result at the time, the work is the deepest.

"It is a great condescension of the Lord to use our gifts. How many are there who can help in his work by their gifts who are precluded from much direct mission work in their ways? Every meeting costs on an average twelve shillings. We hold about twenty thousand meetings in the course of the year, and we need about £1000 every month if the work is to be carried on at the present rate.

"Now, at the beginning of this, our twenty-first year, we again invite all who care for the Gospel, and who believe in its power, to help us with their gifts; the rich with large gifts, the poor with small gifts, that, month by month, we may be able to send the messengers of salvation to those who are still ignorant of, or indifferent to, God's wonderful love in the gift of his Son."

The following is one of many striking incidents given in the report:—

"At one of the tent meetings there was a man who entered rather the worse for drink. As he behaved ill, the preacher turned him out. He retired to the neighbouring public-house and told how he had been treated at the tent. A man well known in all that district as a pugilist and a very great drunkard was present, and heard the first man's complaints. 'I will go up to the tent myself,' said he, 'and see whether he'll turn me out.' He went in, fully intending to create a disturbance; but he was interested by what he heard, and waited to hear more. He listened with ever-increasing interest and wonder to the end of the meeting, having no longer any desire to make a disturbance. He came again the next night, and it was soon clear that the Holy Spirit was working in his heart. He never missed a meeting; he gave up the drink; he yielded his heart to the Lord. It was impossible that such a remarkable work of grace should not become known. It was notorious in the district, and many people came from miles round to hear a man whose preaching had changed even such a fellow as the pugilist."

SOMERSET SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY.—The object of this Society is to employ lay Scripture readers throughout the county of Somerset, and but for its existence many of the people would never have Gospel truths brought under their notice. The thirty-seventh annual report shows that owing to the removal and death of liberal supporters, the income last year was considerably reduced, and unless additional funds are soon forthcoming, the number of readers will have to be lessened.

FROM FAR CATHAY.

A CHINESE LAY MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—During a recent visit to Hankow, I had the pleasure of attending a meeting held in the Wesleyan Native Chapel to take leave of six brethren (three English and three Chinese) of the Central China Wesleyan Lay Mission. who were about to start into the interior. These men will preach the Gospel, selling books and visiting the homes of native Christians who live in the country; holding where it is possible to do so cottage meetings, hoping thus to draw together the neighbours and friends of Christians who throw their houses open for these meetings. The brethren go two and two, and will in the course of their journeys cover between them about half of the Hupet Province. They hope to repeat such visits three or four times in the year, each journey occupying about two months; they will thus also be able to follow up to their homes any natives who appeared interested in the Gospel preached in the Hankow city chapel, which is daily attended by numbers of country folk.

The need of men to follow up the results of this daily preaching has been long felt, and the members of the "Lay Mission" are beginning to supply this want. I hope any who are desirous to obtain information as to this Mission, whether with a view to joining it or not, will apply to Dr. Moulton, The Leys Cambridge; or to Mr. J. R. Hill, St. Saviourgate, York, who will be happy to supply all details. H.

A LARGE PARISH.

I feel it my privilege to write you, giving thanks for THE CHRISTIAN, which I have now regularly received for some time. Reading its pages is very refreshing, especially to one whose lot is cast very much alone in a heathen land. Last year I was seven months and did not see a European face. During that time I was nearly four months without a mail, and also dangerously ill part of the time. There were also Chinese living in the same courtyard, so that privacy outside the door was impossible, and I had not then entered into the privilege of outdoor preaching in China, not being very fluent in the language. I have now been two months alone, but am very differently situated, enjoying good health, have obtained most commodious premises with large yard, engaged regularly in preaching Christ, and already have seen the first-fruit. I was nearly four months without a mail when I received my last, which came by special messenger from T'ai-yüen Fu, so that on its arrival I had a good batch of letters and a lot of papers which will keep me going for some time to come; only those who have had the experience know what it is when living alone in an inland station to receive news from the homeland.

I am not far from Mongolia, and I hear a voice saying continually, "Come over and help us," but I cannot go, I may sometime in the future see my way opened to do something in leading them to Christ. I have here a very large parish. It is about seventeen days' journey to Kwei-hua-ching, twenty-seven to T'ai-yüen Fu, sixteen to T'sin-chou, and twelve to Lanchou. In each of those places we have mission stations, but between each there are stations to be opened. We may safely pray the Lord of the harvest to thrust out labourers, and thank the Lord we can confidently affirm He will hear us. Through the kindness of Mr. G. B. Studd, I have been enabled to put up an Opium Refuge, which I pray will be used greatly in the salvation of many souls. As we retain them a month, this not only gives time to establish their health, but also to give them a practical view of Christianity, and instil its truths into them. I would ask you to help me in prayer in this work; when the ice is broken I am expecting many will avail themselves of the help they can obtain here.

I am daily expecting a helper in the work, for whilst I am willing, if it be the Father's will, to labour on alone, yet, as a rule, I don't think it is the best. But, wherever God calls a man to live, there He can gloriously sustain Him, causing him to triumph through Christ.—I remain, your brother in Christ,

NEWS FROM MOROCCO.

PIONEERING.

MISS CALEY and myself are about to start on our first visit to Fez. I want to settle there next winter. The Governor is averse to Christians residing there even temporarily. It was a very fanatical place. We shall scarcely dare appear in the streets unless veiled in large white woollen shawls like the Moorish women. We long in going there now to get a firm footing for ourselves, and a warm reception for our message.

Fez is an important city, six days' ride from here, going about eight hours a day at a walking pace, mounted on our pack mules. The difficulties and dangers of travel are great, there are no roads, many rivers with no bridges; most have to be forded, our animals nearly swimming at times; sometimes we are obliged to dismount, and encamp to wait for the swollen stream to subside. Highway robbers abound; but I think the marshes are our worst enemies; these are common, and we are obliged to struggle through them. During our journey we shall distribute portions of Scripture to people whom we meet. We have had great encouragement in the past as to the blessing received through thus distributing the Scriptures in various languages. A Moor, whom we believe to be converted, accompanies us, and purposes to help us in reading the Arabic Bible in the villages. My principal object in writing this is to beg your prayers for Fez and Mequinez. This last city is only eight hours from Fez. We propose returning to Larache in about a month by way of Mequinez, and giving books there also. EMMA HERDMAN,

North Africa Mission.

Larache, Morocco.

"IN PERILS OFT."

We hear from Rev. E. F. Baldwin that he has returned from Fez, and has left Tangier with his family for Mogador, where they would have arrived last week. During the journey from Fez they were in constant perils of rivers, robbers, &c.; they had a mule stolen, but recovered it after several days. Muley Hasham, who was baptized more than a year ago, they found bright and true, and have taken him to Mogador.

At El Kasar, Mr. Baldwin saw El Hassan, who is also true at heart, but obliged to keep silent. "He had made friends with a Roman Catholic there, and had told him how the Protestant missionaries prayed, and these two almost daily for months prayed together. El Hassan has gone on to Tangier to be baptized, and to see if he cannot remain there, away from El Kasar, where he has been arrested, publicly flogged, imprisoned, starved, and cruelly persecuted. We have heard that he was again arrested the day after we left because of his intercourse with us; but he was released after being threatened."

THE BELLEVILLE MISSION.—A correspondent reports the commencement of an evangelistic effort by Miss de Broen and her helpers at Romainville, a village in the neighbourhood of Paris. At the meeting described there was a very fair attendance of working people, who listened attentively to the testimony of the speakers. It is hoped that a good work will be done in this outlying suburb of the gay city.

CHILDREN AND BETTING.

The other day, as I walked across the St. Philip's Churchyard, Birmingham, I saw a tiny lad of seven or eight crying bitterly, and another boy, about a year older, was trying to comfort him. They were both very scantily clad, and as the younger one wore neither shoes nor cap, and his bare purple skin could be seen through the huge rents in the nondescript garment which served him for a jacket, I thought it was the fierce north-east wind that made the youngster cry. I went to them, determined to help them both to, at the least, a solid warming meal. "What's the matter, my lad?" I asked. I got no reply. The older boy, who, I perceived, was a match-seller, for he had several boxes of matches in his hand, shook the younger by the shoulder and said contemptuously, "Stow it, ye babby!" It was some little time before I could get an answer to my question from either boy. Eventually the bigger one said, "'E's a cryin' 'cause 'is father give'n a shill'n' to git some lights to sell, an' 'e's bin an' put'n on a 'oss as is gone wrong, an' 'e'll git it 'ot w'en 'e gits 'ome."

Poor little chap! He had copied the vicious practice, and had early got the customary experience of disaster, common amongst many of his elders and betters. I found the only ideals on the subject of betting which the two boys had were, "that everything depended on luck," "that luck is sure to change anyhow," and that "it ain't bad to back a 'oss, 'cause the p'leece can't cop ye for it."

It is time the little ones were taught the immorality of betting, and the fearful consequences of its practice. They learn that practice with surprising precocity at a very early age. They are impregnated with the vice at the very threshold of life. They grow up to be the pallid, restless, fretful, and reckless idlers who swarm in the streets of our cities and great towns, and swell the numbers of the unemployed, to the hurt of the worthy but workless men. Betting is the circling whirl of a maelstrom which increases in velocity as it nears the vortex where its victims are sucked down to destruction. The course of its gyrations is marked by all manner of sin and crime.

A more strenuous endeavour should be made than has hitherto been the case to save the children from the temptation of this vice. It is amongst the children that it must be fought, as the drink question has been fought in our Bands of Hope. An anti-betting pledge should be circulated in every Sunday-school, and in every Band of Hope. Private endeavours are being made, doubtless, to fight this pernicious vice of betting, but the time has come for some organised effort. Those who are willing to unite for this purpose are invited to send their name and address to me, to the care of the Editor of The Christian. J. H.

CHINA.—Mr. David Evans, agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in a letter from Ping-Yang-Fu, Shansi, North China, to Mr. R. Burn, of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., states that several missionaries have already gone forth from the church presided over by Mr. Stanley Smith and Mr. Hoste. Two native missionaries recently passed Mr. Evans's station to go to the Honan province.

MATCH FACTORY GIRLS.—On Thursday, last week, a social tea was given to over 250 of these girls, at the Institute of the North-east London Gospel Mission, Devon's-road, Bow. Gospel addresses followed, mostly from ladies. As the result, there were as many as thirty girls taken out of the room, all more or less betraying tearful emotion. These were prayerfully dealt with upstairs, while the meeting went on below. The Institute is open three evenings per week, and entails considerable expense. Mr. Chorley has also just taken another set of premises in the Ball's Pond-road, for a Factory Girls' Institute for the north of London. His address is 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, London, N.

LONDON NIGHT CABMEN.

A few Christian ladies took up the cause of the night cabmen of London some years since, and engaged two Christian men in connection with the City Mission who were willing to forego the ordinary comforts of a night's rest, and visit the cab-stands to give the night cabmen a word of sympathy and cheer. In this way the men learn first the practical sympathy of their fellows, for the missionaries relieve the wants of the destitute, and take scarfs and helmets, kitted by ladies, for them. Secondly they learn of the great love of Christ the Redeemer. Many of these poor fellows have sunk so low from poverty or from sin that nothing but personal ministration would convince them of God's great love. As the night visitors come, with their kind, cheering words, to read and explain the Bible to a group, under a station lamp, or outside a theatre, telling them of full forgiveness, and a beautiful "life to come," their attention is arrested. The missionaries take the addresses of the sick, and visit them with little presents of tea, &c., from those interested in the work. The funds are just now insufficient to carry on the work, and a little assistance is desired from those who are willing to show sympathy with these toilers in the cold and dark.

Mrs. Herbert, 1, Marine-terrace, Silloth, Cumberland, will supply copies of an interesting little report of the work to any who may wish to see what the Mission has been doing in past years. Sophia May.

A MISSION IN RAJPOOTANA.

Referring to the brief notice under this heading in a recent issue, Rev. James Buchanan, Foreign Missionary Secretary of the U.P. Church, Edinburgh, writes:—

The United Presbyterian Church had selected Rajpootana as the field of its missionary operations in India, and had missionaries at work in Ajmere and several other stations long before a railway in the province had even been talked of. Now, from Ajmere as a centre, a missionary may easily travel 16,000 miles to visit out-stations along the line of railway; but the United Presbyterian Church has resident missionaries at the principal native capitals and centres of population on the line—Jeypore, Ulwar, Nusserabad, Beawar, and Joohpore; while the Malwa branch, if the itinerant's course should lie along it, traverses the field of the Canadian Presbyterian Mission—Neemuch, Indore, and Mhow.

In the town of Ajmere, with a population of a little over 50,000 (not 80,000 as stated), there have been two United Presbyterian missionaries for most of the time since the station was occupied—twenty-six years ago. In connection with the mission there have long been in Ajmere, several boys' and girls' schools (in addition to Government schools and college), male and female dispensaries, an orphanage, so long as there was need for one, zenana work, a mission church, with native congregation, English services, &c.

SAILORS' REST, NAPLES.—The steady development of the seamen's cause at Naples has necessitated the taking of larger premises by Mr. Stephen Burrowes, and on the 26th inst. the new Home and Institute will be opened at No. 15, Flavia Goija. When the new Rest is fully equipped, efforts will be made to start a Gospel Mission for the natives, and to promote colportage. All papers and letters for the Rest should be directed to the new address.

THE WORDLESS BOOK.—Some fourteen years ago I brought out the "Wordless Book." Its history is full of interest, especially with regard to the addition of the gold page. I should be glad to hear from any who know of blessing resulting from the book. I have already been much encouraged by tidings of good being done through its instrumentality in many parts, and also greatly cheered by watching its spread and circulation. Will your readers kindly inform me of any incidents that have come before their notice in connection with it?

THE BOMBAY Y.M.C.A.

Mr. Henry Conder, president of this Y.M.C.A., writes respecting a paragraph from The Union Signal which appeared in our columns on March 16. On the statement that he refused to permit Mrs. Leavitt to speak in the Association Rooms, either upon temperance or purity, he says:—"There must be some unaccountable mistake, for I said, when referred to on the subject in December last, that Mrs. Leavitt could have the use of the rooms for meetings, on the usual terms for such approved meetings." Mr. Conder also observes that it was suggested at the time that the Y.M.C.A. should take the matter up and arrange for the meetings, but he replied to this that, as the Association had not engaged in temperance work, he thought it would be better for Mrs. Leavitt's friends to arrange the meetings. He adds: "Mrs. Leavitt was then a stranger to me, and I did not, at the time, know that she was a speaker upon any subject except temperance, and certainly purity was not then even mentioned. But a meeting of the Temperance Association was held in the Y.M.C.A. rooms during her stay in Bombay, and Mrs. Leavitt spoke at that meeting. This fact is not mentioned in the extract which you have quoted from her letter."

With reference to the statement that "Mr. Dyer, of England, so well known in the Purity reform, was also refused the hall recently," Mr. Conder says: "That, too, must be a mistake, for, so far as I know, and so far as the secretaries, whom I have asked about the matter, know, no request was ever made for the use of the rooms by Mr. Dyer, or on his behalf."

Again, replying to the allegation that "amusements resembling the theatre, and those of the darkey minstrel sort, have been allowed," Mr. Conder says: "There must about this also be a mistake; there is no foundation whatever for any such statement." As to the remark that the young men were so indignant at the actual state of affairs that they would "choose another president at the New Year," Mr. Conder says that in the month of February last he was again unanimously elected president.

LITERATURE FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

Dear Sir,—It has been brought before us that the number of young women coming to London who fall an easy prey to the sceptical literature now so widely diffused, is painfully great. Those living more or less independent lives, such as art students, teachers, and those attending colleges, meet continuously with infidels and agnostics whose influence on their perhaps hitherto untested faith has fatal effects. In a measure this is the result of not sufficiently preparing young women by previous definite instruction to withstand the intellectual temptations by which they are assailed in every class in life.

Recognising this danger, we propose to meet it thus. The Council of the Young Women's Christian Association have established a Christian Evidence Department, by means of which simple and clear teaching will be imparted on the fundamental truths of Christianity. The course of study for this year will be based on the books adopted by the Bishop of Bath and Wells in his diocese for the same purpose.* Examination papers on the subjects studied will be prepared and issued annually to those who join. As these books are historical and literary rather than metaphysical, they will be available for all, and it is hoped that class teachers will set apart days when the subjects can be discussed with their members.

Arrangements are being made to hold lectures in different centres; and the promised co-operation of the Christian Evidence Society does much to insure success.

We shall be very glad to communicate with any high school or private school who may desire to form classes, and to assist them in any way to organise. We also purpose to correspond with any isolated young women who would like to join in the study, and to enroll them as scattered members.

Your faithful servant, Kinnaird,

A GREAT PUBLIC MEETING

To demand from Lord Cross, the Indian Secretary of State, the instantaneous and unconditional abolition of the system of State Provided Vice in India,

WILL BE HELD IN

EXETER HALL, STRAND, LONDON,
On FRIDAY EVENING, May 18,

Under the auspices of the Gospel Purity Association.

Mrs. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER;
Mrs. HENRY RICHARDSON, of York;
Mrs. M. BAXTER, of Bethshan;
PROFESSOR JAMES STUART, M.P.;
JOSHUA ROWNTREE, Esq., M.P.;
Sir JAMES ERASMUS PHILLIPS (Vicar of Warminster);
Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES, M.A.,
Editor of The Methodist Times;
R. C. MORGAN, Esq., Editor of The Christian;
Mr. JAMES B. WOOKEY,
AND OTHERS, WILL ADDRESS THE MEETING.

Doors open at 7.0. The Chair will be taken at 7.30 o'clock, by
F. W. CROSSLEY, Esq., J.P., of Manchester,

Supported by Missionaries, Clergy, and Ministers of all denominations.

It is also intended to invite a number of the Indian Bishops to be present and speak. The whole of the Bishops of the Indian Empire have lately strongly memorialised the Indian Government against the continuance of this iniquity. They are expected to be in London in time for the meeting, for the purpose of attending the Pan-Anglican Conference about to be held.

A limited number of seats in the body of the Hall will be reserved price 1s. each. for which early application should be made to Mr. Joseph Joyce (Secretary of the Department of the Gospel Purity Association for the Abolition of State Regulated Vice). 31, Paternoster-square, London, E.C.. who will also be glad to supply notices of the meeting and copies of Mr. Dyer's letters gratis for distribution.

Consisting of a Choice Assortment of New Pieces, with an approved Selection of Standard Hymns.

309 HYMNS AND TUNES; IN ONE VOLUME.

"This book is beautifully got-up. We casually opened upon what may be called 'a Standard Hymn,' headed with that precious portion, 'The Redeemed of the Lord shall Return,' and 'Come with Singing unto Zion.' In glancing through the work, we find it abounds with well-known hymns; hence it cannot but find a welcome to many a singing family."—Gospel Magazine.

"Three hundred and nine more Songs and Hymns, mostly of the same class as the former ones, with the addition of a few Standard Hymns and Tunes. We also recognise some from the 'Christian Choir.' The collection will, no doubt, be readily welcomed wherever its predecessor is found. And where is it that it is not found? It is almost an omnipresent book."

WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING? OR,
The Progress of England Rome-wards.

By the Right Hon. LORD ROBERT MONTAGU,

Author of "Recent Events—and a Clue to Their Solution;" "Reasons for Leaving the Romish Church;" &c., &c.

"Some Ritualists know very well whither they are tending; and are, as it were, the agents of Rome to bring over the Church of England. I do not address them; for it would be useless. Some who become Ritualists do so—because it is, alas! the fashion; because the Bishops favour Ritualism and the Government promotes it. I do not speak to them. There are some who become Ritualists from a love of antiquity; but also with a hope of greater spirituality, and with a sincere desire to get nearer to God. I address myself to THEM, and beg to consider with me whither are they tending. I sympathise with them; for I felt a strong desire for more spirituality in religion, and once deemed that it would be found in the Roman Church."

MAY MEETINGS.

British and Foreign Bible Society.

FOR many years there has not been such a large audience at the annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society as assembled at Exeter Hall on Wednesday morning, last week. This was the eighty-fourth anniversary, and, while it appears as if the older the Society gets the stronger it also becomes, it was certainly made clear that those who have the ordering of the Society's affairs endeavour in all things to recognise that their sufficiency is of God, for whom alone they work in the special and important sphere which is open to them. There were many dignitaries, clergymen, and ministers, on the platform and in the body of the hall.

An abstract of the report was read by Rev. JOHN SHARP, secretary. The gigantic proportions of the Society's operations may be judged from two figures: 4,206,032 Bibles, Testaments, and portions were issued during the year, a larger number than ever before; and the expenditure of the year amounted to £224,823. The report told of much that was cheering as to work in many lands, on the one hand showing that new avenues are constantly being opened, and on the other hand relating cases of spiritual enlightenment through the reading of the Scriptures.

The EARL OF HARROWBY, president of the Society, occupied the chair, and, in a speech full of lively interest, eulogised the objects, and explained the methods of the Society. It is true, as people say, that the Society is "a great organisation for selling cheap Bibles," but it is also much more, as it has agencies all over the globe for the dissemination of the Scriptures. The Society not only sells Bibles at cost price, and below cost price, but it helps many other organisations and institutions, and there is hardly a missionary society at work to-day that would be able to keep along without the books which the Bible Society places within easy reach. The speaker concluded by saying: Anyone who does not believe in the Bible will, of course, regard all our zeal and efforts as mistaken and misdirected, and accordingly all in vain. But we ourselves are more and more confident that the Bible has a mission from God, and we cannot but treat it more and more as God's Book. A late Continental agent of the Society, just before his death, well said: "The Bible has made my heart happy, and my life's work both delightful and useful; it has made my house cheerful, and my family united; it has made my present joyous, and my future glorious." It is with the object of enabling all the nations of the world to share in these experiences that the Bible Society has worked hitherto, and, in order to continue its operations, it appeals with confidence for Christian help, and prays for the blessing of Almighty God.

The LORD CHANCELLOR delivered a vigorous speech in assertion of the Divine authority of the Bible. He declared that he had no liberality for those who display their doubts in the Christian pulpit, and maintained that the real remedy for the prevalent sentimental mixture of the Buddhist religion with a religion which he found himself unable definitely to denominate, is the greater diffusion of the Bible. While, however, he would hold no terms with those who, professing to teach the Gospel of Christ, are really doing all in their power to infuse doubts into the minds of men, he was for embracing, regardless of their special church association or particular form of faith, all who are engaged in proclaiming the simple Gospel of Christ.

The BISHOP OF AUCKLAND acknowledged the great assistance he had received from the Society in different spheres during a period of thirty years. He pointed out that by publishing the Old Testament as well as the New, the Society enabled people easily to study the continuity and harmony of Holy Scripture; and he went on to insist that, in view of the very common neglect of the Old Testament, greater attention should be paid to the subject of the unity of Divine revelation.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon was to have spoken; but, in a note to the chairman, he expressed deep regret that he was too unwell to collect his thoughts properly, and too weak to attend the meeting. The announcement caused deep regret, and an intimation by the chairman that the best wishes of the meeting should be conveyed to Mr. Spurgeon, was adopted with acclamation.

Prebendary EDMONDS "filled up the gap" thus occasioned, by delivering a highly instructive speech on the Society's work. He showed that by means of the Society the Church in these latter days has accomplished that to which the early Church devoted her best energies—the circulation of the Scriptures in the common languages of the people. From Antioch there went forth the Syriac Version, from Alexandria the Coptic, and from Constantinople the Gothic. From the very first the words of inspiration were presented to the world in the form of translations; in the middle ages, also, this was continued; and now it is being still vigorously carried on, attended by much blessing.

Rev. T. EYNON DAVIES spoke with evident pleasure of the great work the Society has done in Wales.

The Salvation Army.

Many of the May Meetings are prosy, not to say dull. That is not a charge that can be brought against our Salvation Army friends. One reason of this is their healthy contempt for programmes. The applause of the crowded assembly, at Exeter Hall last week, that greeted the entrance of General Booth and his suite, as they filed in, was in full blast when the General blew his whistle, and said, "Major Oliphant will pray two minutes; let us pray." The Major wasted no speech in preliminaries, and kept well within his time. Song and prayer followed till the audience had been pretty well warmed up. The General, in one of his interludes, remarked: "God Almighty must be sick of so much formality. Oh for reality... There are some here who would be filled with shame if the last page of their biography were written; thank God there is a chance for writing a few more pages." A black-skinned Indian Major prayed with much more fervour than elegance, but his petitions, and reflections addressed to God, evidently came red-hot from his heart, while his dusky fellow-countrymen and Mr. Tucker wrestled in agonising prayer, kneeling at the edge of the platform. The late Matthew Arnold once described religion as "morality touched by emotion." If he were still in the flesh, and had been present at Exeter Hall, he would probably not have felt there was any lack of the emotion. That, however, was not the view of the General, for he had to prompt the audience several times to greater abandonment of soul in prayer and song. It is a little awkward when an audience needs artificial stimulus in this respect.

In the course of his observations, Mr. BOOTH was very severe on those Christian communities who only go in for an occasional fortnight or month's "mission"—a soul-saving season, something like the oyster season. The Salvation Army goes in for a soul-saving season all the year round. As the chairman of directors of the "Great Salvation Company," Mr. Booth said it was always his privilege to report progress and prosperity, and good dividends. During the past year there have been, at the same time, many trials and difficulties; and one of these is the ever-recurring struggle to make ends meet. Mr. Tucker and his bride, notwithstanding their wedding gift of £5000, are to turn their honeymoon into a "moneymoon," for they are to hold meetings to raise further funds for the War in India. There have been persecutions in Switzerland as brutal as ever; and in this country there is still a good deal of it. The "smuggled clause" in the Torquay Harbour Act was of course unsparingly condemned, to the tune of cries of "Shame!" Another difficulty has been the venomous slanders by people who make a high religious profession; the propagation of these untruths is a scandal and a disgrace to the country, and alienates the sympathy of many. As to the Army being "a great money-making concern," that is certainly true, so far as relates to drunkard's wives, and the saving of public rates and taxes, but no further. The General found very sympathetic listeners when he referred to his personal affliction, in the illness of Mrs. Booth, who was, unhappily, unable to be present, though there are hopes of her ultimate recovery. Turning to the other side of the shield, Mr. Booth asserted that the Army has maintained its ground during the year with some few exceptions. In Great Britain, 135 new corps have been opened, and abroad 170 corps, making a grand existing total of 2378 posts, in thirty-one different countries, where the Army flag is now flying. In Norway, after five months' work, there are now four self-sustaining corps, with twelve officers, and a good Salvation work going on.

The war has been begun in the West Indies; at Jamaica 700 conversions were reported in four days. Mr. Booth hinted at some awful and unmentionable things done in Jamaica by British merchants, some of them of "noble" family, in the methods of propagating the coloured race, to satisfy their greed of gold. The statistics of illegitimacy in the island are dreadful, but now that the Salvation Army have commenced operations there is a perfect furore among the people hitherto living in sin to get married. In the Transvaal the authorities do not send the Army soldiers to prison for preaching, but allow them to go inside the prisons to preach to the prisoners. Why don't you make me the Home Secretary? exclaimed the General. I would take in hand the chaplaincy of all our home prisons and workhouses, and give the inmates a little more happiness at a very cheap rate. After a brief mention of Holland and Denmark, Mr. Booth said that in Germany they had the heaviest fight of all. The authorities will not sanction a meeting after a certain hour in the day, or the selling of The War Cry without a licence. Private meetings are being held, and souls saved. From other parts of the field more encouraging reports have come. An increase of 1180 salaried officers makes a grand total of 6217 Salvation Army clergymen and clergy women. Nearly half a million open-air meetings have been held during the year. This fact formed the text for a very rousing appeal as to the blessed effects of these Gospel "rings." The remarkable development of the slum work and the rescue work was ground for another sounding note of praise; though little has been done compared with the overwhelming need. The recent departure for providing food and shelter is a great boon to thousands; it is very nearly self-supporting. Twenty of these hungry folk per week are going to the penitent form. As to the finances, the General had also to report progress. For the future, there is to be a large extension of the food and shelter scheme all over London; of the slum work, by the formation of a nursing sisterhood; and the establishment of a "property help" fund. To help in inaugurating this, one friend has promised £15,000, and if £5000 more is given the scheme will be fairly floated. The General spoke for about an hour, but the interest never seemed to flag for an instant.

After the collection, and a hideously wooden song with tom-tom accompaniment from the Orientals, an interesting testimony was given by a converted chief of the "Buddhist Army," started in Ceylon in opposition to the Salvationists. Then Commissioner TUCKER told of marked advances in India during the year. He had travelled from end to end of India, and his testimony was that the Army had now the ear of the whole people—Mohammedan, Buddhist, and Christian alike. Founded on the successes already achieved, he made a strong appeal for more consecrated workers. Mrs. Tucker followed her husband with a pathetic and powerful address in the same line, her voice and manner reminding one wonderfully both of her mother and her older sister. She called for instant and unreserved devotion to Christ and his cause. A touching little story was told of an old woman she met, whose daughter had joined the Army, and had won forty souls at her first station. The aged mother, with a heavenly look on her face, said she felt as if she had been "a-seekin' and a-savin' of 'em herself." Some further Indian testimony was attempted, but the meeting showed signs of speedy disintegration, and the General brought the meeting to a close without even calling on Mr. T. A. Denny for one of his usual sympathetic little speeches.

Sunday-school Union.

The annual Conference of the Sunday-school Union, held at 56, Old Bailey, on May 2 and 3, was of unusual interest. About 120 delegates were present the first day, and over 200 the second. From the interesting and important subjects brought forward for consideration, we may mention several questions upon which the Convention laid great stress.

Mr. G. N. Ford, of Manchester, as chairman of the first session, said they had grounds for congratulation in the manifestation of God's blessing, and in the fact that missionary zeal is re-kindling. On the other hand, their Continental work do not get hold of the schools as they wished.

Delegates from Sweden and Germany spoke of the progress of the work in their countries. They thanked the Union for the impetus given to Continental work by sympathy and prayer, and asked for a continuance of the same. Mr. J. Clark, of Norwich, in a paper on "How Local Unions can best help the Mission," said that if every teacher would give one shilling and every scholar one penny to the Continental work, they could raise about £12,000. In Norwich this plan had been a great success.

Rev. F. E. Clark, who had the day before arrived from Boston, Mass., received a hearty welcome. He came for the purpose of placing the history, need, and work of the Society of Christian Endeavour before the Convention. He said there was felt to be a great need in America of something of this kind to keep young men and women interested in the work of the church. Young people were leaving the Sunday-school without joining the church. This Society fills the gaps. It is in the closest relation to the church, and has in its constitution safeguards against drawing away from the church. Another real danger is that young people are apt to grow up as idle Christians, unless something definite and particular is given them to do. This Society gives them definite lines of work. Mr. Clark briefly sketched the duties of the following Committees:—"Look-out," "Prayer-meeting," "Social," and "Sunday-school," which are deemed essential; while the "Temperance," "Missionary," and "White Cross" are useful in large cities. The Society has infused new life into the prayer-meeting. Mr. Clark spoke of the monthly consecration-meeting, of the pledge taken by members, and other interesting features. There are over 4000 known societies in America, and it is probable that 400,000 young people are connected with them. It is not pretentious; it is simply a Society of "Christian Endeavour." Questions on various features of the work were asked Mr. Clark, and it was the opinion of many that this Society could be worked in connection with the Christian Bands of this country, the latter being adapted to children.

Mr. Wm. A. Smith, of Glasgow, read a paper on "The Boys' Brigade," showing the methods of work, the influences brought to bear on the boys, and the good results accomplished. In a warm discussion which followed, some speakers thought the drilling given the boys might awaken the martial spirit. Mr. Smith said he knew of no case where this had occurred, and that if any should join the volunteers they might exert a good influence, where it is much needed.

Papers were also read on "The influence of the Sunday-school upon the homes of the scholars," "How to utilise the country representation more completely," "Adult Classes," and the "Temperance Question;" each was followed by an earnest discussion. The proceedings throughout were enthusiastic and earnest. The spirituality of the Convention was very marked. The proceedings were interspersed by much prayer and praise. The new zeal received will reach the superintendents and teachers of many Sunday-schools, and we may look for greater progress in the Sunday-school work in the future. The papers and discussions will be fully reported in The Sunday School Chronicle.

South American Missionary Society.

The Archbishop of York presided over the thirty-seventh annual meeting of this Society, which was held on Friday last, at Exeter Hall. An abstract of the annual report was read by Rev. R. J. Simpson, clerical secretary. Encouraging progress has been made in several important centres.

In the course of an address full of sympathy with the work of the Society, the Archbishop remarked that there has lately been a tendency to disparage missionary activity, and to represent it as unnecessary, if not undesirable. How can we, he asked, have a religion without missions? The very idea is absurd. In order to illustrate the need and power of the Gospel as preached by missionaries, he pointed to the Fiji Islands, where the descendants of cannibals are now "sitting, clothed, and in their right mind."

Rev. E. A. Stuart made a stirring speech. He held that missionary work should be the glory of the Church of Christ, since it had the special commendation of the Lord Jesus, and was ever nearest his heart. The Earl of Aberdeen and others also spoke, and the proceedings were cordial throughout.

The Church Army.

The anniversary of this organisation was celebrated on Wednesday, last week, in Prince's Hall, Piccadilly. It was reported that the number of evangelists is 160, an increase of fifty-five on the year. More men have been sent to Canada, especially to the province of Nova Scotia, where the Army is now a recognised institution. Good work was also reported from India and Australia. It was announced that the 12,000 workers of the organisation are all total abstainers.

In the afternoon the Bishop of Marlborough presided, and in the course of a hearty address pointed out that the Army is designed to supplement and enlarge parochial life. Referring to the work of the mission nurses, part of the organisation of the Army, he appealed strongly for help, saying that there is nothing more useful or beneficial then these women going in and out of the cottages, ministering as only women can to the temporal and spiritual wants of the poor. In conclusion, he eulogised the Army's operations, as characterised by zeal, order, and economy.

The evening meeting, described as a "consecration convention on the evangelisation of the world," was presided over by the Dean of Ripon, who gave some account of his own work among the colliers, and said that he thought a peculiar dignity attached to all efforts made to reach the lowest classes. The claims of India, and also of China and Ceylon, were considered by Mr. Swann Hurrell and Mr. G. B. Studd, both of whom have just returned from the scenes of which they spoke.

Miss Weston's Work.

Canon Fleming presided over the annual meeting held last week, in Exeter Hall, in connection with the work carried on in the Navy by Miss Agnes Weston, "the sailors' friend." In his opening speech he pointed out that, for the honour of the English national name, nothing is more important than that the Navy should be a sober one. Miss Weston characterised the past year as one of heathful progress. She said that three agencies have been found, under God, to exercise a vast influence for good throughout the Navy; these are the Royal Naval Christian Union, the Royal Naval Temperance Society, and the Royal Naval Purity Society. At Devonport, during 1887, over 1000 signed the pledge, while at the Sailors' Rest 167 evening services were held. attended by 92,600 sailors and marines. At 120 temperance meetings an attendance of 75,600 was secured. At Portsmouth 956 temperance pledges were taken. During the year every one of Her Majesty's ships was visited, and special work carried on amongst the boys. On the premises of the Rest there had been 70,900 sleepers, and now £10,000 for new buildings was wanted. As yet between £2000 and £3000 was in hand.

Addresses were also delivered by the Hon. Conrad Dillon and Mr. T. A. Denny.

Religious Tract Society.

The eighty-ninth anniversary meeting of this Society was held on Friday evening last, in Exeter Hall, Lord Balfour of Burleigh presiding. Some six hundred school children were ranged on the platform, and sang occasional pieces, under the direction of Mr. Joseph Proudman. There was a crowded audience; sympathy with the Society's objects and work may well account for the enthusiasm manifested in the meeting, but beyond question many persons made a special effort to attend because of the singing of the little ones, of whom it may be said that they seemed very happy as they went through their excellent programme.

Rev. Dr. Green, one of the secretaries of the Society, read an abstract of the report, which showed that business had been done on a colossal scale—all in literature, either of a purely religious or of a distinctly elevating character, in many languages, for all classes of people. The total circulation from home and foreign depôts was set down at 76,061,050. Not only was every penny of the money received from various sources for missionary purposes (£29,000). so devoted, but £12,500, furnished from trade profits, was also expended in grants of various kinds. The expenditure in the trade and grant departments reached the total of £208,000. The report was full of interesting details of the Society's operations.

The Chairman, in his address, declared himself much pleased with the Society's aims and methods, and said that he hoped, in the future, to be among its most fervent well-wishers. Rev. J. Piper, formerly of Japan, spoke of the great assistance rendered by the Society in the religious instruction of the great civilised heathen nations of the East. Rev. T. E. Davies followed with a speech in warm eulogy of the organisation. He maintained that the great privilege of furthering such a work ought to appeal strongly to Christian people. The Society has, he said, done much for Wales, and, by the way, he remarked that he had never seen or heard of a single book or tract in the Welsh language disloyal to Jesus Christ or the truth.

Canon Fleming, one of the hon. secretaries of the Society, delivered a thoughtful address. He said that we must not ignore the fact that there is much impure literature, and that there are books which directly or indirectly aim an assault on the vital truths of Christianity. He maintained that no Society had been permitted by God to do so much to overcome this evil with good as the Religious Tract Society, with its very useful "Present-day Tracts." In conclusion, the speaker mentioned that the Society has lately taken up temperance work.

Women's Temperance Union.

The East London Women's Christian Temperance Union celebrated its anniversary last week, and the goodly number of members who attended the meeting, in the Lecture Hall of the Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel, was greatly cheered by the account which was given of much earnest work during the past year. In the absence of the Viscountess Lymington, president of the Union, the chair was occupied by Mrs. Andrew Johnston. Mrs. Paddon, honorary secretary, spoke of the pressing need for greatly increased activity on the part of Christian women, so that the scandal of drunkenness among females may be reduced, if not altogether extinguished. She called upon women, as mothers, as sisters, and, above all, as Christians, to wage relentless war against the drinking habits. Mrs. Gregson, treasurer of the Union, also addressed the meeting, maintaining that, if the women of London would unite in one body, the closing of the public-houses might easily be accomplished, and, as a consequence, sin and misery would greatly decrease.

Some earnest words were also spoken by Mrs. Johnston, who held that the work of reformation must be completed by the Holy Spirit. Therefore she urged that Christ should be always preached to those who are asked to leave evil courses. Mrs. Penfold Cope delivered a short address, and altogether the proceedings were invigorating to the members of the Union.

Demoralisation of Native Races.

On Friday last the first annual meeting of the United Committee for the Prevention of the Demoralisation of Native Races by the liquor traffic was held in Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, the Bishop of Sodor and Man in the chair. The Committee is made up of gentlemen representing various Christian bodies, and its work is altogether unpolitical. The annual report was read by Rev. J. G. Mills. It stated that the Committee's work during the past year had been mainly one of investigation and vigilance. Much valuable information has been collected and circulated; and the actions of Governments have been watched, and, when practicable, representations have been made with a view to a mitigation of existing evils.

Canon Ellison, who has done much to direct the Committee's efforts in the proper channels, read a paper in explanation of the situation. Rev. W. Allan communicated the results of a recent visit to Sierra Leone and Lagos, giving many details of the way ardent spirits are introduced into West Africa, and also fearful particulars as to the evil consequences of the traffic. He said that in some places on the Niger the very soil may be described as consisting of gin bottles and spirit jars, the deadly and poisonous stuff having been eagerly taken by the natives, and to their physical and spiritual ruin. Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson having spoken of the baneful traffic in Madagascar, India, China, and the South Seas, Mr. S. J. Celestine Edwards, a native of Antigua, delivered a forcible address. He complained bitterly of the way England governs dependent races, and said that, in view of the fact that for thirty-five years agitation has been progressing in this country, but legislation in favour of temperance is still out of sight, there is very little hope for anything being done as yet for black peoples, of whom it may be said with sad truth that English and German merchants are doing their best to make them blacker than by nature they are. He asked British philanthropists to speak out, and make themselves heard in the House of Parliament. Bishop Crowther, from the Niger, Rev. H. M. Joseph, a coloured gentleman, from Canada, the Bishop of Waiapu, and Major Ferguson also took part in the discussion.

Ragged School Union.

The presence of the children always makes this anniversary fascinating and full of interest. People never tire of seeing a crowd of bonny, well-cared-for bairns, and hearing their sweet youthful voices lisp the Saviour's praise. On Monday evening last, at Exeter Hall, Mr. John Kirk, the earnest Secretary, had a very blessed story to tell, of thousands of little ones taken out of the waste, howling wilderness of raggeddom, and put into a wealthy place. They are clothed, fed, educated, trained in industrial occupations and handicrafts, and, best of all, led gently into the paths of holiness and peace. All sorts of things are done for them, so as to give them a fair start in life and erase the unhappy memories of the past.

It would be affectation to say that the place of the late lamented Earl of Shaftesbury is altogether filled by Lord Aberdeen, who is now president of the Union. At the same time, his heart is equally in the work, and his words on Monday evening were full of good cheer. As indicative of the deep solicitude he feels for the welfare of London's ragged children, he told how he had submitted the names of the prizetakers to Her Majesty, who expressed sympathy with the work. The prizes, to the number of 750 and consisting of books, were distributed by the fair hands of Lady Aberdeen, who also spoke kindly words to the children, and counselled them to show kindness to those who had shown such kindness to them. Among the speakers were Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P. (who referred to the evil influences of impure literature among the young), Lord Brassey, Lord Bangor, Rev. T. Evans, and others. Needless to say the song of the children, under the able lead of Mr. Proudman, was much appreciated by the crowded audience.

London City Mission.

There was a large audience in Exeter Hall on Thursday afternoon, last week, on the occasion of the forty-third annual meeting of this highly esteemed Mission.

Mr. F. A. Bevan presided, and, in the course of a brief address, pointed out that the Mission knows no denominational distinction, nor has it been troubled with the "Down Grade." In all parts of the great Metropolis missionaries have been gaining access to the homes and hearts of the people, and the grand old Gospel has been proclaimed in faith and with power. On all hands blessing has abounded, and he felt that, in years to come, God would continue to be gracious, as in times past.

Rev. T. Hutchinson read an abstract of the annual report. It appeared that the average number of missionaries on the staff during the year had been 473, showing an increase of thirteen. Rev. Sir Emilius Laurie spoke in high terms of the objects and methods of the Mission. Incidentally, he said that many years ago he sat next to Dr. Tait at dinner, shortly after he was appointed Bishop of London, and it was his pleasure to explain to the Bishop the working of the London City Mission, saying that it was always willing to work with the clergyman. The Bishop appeared interested, and inquired how they managed if clergymen were not disposed to work with the Mission. His reply was that in that case the Mission would work without them. (The statement elicited loud cheering.) "Oh," said Dr. Tait, "I am afraid, as Bishop of London, I cannot co-operate with a society like that." However, remarked Sir Emilius, as years rolled on, Dr. Tait became a most active worker with the Mission. If in these days the Gospel was faithfully proclaimed, we should find fewer secessions to Rome, and throughout the length and breadth of the land a higher national tone would prevail. He believed the City Mission to be worthy of the warmest possible sympathy and support.

Moravian Missions.

The Secretary of the London Association in aid of these Missions was able to submit to the annual meeting in Exeter Hall, last week, favourable reports as to the work in Greenland, Alaska, North America, the Mosketo Coast, South Africa, Central Asia, and elsewhere. Dr. Drury (chairman) said it was hoped that the Secretary would visit some of the stations during the present year, and report on the work. Several speakers dilated on the zeal and self-denial of the Moravian missionaries. Lieut.-Colonel Paske bore testimony to the value of their work, from personal observation, in the Punjaub. We heartily endorse his remark that there is no existing mission agency more worthy of support.

ENGLISH WOMEN IN BRUSSELS.

Dear Sir,—The International Exhibition at Brussels is likely to attract many Englishwomen to that city, both as visitors and employées. I lately spent two or three days under the kindly roof of the British Institute, and am glad to report that a good work is quietly but steadily moving on. I found the Sunday afternoon tea as much appreciated as ever. The children's gathering had increased from fifteen to thirty, and had been sorted into classes, and organised into a regular Sunday-school. An extension of work in the direction of the "mothers" is in contemplation.

I hope that many of your readers who will go to Brussels for the Exhibition will find time to visit this Institute, too, and so strengthen the hands of those who are voluntarily manning this outpost of a national work. It is 26, Rue de Vienne, not far from the Place du Palais, and the Parc Léopold.—Yours sincerely,

Edith A. Huntley, M.D.

MR. DENHAM SMITH.—The improvement in Mr. Smith's condition recently noted is, we are glad to say, still maintained.

MR. CHAS. E. FAITHFULL, of The Sailors' Rest, Marseilles, is now in England on a brief visit. He may be addressed to our care.

DUBLIN PROTESTANT DEAF AND DUMB ASSOCIATION.—The object of this organisation is to care for the adult deaf and dumb, spiritually and temporally. The seventeenth annual report, just published, states that much blessing continues to attend the exertions put forth. Mr. M. G. Hewson, Room No. 21, Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street, Dublin, is the missionary and secretary.

MADAGASCAR.—Ambihimandròso is now a centre of much religious activity. During the past eight years Rev. T. Rowland, of the London Missionary Society, has resided there. He found eighteen preaching places and day-schools; now there are sixty, and scores of people have been added to the church. Years ago, all who were connected with the Government thought it their duty, although heathens at heart, to follow the example of the Queen and Prime Minister, and profess Christianity. A healthier tone now prevails, and this hypocrisy is dying out.

CHURCH OF SCOTLAND FOREIGN MISSIONS.—The Foreign Mission report, to be presented to the annual Assembly this month, will show special prosperity in the missions in the Punjaub, at Darjeeling, Calcutta, and Madras. There are openings for ordained missionaries at Darjeeling, Madras, and the Punjaub. One has offered for Africa, whom the Committee would thankfully accept. He will soon be ready to go out with the double qualification of graduation as a doctor and ordination as a minister. The Convener would rejoice to hear from a congregation or a private Christian willing to support a missionary, either partly or altogether. Failing fresh support of this kind, it may be impossible to accept the services of even the best and most urgently needed missionaries. The Committee of the Ladies' Association propose this year to send new missionaries to the foreign field—some of them to replace agents who will be returning home on furlough. Ladies who desire to offer themselves for this good work, should apply at once to the secretary, Miss Reid, 22, Queen-street, Edinburgh.

Notes and Comments.

A TERRIBLE revelation of the conditions of modern city life is contained in the fact that one day last week no fewer than ten girls were reported to the Metropolitan police as missing. The ages given were as follow:—Nine years, two; fourteen years, three; fifteen years, one; seventeen years, one; eighteen years, two; nineteen years, one. The total number of persons reported as missing for the same day was thirty-four.

The Congregational Union has done itself high honour, and the Christian churches of this country an inestimable service, by electing to its chairmanship for next year the redoubtable Chinese missionary, Rev. Griffith John. We understand that Mr. John is expected in England soon, and we hope he may see his way to accept the post. In view of the rising tide of missionary zeal among the churches, the appointment seems to us a most happy one, and if Mr. John will spend his year of office in arousing the home churches to a further sense of their responsibility towards the heathen, the results for the world will surely be incalculably great.

If we could impart to the community generally the warmth of feeling that marked the mass meeting of Saturday last in Exeter Hall, the fate of the iniquitous compensation clauses in the pending Bill would soon be sealed. Sir Wilfrid Lawson scouted the notion of the proposal being a concession to equity, and exclaimed, "Oh, equity what evils are done in thy name!" Cardinal Manning roundly condemned the objectionable clauses, and Archdeacon Farrar indignantly declared that when the people had asked for bread the Government had given them a stone.

The more we ponder over the matter the more we are amazed at the audacity of the Government proposal. If the liquor business were a beneficent one, nobody would want to interfere with it; the very fact that everybody recognises the need for its curtailment, proves that it is an evil thing. It is true that we have permitted the evil to exist and flourish; but now, when we are hoping for some mitigation of it, we can see no equitable reason for asking us to pay a heavy price for the boon so long deferred. No more ingenious method of buttressing the drink traffic could have been devised, and Archdeacon Farrar may well complain that when the people have demanded bread they have been rewarded with a stone.

To all and any in search of a creed we heartily commend "The Articles of the Faith, as held by the Presbyterian Church of England." For three years a Committee, appointed by the Synod, has been at work on this document; and it certainly does them credit. It will become the working creed of the English Presbyterians, taking the place of the Westminster Catechism. It consists of twenty-three Articles, any one of which affords food for devout and interested study. Where so many are excellent, we find it hard to specialise. But we hold, as deserving special notice, the articles on the Holy Spirit, on Union to Christ, on Holy Scripture, and on the Sacraments. But it is noticeable, in this as in other creeds, that the words have been so carefully chosen, and are so dexterously balanced, as to be capable of more than one interpretation; and more than one school of thought might be content to quote them as a statement of its position.

The Darwinian theory of the origin of species by natural selection is obviously breaking down. The reaction is evidenced not only by the third of the Duke of Argyll's papers in this month's Good Words, but by a calm and powerful article in the new Edinburgh Review. Serious is the indictment made in this article—that Darwin's influence has been more hostile and fatal to Theism than the influence of any other writer, perhaps, since the foundation of Christianity itself. He repudiated creation, abjured design, and enthroned unreason as lord of the universe. That such a system, which violated the deepest instincts of humanity, and opened a door to atheism, should have swayed opinion among so many for thirty years is a terrible reflection on this age. We are, however, told in the Edinburgh that the system has had its day; that men are rising up who will destroy it; and that the progress of knowledge will issue in a philosophical refutation of Darwinism root and branch.

An equally important article in confirmation of Scriptural truth may be found in another paper in the new Edinburgh, on Renan's "History of the People Israel." An attempt has been made by modern unbelievers to assign a natural origin to the grand Monotheism of Israel, and to trace it to a beginning of idol worship. The reviewer shows that all such reasoning is untenable and baseless. Let young men note this: the learned endeavours to explain away the supernatural in creation and revelation, to find a Bible without inspiration, and nature without a God, end in failure and confusion.

A most remarkable article appears in the current Contemporary Review. Mons. H. Lasserre, a French Colonel of Artillery, a writer of a brilliant style, and who professed to have obtained a miraculous cure from the Virgin at Lourdes, translated a year or two ago the Four Gospels into French. The translation was very picturesque, and with a telling preface, received the imprimatur of the Archbishop of Paris, and the approval and benediction of the Pope. In twelve months twenty-five editions were published. The book went into thousands of French homes, and became a school prize. An édition de luxe followed, and was eagerly sought. Less than five months ago Rome perceived its error, and a decree of condemnation was issued from the Vatican. Now a copy can hardly be bought. Dr. William Wright, the writer of the article, pertinently asks:—How does Papal infallibility stand in the transaction? We shall surely hear more of this.

A new departure is proposed in Unitarianism; it is that the 220 Unitarian congregations in Great Britain shall merge themselves into one united body, with a common fund for ministerial support, and call themselves "English Presbyterians," without a binding creed. This new church organisation was advocated at Leeds by Dr. Martineau. The discussion that followed was suggestive. Rev. J. Wood, who went out from the Congregationalists, contended that Unitarians wanted, not new machinery, but deeper spiritual life. Dr. Crosskey said it would be better to have a new departure than eternal grumbling and complaining. A committee is to deliberate on the matter. If individual congregations are low in spiritual life, how can they find it by falling back upon one another? Cold bricks do not get warm by adding to their bulk.

Owing to the persecution to which they have been subjected during recent years in Eastern Europe, many thousands of Jews have of late found no ease, or rest, but have suffered from "a trembling heart, failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind." In many cases, moreover, the oracle by Moses has been painfully fulfilled:—"Thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life." While well-to-do Israelites have managed to procure friendly asylum in Western countries, the pious poor of the nation have been making for the land of their fathers, in the hope of finding at least a burying-place within its sacred precincts. And so it comes about that Jerusalem is rapidly becoming again a veritable city of the Jews. In 1880 there were, probably, not more than 5000 Jews there; now there are more than 30,000. The recent persecutions in Russia have led thousands of them to seek a home in their ancient city.

In the course of an interesting lecture delivered the other evening by Sir Francis de Winton on Central African Exploration, he took occasion to discredit the disquieting rumours circulated respecting Mr. H. M. Stanley, and stated that the hindrances which, owing to the nature of the country, would probably be met with between the Congo and Emin Pasha's territory were, combined with the difficulties and delays in transmitting messages, sufficient to account for the continued absence of news. It was pointed out that the possession of the country governed by Emin Pasha was of very great importance, because it lay between and prevented the junction of two great slave-dealing centres whose operations had been steadily nearing one another. An observation also made by the lecturer throws a little light upon the real nature of many of the boasted conversions to Mohammedanism. "It is," he said, "a religion of easy adoption by the natives, for it demands no sacrifices, nor does it interfere with the manners and customs of easy barbaric life."

The letter on "Unity, Evangelism, Money," which appeared in our last issue, suggests one reason for the spread of Romanism in out-of-the-way places in England and Ireland. Whilst, according to the writer, a young minister could not be induced to take charge of a "prosperous village chapel" because the salary was only £80 a year, there are hundreds of Roman Catholic priests who willingly take up districts upon even less than £40 per annum, and hence it is that they reach neglected localities and form small "missions" in outlying districts, where Protestant pastors and evangelists without a similar spirit of self-sacrifice "could not live," as our correspondent puts it. We know, for instance, one place in Wales where it was stated a little while ago that the priest had not tasted meat for months, he was so poor, yet the "mission" is continued in the hope of growth. And so in Ireland there are hundreds of places where the priest must of necessity suffer with the people; and it is because men can be found willing to sacrifice themselves that Romanism continues to "possess the land."

Similar remarks will apply to foreign missionary work; for instance, as Mr. Caine has recently stated, while the European contributions to the Roman Catholic Missions in India are only £36,000 per annum, and out of that sum sixteen bishops and over one thousand priests are supported, with thirteen hundred schools, containing 50,000 pupils, one Protestant Missionary Society, with subscriptions of £27,000, maintains only 340 missionaries and teachers.

Not only by Christian workers and active philanthropists is the cause of the women of India being pleaded at the present time. A few days ago, the Calcutta correspondent of The Times referred to the matter in considerable detail in a communication on the state of education in Central India. He unhesitatingly attributes the slowness of progress to the baneful custom of early marriages, and declares that "wrongs remain still unredressed, cruelty and brutality still triumph, and women still weep." It is well that these painful facts should be kept in view now that the annual meetings of the Zenana and other missionary societies are being held.

It was recently announced in the House of Commons that the Government are prepared to advance £10,000 for the purpose of assisting Scotch crofters to emigrate to Canada, the amount lent to each family being repayable in twelve years. It is also stated that the Parliamentary Committee now sitting upon the subject of State-directed Colonisation has framed a scheme for submission to the Government, which, it is contended, will be self-supporting. This news is satisfactory, as opening out a prospect of the pressing question of over-population being comprehensively and practically dealt with. At present the agricultural labourer migrating into the town does but swell the already congested mass of unemployed, and in a generation or two disappears under the altered conditions of life, whilst in almost all our dependencies there is at this moment a large demand for exactly the kind of labour which he can supply.

The prospects of the movement in favour of the early closing of public-houses in Ireland on Saturday nights appear to be brightening, much of the evidence given before the Sunday Closing Committee being in favour of the limitation of the Saturday hours. That given last week by the Mayor of Cork was, perhaps, the most remarkable. Cork has unfortunately been notorious for the excessive number of public-houses within its boundaries. Advocating the opening of the drinking shops during a certain portion of the Sunday, the Mayor gave it as his strong opinion that "shorter hours were desirable on Saturdays," and he added, after suggesting 8 p.m. as the hour of closing, "a slight inconvenience would be caused to many by such an alteration, but it would be so slight that it would not counterbalance the advantages that would follow earlier closing." He was able to state, too, that the public opinion of the city was in favour of such a step.

Recent evidence given before the Lords' Committee on the Sweating System has shown that owing to "cruel cheapness" the evils of sweating have extended to many other trades than those in which women are employed; and it may be anticipated that the Blue Book in which the various testimonies will be embodied will form a very terrible indictment against our modern commercial system. Still it is in the tailoring trade that the evil appears to be at the worst. As an illustration, the pathetic statement may be taken of Elizabeth Killick, described as "a poorly-dressed woman of middle age," whose husband had been three years' paralysed. As a trouser finisher she could make 1s. 2d. a day by working fourteen hours, but out of that she had to provide trimmings and thread, &c., so that she had barely 1s. a day. Therefore, after paying 2s. a week for her room, she had a little over 8d. per day to provide food and clothing for herself and three children, the husband fortunately being in an infirmary.

In answer to Lord Aberdeen, who put some kindly questions, Mrs. Killick stated that she had not tasted meat for six months, "a herring and a cup of tea" forming their chief meal. Another witness stated that she was making shirts at 1s. 2d. a dozen. Surely these facts speak for themselves, and should appeal strongly to our common Christianity. Our national wealth is simply enormous, and there ought not to be any insurmountable difficulty in delivering ourselves from the sorrow and shame of such a condition of things.

DEATH OF BISHOP PARKER.

SAD tidings reached the Church Missionary Society on Tuesday afternoon, last week, namely the death of Bishop Parker and his chaplain, Rev. Joseph Blackburn, in Central Africa. The telegram contained but few details; the Bishop was only ill one day, and what the malady was is not known as yet.

Mr. Blackburn went out first in 1882. In 1886 he came home, and during a year's stay in England was married to a lady who, when the sad news arrived last week, was making active preparations to sail with a little daughter whom he had never seen, and join her husband on the mission field.

Bishop Parker's death is a sad loss. A good scholar, the Bishop was also an enthusiastic missionary. During the period 1878-85 he was engaged in India, and showed splendid business abilities. He was consecrated Bishop of Eastern Equatorial Africa in 1886, and hoped soon to have a good staff of workers under command. In one of his early letters, he wrote to the Committee, he said; "You have made me a Bishop of a handful of sick missionaries." By the last mail, he begged for nine more men as absolutely and immediately necessary. Rev. R. P. Ashe, in a recent letter, said that "self seemed to find no place in him." The Bishop was unmarried, but he is mourned by a large circle of acquaintances, and a still larger circle who loved him as a model missionary.

SOUTH INDIA.—The second of the series of camp meeting , organised by agents of the London Missionary Society, was held in February last at Nemeldinne, a large village in the Cuddapah district. These meetings are designed to give an impetus to work already begun, and to provide a source of inspiration to all privileged to take part. The proceedings were edifying and cheering, and it is hoped that good will result from this season of fraternal communion, conjoined with evangelistic exertion.

THE READING OF THE PEOPLE.—The following figures sent us by a friend cast an unpleasant light upon popular reading, the town alluded to not being a watering-place or holiday resort, but a busy manufacturing town. A town of 110,000 inhabitants has three lending libraries, two of which are free. In the last annual report we find that in the year past from one, 59,000 books were borrowed, of which 30,000 were novels. From the second, 46,000 were borrowed, of which 36,000 were novels. From the third, 36,000 were borrowed, of which 31,000 were novels, and five out of every nine new books are also novels.

METHODISM IN LONDON.

IF we look at London with increasing apprehension on the one hand, we regard it with increasing hope on the other. We welcome with thanksgiving the new departure made within the past few years by our Methodist brethren in sending one of their very best ministers, Rev. Peter Thompson, into the lowest locality of East London. We thank God they obeyed the Holy Ghost when He said, "Separate me Hugh Price Hughes and Mark Guy Pearse for the work whereunto I have called them in the West." And it is a further hopeful fact that East and West are linked together by the Central Mission, under the able superintendence of Rev. Edward Smith, in Clerkenwell. Then we turn our eyes northward, and see our joyous brother, Thomas Champness, with his Joyful News, and his college of evangelists, one of whom is already settled in North-west London; and, like Paul in the storm-tossed vessel, we thank God and take courage.

It will be an interesting circumstance if some day a Methodist arithmetician should be led to count up the number of times the words "Methodist" and "Methodism" occur in any one number of The Methodist Recorder, or The Methodist Times, or in any Methodist meeting, when the word "Christian" would seem more appropriate and larger-hearted; but none the less we honour the great work that is being done.

It is, indeed, no new work; and if individuals like Miss Macpherson and Miss Steer, George Holland, Bowman Stephenson, Dr. Barnardo, and F. N. Charrington, Archibald Brown and William Cuff, have, by the grace of God, been able to accomplish what they have achieved, it is not strange that the great Methodist organisation should justify its existence by sharing in such work.

We report elsewhere the meetings held last Friday in connection with this movement, heartily agreeing with Rev. Mark Guy Pearse in his appreciation of the workers' testimony in the afternoon at Wardour Hall; though we have attended many a similar one in connection with the work of the brothers and sisters named above.

Some of the methods employed at the West have been startling and questionable. But God seems to tolerate and even to overrule for good some methods which sorely exercise fellow-servants. It may be wise to remember the advice contained in the couplet:—

> Be to their virtues very kind,
> And to their faults a little blind.

We may even go a little further, and submit to be asked, "Who art thou that judgest the servant of Another? To his own Master he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be holden up, for God is able to make him stand." To look for what is excellent rather than for what is faulty in each other and each other's work, will tend to promote that unity which is so good and pleasant in God's sight, that there He commandeth the blessing, even life for evermore.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—In his speech last week, at the annual meeting of this Society, the Bishop of Rochester did not say (as reported) that only one-third of the parishes in the province of Canterbury, and only one-fourth in the Metropolis, sent any contributions to the Missionary Societies of the Church of England. The statement was that one-third and one-fourth of the parishes in the respective areas sent nothing to the funds of the Missionary Societies connected with the Church of England.

The London Wesleyan Mission.

Friday last was a high day for the latest departure in Wesleyan evangelisation. Even Solomon himself would surely admit that to hold an anniversary at the end of six months' work is a new thing under the sun. But, under the régime of Mr. Price Hughes, musty precedents are of no account. Probably he thought that enough had been achieved during the six months to justify him in summoning his friends and neighbours that they might rejoice with him and his fellow-workers. Besides, the East-end part of the Mission has been in full swing for more than two years, so that, striking a balance between East and West, there was no valid reason why the London Wesleyan Mission should not have its May Meeting. The result certainly justified the faith of our go-ahead friends in the aristocratic West.

A capital beginning of the day's engagements was made by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's sermon at St. James's Hall, at noon. His words were as pearls of wisdom dropped from Spirit-guided lips. In a running commentary on the Lesson, from Acts ii., he said, "I don't think Christians are much good to Christ until they gladly receive his word." "The overflow of the Spirit was the characteristic of Pentecost; men had to run about to get others to hold the overflow." In his prayer Mr. Pearse entreated God to give them a great triumphant faith in Himself, and a great passion of brotherly pity and eager helpfulness for men and women around.

was based on Acts iii. 6: "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk." It was a happy thought, the preacher said, to let this season of thanksgiving fall at the same time as their Foreign Missionary Meetings. The early history of the Christian Church combined great ingatherings to the faith with personal work among individual sufferers. True Christianity is never so taken up with sublime achievements as to forget the crippled beggar at the door. It unites a concern about the salvation of the world with a pity for the individual. First of all the Church must have the gift of Pentecost. It is pitiable to see the Church trying to mend the world. Stories of dead men's bones and martyred virgins' shrouds will never convert the living world of to-day. Let the dead take care of themselves; we want a living Christianity. Christian evidences that prove but do not improve are well-nigh useless. Opinions and theories are well enough, but they do not transform men. If we do not possess a great, intense throbbing life, as real at least as the life of the everyday world, we can do little to meet its needs. Then, to complete our equipment, we want the great brotherly heart and the helpful hand. The true attitude of the Christian is to hold the Almighty Christ with the left hand (nearest the heart), and to lift up our fallen brother with the divinely energised right hand of power.

Let us see what this lame beggar at the gate of the Temple can teach us. We find in the story a picture of the world's needs. All the physicians and metaphysicians agree that there is something wrong with humanity. What is it? The world's ankle bones are weak; it cannot get up and walk. Bless God for every little bit of love in the world; though it come from those who do not profess religion; but it cannot do much. If "religion" could have cured the lame man, he ought to have been cured; he must have been at three prayer-meetings a day, at least, as he lay in the porch of the Temple. Then it was "the porch beautiful"—emblem of the modern æstheticism that is supposed to ennoble and inspire. Despite it all, the poor lame world is powerless to rise. Tell me what a man sees, and I will tell you what he is. The merchant sees opportunity for gain, and the gay worldling the avenue of pleasure, but the Christlike man has an eye for the soothing of the world's sorrow. Money is not the measure of the Church's power. If Peter and John had had any money that day they met this lame man, they would possibly have given him a threepenny bit and passed on. Oh that men should count half-a-crown more helpful than the name of Jesus. He who had control of all the riches of the world was the poorest Man who ever lived in it. Money is good for much, but it is a great mischief when it is put in the place of Jesus Christ, or even put alongside of Him. People who live in balloons will not do much mission work. We must get to close quarters with those we want to help. The pulpit is too high; even the church steps are too high; yea, the streets are too high; we must get down to the level of the cellar. Man is the only creature who has a hand, because he only can take and give help. I do believe in a brotherly grip such as that Peter gave to the beggar. In this poor lonely London what a power there is in a shake of the hand or a loving smile. The lame man's cure was a quick business; no lotions or liniments were needed. It was "Rise and walk;" if the Lord raises a man up He can keep him up. Oh! if we could but step out into Piccadilly hand in hand with Jesus. I often think of that sentence, "The Church which is his body." It teaches us that Christ has no eyes, or lips, or hands, or feet, with which to save and bless the world, except yours and mine.

At the close of the sermon, of which the foregoing is a bare outline, a collection was made for the London Mission; this was also done afternoon and evening.

CONFERENCE IN WARDOUR HALL.

This old-fashioned building was crowded in the afternoon for a "convention" on the work of the Mission. The venerable Rev. E. E. Jenkins presided, and the raised orchestra, which almost buries the pulpit out of sight, was filled with workers, male and female, and a number of ministerial brethren. Mr. Price Hughes was, of course, the leading spirit in seeing to the comfort of everybody, and generally making things pleasant.

Rev. E. E. Jenkins said that in his judgment this was a great day for Methodism. What has been attempted in London must be attempted elsewhere, if Methodism is to be healthy and strong. In reviewing the work of the year, Mr. Jenkins said he was struck first with the substantial unity manifested in the Mission. Without that there could be no success, whatever might be the ability of the agents. When people wait till they are all agreed about everything they never begin at all. Cautious critics predicted peril from the novel methods of these great City Missions, but the predictions had not been verified. Wesley, when a member of the Church of England, saw that that Church was not equal to her opportunities, so he went out, and endeavoured to fill the gaps. The leaders of this Mission, in like manner, are impressed with a deep sense of the need of effort in addition to ordinary church routine. Then he was struck with the breadth of the operations. He believed Peter Thompson has solved many problems in the East-end. In Clerkenwell, Edward Smith has been doing a solidly successful work among the masses. Men are saved in the sanctuary, and followed to the home. The best work that is being done cannot be advertised, but it has the approval and blessing of God. As to the West-end, it has been asked, What can you do with the aristocracy? Among them, as among other classes, we have much darkness and perverted influence. There are many being reached belonging to no class. It makes one's heart dance for joy to see a great congregation gathered in St. James's Hall, not by concerts, or scientific lectures, or mountebanks, but to hear the praises and sing the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

As a worker in the East-end Mission, Mr. Jameson spoke in very affectionate terms of Mr. Peter Thompson, his chief. In giving some details of the work, he told of three men, drunken and low, who attended a meeting in the open air. The song and the preached word arrested them. They were converted, and gave up the drink, as all converted people ought to do. They felt the claims of God, and obeyed his voice. One of them was troubled about his "pipe and baccy," so he set aside the shilling a week spent in smoke, to buy tracts, which he distributed in the open air. Mr. Jameson reported great things in the work among the young, many of whom live in homes full of sadness and sin. From turbulent unruliness they have been trained to obedience, and they have been the instruments in God's hands of luring their parents to Christ and a sober, happy life. A most pathetic, tear-compelling incident was told of a couple brought to the feet of the Saviour by their little Lizzie, who attended the children's meetings. There is no grander work under heaven, said Mr. Jameson, than the training of these boys and girls. In every dark home and cheerless court in London let the Gospel bells be rung.

The next witness was Miss Salmond, who at one time worked in Smyrna, but has for two and a half years laboured at St. George's-in-the-East. She told how she began the work of visitation, holding mothers' meetings, &c. Helpers came to her aid. They had never been refused admission to a home. Sewing-classes for girls were started, and thirty girls have been taken to a Training Home for service, at Blackheath. "The Girls' Parlour," for the bigger girls, has been a great success. Many of them attend the prayer-meeting once a week; all the other evenings the parlour is open, and a good influence is brought to bear on them that shows itself in numberless ways. As to the unhealthiness of the East-end, said Miss Salmond, in closing, she had been working hard there for these two and a half years; she felt as well physically, and much stronger spiritually, than when she went there.

After a few personal reminiscences as to his early training, a young worker spoke of the work in London's centre—Clerkenwell. His experience contradicted the notion that London people do not like to be visited. The workers have met with great encouragement. Clerkenwell has been mapped out, and fifty tract distributors are at work every Sunday. An entrance is gained to many homes, and the advantage is followed up. Through the Sunday-school, families are often reached, induced to attend the chapel, and thoroughly saved. Strange, sad cases are often met with, but the workers go on toiling, thanking God for what He has done.

Mr. Rose, of Camden-street (a Joyful News evangelist), told a lively, if somewhat rambling, story of his experiences among working men in that neighbourhood. There have been some grand cases of conversion. A man who used to play on Sunday morning at drinking clubs for working men, now plays the double bass at chapel. Another case was that of a converted wife beater. Mr. Rose said he had had in some respects a hard time, but he did not look much the worse for it. He is a young man of grit and go, and will make his mark.

Mrs. Price Hughes spoke of the visitation work in the West-end. The visiting sisters lay themselves out to help the people in their homes in every possible way—nursing the children, assisting with the household work, &c. There is also much done in dealing with inquirers, finding places for girls who come from the country, conducting mothers' meetings, &c. A children's playground has been established in the basement of Wardour Hall three times a week, and there is also a club for girls who are of a very rough class. It is hoped to get them into a Bible-class. The power and presence of God, said Mrs. Hughes, have been very manifest, and the workers are greatly encouraged to persevere.

The trained Nurse in connection with the West-end Mission followed with a singularly interesting story of work among the sick poor. They suffer great disadvantages, she said, from the absence of retirement and quiet, from the insanitary condition of their homes, and from loss of wage when ill. Some employers are exceedingly kind—one firm paid the wages of a man during five months' illness; but they are not all of that stamp. She had found a ready entrance to the homes and hearts of the people. The secret of successful work among the poor, she said, is to be a good listener. There are many opportunities of saying a quiet word for God, though long conversations are seldom practicable. Food is much more needed among these people than drugs. Her experience was that drink is not by any means the prevailing cause of the poverty, though it is in some cases. The men lose occupation, and gradually sink into the direst poverty. They greatly prize sympathy, and manifest much patience under their sorrows and troubles. Through one sick member of a household, a whole family is sometimes reached and brought under the sound of the Gospel. This lady's recital of her daily ministrations of mercy, and her common-sense views on the subject, secured the hearty commendations of the audience.

MASS MEETING IN ST. JAMES'S HALL.

Mr. Price Hughes had advised everybody who wanted to hear the famous orchestral band of the Mission, to be at St. James's Hall by half-past six; his advice was taken, for by that time (half an hour before the commencement of the meeting) there were few vacant seats. The performances of Mr. Heath Mills' band seemed to find much favour with the audience, and we certainly can understand and appreciate the help they render in the service of praise. Mr. Hughes wants to use the band as a strong competitor to the demoralising music-hall; everybody must wish him all success in lessening the influence of these places of popular amusement.

Mr. T. Morgan Harvey, a well-known Wesleyan layman, having taken the chair, the proceedings opened with a triumphant song of praise, splendidly sung. Rev. S. F. Collier, who superintends the Manchester Central Mission, prayed with great unction and fervour.

Rev. Walford Green's financial statement, as treasurer, showed that the total receipts of the London Mission for all objects had been somewhat over £21,000, and there is a deficit of £1700 odd. Between £12,000 and £13,000 promised is still unpaid. Mr. Green earnestly appealed for annual subscribers.

The Chairman said the object of the Mission was to reform London, and that, if accomplished, would be a good way towards the reformation of the world. In this work we have to contend with apathy, even among those inside the Christian Church. Then there are horrible and damnable sins permitted and sanctioned by the Legislature, and the powers that be; these must be exposed and denounced. We must do our best to rid the world of these plagues. All the quack nostrums are of no avail; only the Gospel of Jesus Christ and Him crucified can meet the needs of the world. Though there are new methods at work in this London Mission, there is no new Gospel. The leaders not only talk and write, but they work. We have had droppings of blessing, but we look for the showers.

Rev. John Walton, President of the Conference, said this movement was in some respects strange to modern Methodism. Still he had travelled up and down the land, and had never met a man who wanted to stop it. There has been criticism, but that is the lot of every forward movement. The preaching at St. James's Hall, Sunday mornings and evenings, has been a blessing to thousands over the world. The effort is proving contagious, and the people are being got hold of. The leaders are nobly seconded by their helpers. Dean Milman called the early Methodists "God's wooden spoon to stir the churches to effort," and perhaps the Salvation Army is now performing that function. We have lost hundreds of helpers because we have not given them work to do. So long as Christ sets his seal on the work, it will go on, and not even the devil can stop it.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse thanked Mr. Jenkins and Mr. Walton for their hearty benedictions given so freely; such approval was far more valuable than a tardy encouragement proffered when the need of it has gone. Referring to the address of the Nursing Sister in the afternoon, Mr. Pearse said it was enough to make one wretched in their happy surroundings to think of the sufferings of the poor about them. There had been no mention, during the day, of saving "souls"; they aimed at saving men and women. After an interesting little bit of autobiography, linking the East and the West-end Missions, Mr. Pearse referred to the noble gift of £105 towards the Mission from the Westminster Congregational Church, in return for a sermon he preached there. Henceforth, when he preached in any church on Sunday evenings, he would stipulate for a collection, or at any rate for three guineas towards the London Mission. There has not been a single service without definite conversions. Letters have come from all parts of the country to tell of blessing received. Let this meeting be a time of fresh consecration to God and his service.

Rev. Edward Smith, superintendent of the Clerkenwell Mission, said the dying prayers, as they proved to be, of the late Mrs. Macaulay have been more than answered for the work at Clerkenwell. The work in Central London is very onerous, but many have given practical evidence of their sympathy. He thanked God for his many noble helpers. They were all colleagues in the work, and there were no subordinates. Spiritual results are constantly aimed at, and they are vouchsafed. The desire has been to reach the middle classes and also the working classes, and make them workers for God. The conditions are in many ways unfavourable — overcrowded houses, drink, socialism, and scepticism. While we do not neglect the lowest of the low we are obliged to sift them, as many go from one mission to another sponging; they are ready to be converted seven times a week at a shilling a time. But touching tales could be told of relief given in the very nick of time to the truly deserving. Through the artisans the very lowest are reached. There is now an attendance of 1100 at St. John's Chapel on a Sunday evening, where formerly there were about eighty. Nearly 500 are meeting in "class." The people not only give money; they give themselves. The work may be only homespun, but it is genuine. Mr. Smith declared that this Mission in London's centre is "second to none" in Methodism to-day.

Rev. Peter Thompson, after some explanatory references as to the cost of the work, said that when he was sent to East London he was not very hopeful as to success. St. George's Chapel stands in one of the very poorest and most unpromising centres of London. But his experience had led him to pray that while he lived he might be permitted to work among the lowest of the low. The Mission in the East could never hope to be self-supporting in a money sense, but he could say that the spiritual register is high. St. George's Chapel is a hive of constant effort, and the gas bill is big, as well as the bill for repairs. The work at "Paddy's Goose" has been abundantly blessed. As to Spitalfields, he would to God they could turn out the liquor from the cellars of the chapel, and free the premises from such an incubus. Men and women are finding their way to God there. The "Mahogany Bar" is now without a penny of debt, and is the absolute property of the London Mission. Last Bank Holiday was a glorious and delightful day with them. Many came to the penitent form, some of them very striking cases of the power of God to save the worst. That night he did not sleep very early; but he thanked God the Mahogany Bar had been rescued from the service of the devil. Mr. Thompson very feelingly pleaded for a more common-sense plan of saving the outcasts, and of caring for those who are plucked out of the jaws of hell. There must be more rescue provision; it may be costly, but it is Christlike. Whatever the wealthy churches of the land do, they ought to help on this salvation work, if the hearts of the workers are not to break. As to those compensation clauses of the Licensing Bill he would not trust himself to speak. Who is going to compensate the young people of East London for the loss they suffer through their fearful surroundings? We should never cease our efforts on behalf of the harlot and the thief so long as the Gospel stories remain in our Bibles.

The last speaker was Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who received a splendid welcome. He had some commendatory words for the important White Cross Mission, which is now doing a good work in London. The Grove Mission, in the South of London, is now part of the general work, and it enjoys a vigorous life. As Mr. Pearse had said, no meeting has been held without conversions. While God approves of the work, it matters little who disapproves. The agencies at Wardour Hall are being greatly blessed. They had three hundred conversions there lately in a three weeks' mission. God leads us on, step by step, and we do not look at difficulties. There are many political refugees in the Soho district, and on a recent occasion, at Wardour Hall, they had seven languages represented in the inquiry room. The "Sisters of the People" have had many seals to their work, and the poor are realising the benefits that come from this agency. These Sisters are prepared to do anything to help the poor, whom they visit. They go, not simply from house to house, but from room to room. It is astonishing what faith the poor have in them already. "Catherine House," where the Sisters reside, is full, and another house is wanted. Mr. Hughes declared he would not be satisfied till there were a thousand such Sisters at work among the poor all up and down the country. Why not make as much use of them as the Roman Catholics or Ritualists do? Educated, refined, and devoted ladies can do a work that no Biblewomen can hope to accomplish. Some one prayed in the morning that all who have money and leisure might devote them to God. How his heart responded to that prayer. In a strenuous defence of the Sunday afternoon conferences on topics of current interest, Mr. Hughes contended that the ethical teaching of Christ must be applied to every department of the nation's life—to its business, its politics, its government, as much as to its religion. There are infamous laws in force in this country and in India, and these he had discussed, as well as the mal-administration of justice. He had protested, and would continue to protest, against the monstrous proposal to compensate the liquor-sellers. Society can never be reconstructed on a Christian basis except through the spiritual reconstruction of the individual, and that is what they were having every week. Nothing has been done hitherto for the children, but Major Mears, of the Horse Guards, will begin at once a special work among the children. Mr. Hughes, in closing, fervidly appealed for regular yearly subscriptions to sustain the work. All Christians ought to help, as the Mission seeks to help all, without distinction of sect.

Judging from the proceedings of Friday, our earnest-minded and devoted friends who carry on the London Wesleyan Mission have every reason to thank God and take courage.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.—Recent letters state that the medical agency is being greatly blessed. Several baptisms have recently taken place, and from all the region round about heathens flocked to witness the ceremony. Mr. A. Haegert intends to return to his labours in September next, when six new missionaries will, all being well, accompany him.

Letters to the Editor.

MISSION WORK IN ITALY.

Dear Sir,—Your readers have in past days kindly helped the Church Reform and Mission work carried on in Umbria by Count Campello and his brother priests. I have recently returned from a visit of some weeks' duration to the field of labour. I have seen the priests in their homes and enjoyed their kind hospitality. I have been present at the services, conferences, night-schools, &c., held at all of our four stations. As a truthful eye-witness, I can declare that there is abundant reason to thank God, take courage, and go forward.

The white fields of Italy stand ready for the reaping. I visited villages where no Englishman had been before, and found the people perfectly friendly and quite prepared to welcome the preaching of the word of God. If we had men and money we might at once open six more centres of mission work. We need help to provide for the training of the students and priests who offer themselves for the work. Towards a humble training-college one member of our committee has offered £50. Another need is means to carry on the Mission. I beg the prayers of all your readers for this remarkable reform movement.

Philip Norton, Deputation Secretary.

THE GIPSIES AND THEIR CHILDREN.

Sir,—A few days ago four families of gipsies in vans, not one of whom could read or write a line, came to a village green near here. One of the women—in whose van there were her husband, man, and three children—was expecting every minute to be confined, and had engaged the doctor and nurse. I had arranged some private matters, as the poor woman did not look hopefully about her recovery, and some of the little gipsies in the vans had cleaned their boots in order to come to my little Band of Love meeting, of which two were members, on the following day, Sunday. The village policemen put an end to their prospects and pleasure by telling them on Saturday night, between 9 and 10 o'clock, that they must get out of the village on Sunday morning.

If the gipsies had been allowed to stay on the green over Sunday, the poor ignorant children would have heard and seen things in our Band of Love room that would, to say the least, have lifted their thoughts and minds higher than a gipsy's wigwam.

The hangman's hemp, the gaol, and the policeman's truncheon have been used over 350 years to improve the condition of the gipsies with sorrowful results.

It is time that education, sanitation, and protection were tried, especially when the application will be so simple and easy, but which seriously threatens to be put off to Doomsday.

The 30,000 gipsy, van, and other wandering children, and their parents are, to all appearance doomed to wander and creep in ignorance and darkness in this land of light and love, their way to the grave.

The gipsy and van children should have been in the first Education Acts, but they are out in the cold to-day, receiving the kicks, scoffs, and sneers of village and other children. Persecution, the turning adrift, and the locking and barring school doors against our present-day gipsy, van, and other travelling children opens out a condition of things, think lightly of it as we may, that will, unless remedied, carry with it England's downfall.

Neglecting the children shuts out the light of heaven from our hearts, homes, and country, and we would do well to be wise and save them.—I am, very sincerely yours,

George Smith, of Coalville.
The Cabin, Crick, Rugby, May 4.

REV. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE and his work are sketched by the special commissioner of The Quiver in its current number. The writer says: "Full of abounding energy, he unites in a remarkable manner the power of organisation with the power of public speech. Yet he attaches no undue importance to the value of organisation alone. He has 'a deep belief in the necessity for spirituality of life and love in all that is carried on in parish work,' and holds that 'organisation, however perfect, unless it be vitalised by God the Holy Ghost, will become a practical hindrance instead of a blessing.'"

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. J. W. Moodie has reached Cairo, where he has held meetings among the soldiers, with the help of Mr. Ewing, the resident Scripture-reader. Some conversions are reported.

Battersea.—During the past two months Mr. Richard Weaver, Jun., has been preaching the Gospel at Price's factory, with unusual power and ability. As the meetings went on, the interest as well as the audiences increased, and much blessing has been the result.

Dr. Munhall, according to recent advices, was holding a Gospel mission in St. Paul's, Minn. His rousing addresses on temperance, righteousness, and the judgment to come were working a revolution in many lives; large numbers of young people were being reached.

Gateshead.—Miss Haigh, who held successfull open-air services last summer, has recommenced them, hundreds on Sunday mornings listen to the Gospel story told by her with much pathos, on the quayside. She also commenced, a month since, to hold services in a mission-hall where meetings are held nightly with very fair success.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has been urging upon the Christian people of the State of California the importance of work among children. He said that he hoped ere long to see a "Children's Special Service Mission" in America. Asked whether converted children should be received into church fellowship, Mr. Hammond replied, "Yes; if the conversions are clear and unmistakable; if not, it is better to wait awhile."

Harrogate, Yorks.—Mr. W. Spencer Walton has held a five days' mission in this watering-place; under God, it has resulted in much blessing, both to unbelievers and to Christians. Afternoon Bible-readings, conducted by Mr. Walton in the Y.W.C.A. Rooms, were well attended, and much appreciated. One day Mr. Reginald Radcliffe took part in the meetings, and delivered telling addresses on the "Claims of the Heathen."

Teignmouth.—Mr. Henry Cook, of Gosport, has paid a visit to this place, in his Gospel vessel, the Herald of Mercy. Night after night we had a good number on board. The Gospel preached was accompanied with evident tokens of blessing, both in the conversion of souls, and in the restoration of backsliders. The work of our brother is quite unsectarian, and well worthy of the support of fellow Christians.

Charles R. Gayer,
Retired Commander R.N.
Maida Villa, Ferndale-road, Teignmouth.

Dr. G. F. Pentecost has been holding large meetings at Schenectady, New York, with the result that many have dedicated their lives to Christ. An American secular paper says: "Dr. Pentecost's unconventional style of preaching—the plain, earnest, undiluted talk of a man, not a functionary, to his fellow-men—is unquestionably popular. He has scholarship and oratorical grace too, but they are instrumental merely. His manhood is the head and front of all his efforts." Mr. Stebbins conducted the praise very effectively.

Stockwell.—Rev. T. Cook, Wesleyan Connectional Evangelist, has recently concluded a ten days' mission at Studley-road, Stockwell, in the Lambeth Circuit. The mission was a success from first to last. The clear, earnest, homely, and heart-searching addresses of Mr. Cook were the means, under God, of the conversion of many, while church-members sought and found a fuller spiritual life. The converts included a large number of young people connected with the Sunday-schools; but a still larger number of adults found peace. New Society classes have had to be formed for the reception of converts. Such an ingathering at Studley-road has not been known for many years.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—Mr. Thorne has held a fortnight's mission in connection with the Glasgow Y.M.C.A. The city has been in a bustle, owing to the near opening of the Exhibition; still there has been much blessing. On one occasion 1000 women came together, and "the Spirit of the Lord was present to heal." Over seventy rose for prayer, and many went home rejoicing in a new-found Saviour. The following night there was a large gathering of young men, and again many requested prayer. The meetings on the three Sunday evenings were overflowing, and resulted in much blessing. Bible-readings were given every day at noon, and were much appreciated.

Wm. M. Oatts, Gen. Sec.

Dover.—A united seven days' mission, in connection with the two Congregational Churches in Dover, has just been held. The services were conducted alternately at Zion and Russell-street Chapels, and have been eminently successful. Rev. R. Balgarnie was the missioner.

Nottingham.—Mr. Mellors writes:—Richard Weaver is now here. Last Sunday we had in the Albert Hall 730 at our men's meeting, 250 at the women's meeting, and 2500 persons at the evening Gospel meeting, besides a children's service. You will be pleased to hear that the Gospel is laying hold of the hearts of the men.

Lincoln Y.M.C.A.—On the Sunday during the recent fair open-air Gospel meetings were held on the Fair Ground. During the week many thousands of tracts were given away, and hundreds of Bibles and Testaments sold from the Y.M.C.A. Bible-carriage (a new feature in Association work), whilst the Gospel was preached and sung to thousands.

Wakefield.—From April 21 to May 4, children's services have been conducted here by Mr. Josiah Spiers. Many children have professed to find peace in believing; it is hoped that the influence of the mission may be seen in all the Sunday-schools. A weekly meeting has been arranged in connection with the local branches of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A.

Mr. William Nobbs concluded on Sunday last a month's engagement at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end. His ministry there has been much valued by Christians, and there have been many cases of conversion and many backsliders restored. Mr. Nobbs will preach on the Sunday evenings during the remainder of this month at Malden Hall, Kentish Town.

Dr. H. Grattan Guinness.—On Thursday, last week, Dr. Guinness gave a farewell address to those who had received benefit during his mission at the Y.M.C.A., Liverpool. Over eleven hundred names had been given in as inquirers, and of those about eight hundred responded. Nothing could exceed the interest manifested throughout. Dr. Guinness's remarks were very affecting and helpful. He commenced a similar mission in Dublin the following day.

Mr. John Hambleton, evangelist, writes from Ballarat East, Victoria:—The three years and a half which we have spent here have been very active. From the beginning there has been opposition to encounter. Nevertheless, the Lord has stood by us, and tons' weight of Bibles, Testaments, Gospel-books and tracts have gone, and are still going forth to the blessing of many souls. There are thousands of Chinese in Australia, and still they come; many have been converted, and are beginning to preach Christ. Possessed of the English sense of freedom, they make the boldest and best preachers when they return to their own country.

Dublin Soldiers' Home.—Mr. William Smith of the Irish Evangelisation Society, held Gospel meetings in the new and commodious hall of this institute from April 16 to 30. Great blessing has been the result. Mr. Smith was with us in January and part of February. His mission then was attended with such success that soldiers, Royal Irish Constabulary, and civilians attended in goodly numbers. Several decided for Christ, and have been proving the sincerity of their conversion by their walk. I with many others thank God for sending Mr. Smith among us.

F. L. Hill, Qr.-Mr.-Sergt.

Mr. William Forbes requests prayer for blessing on services to be held at Bristol, commencing on Sunday next.

Regent's Park.—Open-air Gospel work will be begun here on Sunday, May 13. Helpers in former years in the preaching and singing will again be welcome. The place of meeting is on the east side of the Broad-walk, near the drinking fountain.

MISSION WORK AT CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—An excellent comprehensive sketch of religious effort carried on in connection with this seat of learning is given in The Quiver for May. The writer says in closing:—"The facts recorded undoubtedly warrant the conviction that mission work of all kinds and religious activities have quickened within the last ten years beyond all expectation; and that there never was a time when so much Christian work was going on there as at present, while respectful sympathy with such work is widespread, even amongst non-workers." We may add that Mr. Hudson Taylor and others are this week visiting Cambridge in the interests of foreign missions.

WHICH SOVEREIGN: QUEEN VICTORIA, or THE POPE?

ABRIDGED EDITION of 100,000 Copies. Price Threepence, or 2s. 8d. per Dozen.

This telling Treatise by the veteran Protestant writer, Dr. Wylie, could not have appeared more opportunely than in the present year (1888)—when we are about to commemorate the TER-CENTENARY, or the three-hundredth Anniversary, of the defeat of the attempted Invasion of our country by the Spanish Armada; and the BI-CENTENARY, or two-hundredth Anniversary, of the Accession in 1688 of the Protestant dynasty to the throne of the United Kingdom.

"It would be difficult to discover a book of more interest, or one so completely filled with valuable historical data. Every line of the 106 pages is full of carefully sought out evidence upon the subject to which it is intended to be a trustworthy guide. The simple facts and data will certainly provoke thought and research upon a question that is growing each day into increased importance." Isle of Wight Advertiser.

"As may be supposed, the publication is intended chiefly to draw attention to the fact that the throne was held on condition that the sovereign is of Protestant persuasion, and also to the necessity, for the welfare of the country, of the public seeing that those conditions which were enforced by our forefathers are kept up in their integrity." Brighton Times.

"We don't know anything better fitted to promote this much needed enlightenment of the public mind regarding Popery than just the broadcast circulation of the admirable little three-penny book before us, the abridged edition of Dr. Wylie's noble volume, 'Which Sovereign,' &c. We are perfectly certain that the perusal of even this abridgment would open the eyes of very many to a state of matters of which at present they have no idea."—Perthshire Courier.

"We have received an abridged edition of the above work. It is ably written and replete with much curious and valuable information, and cannot fail to be a valuable contribution to this class of literature."—Shetland News.

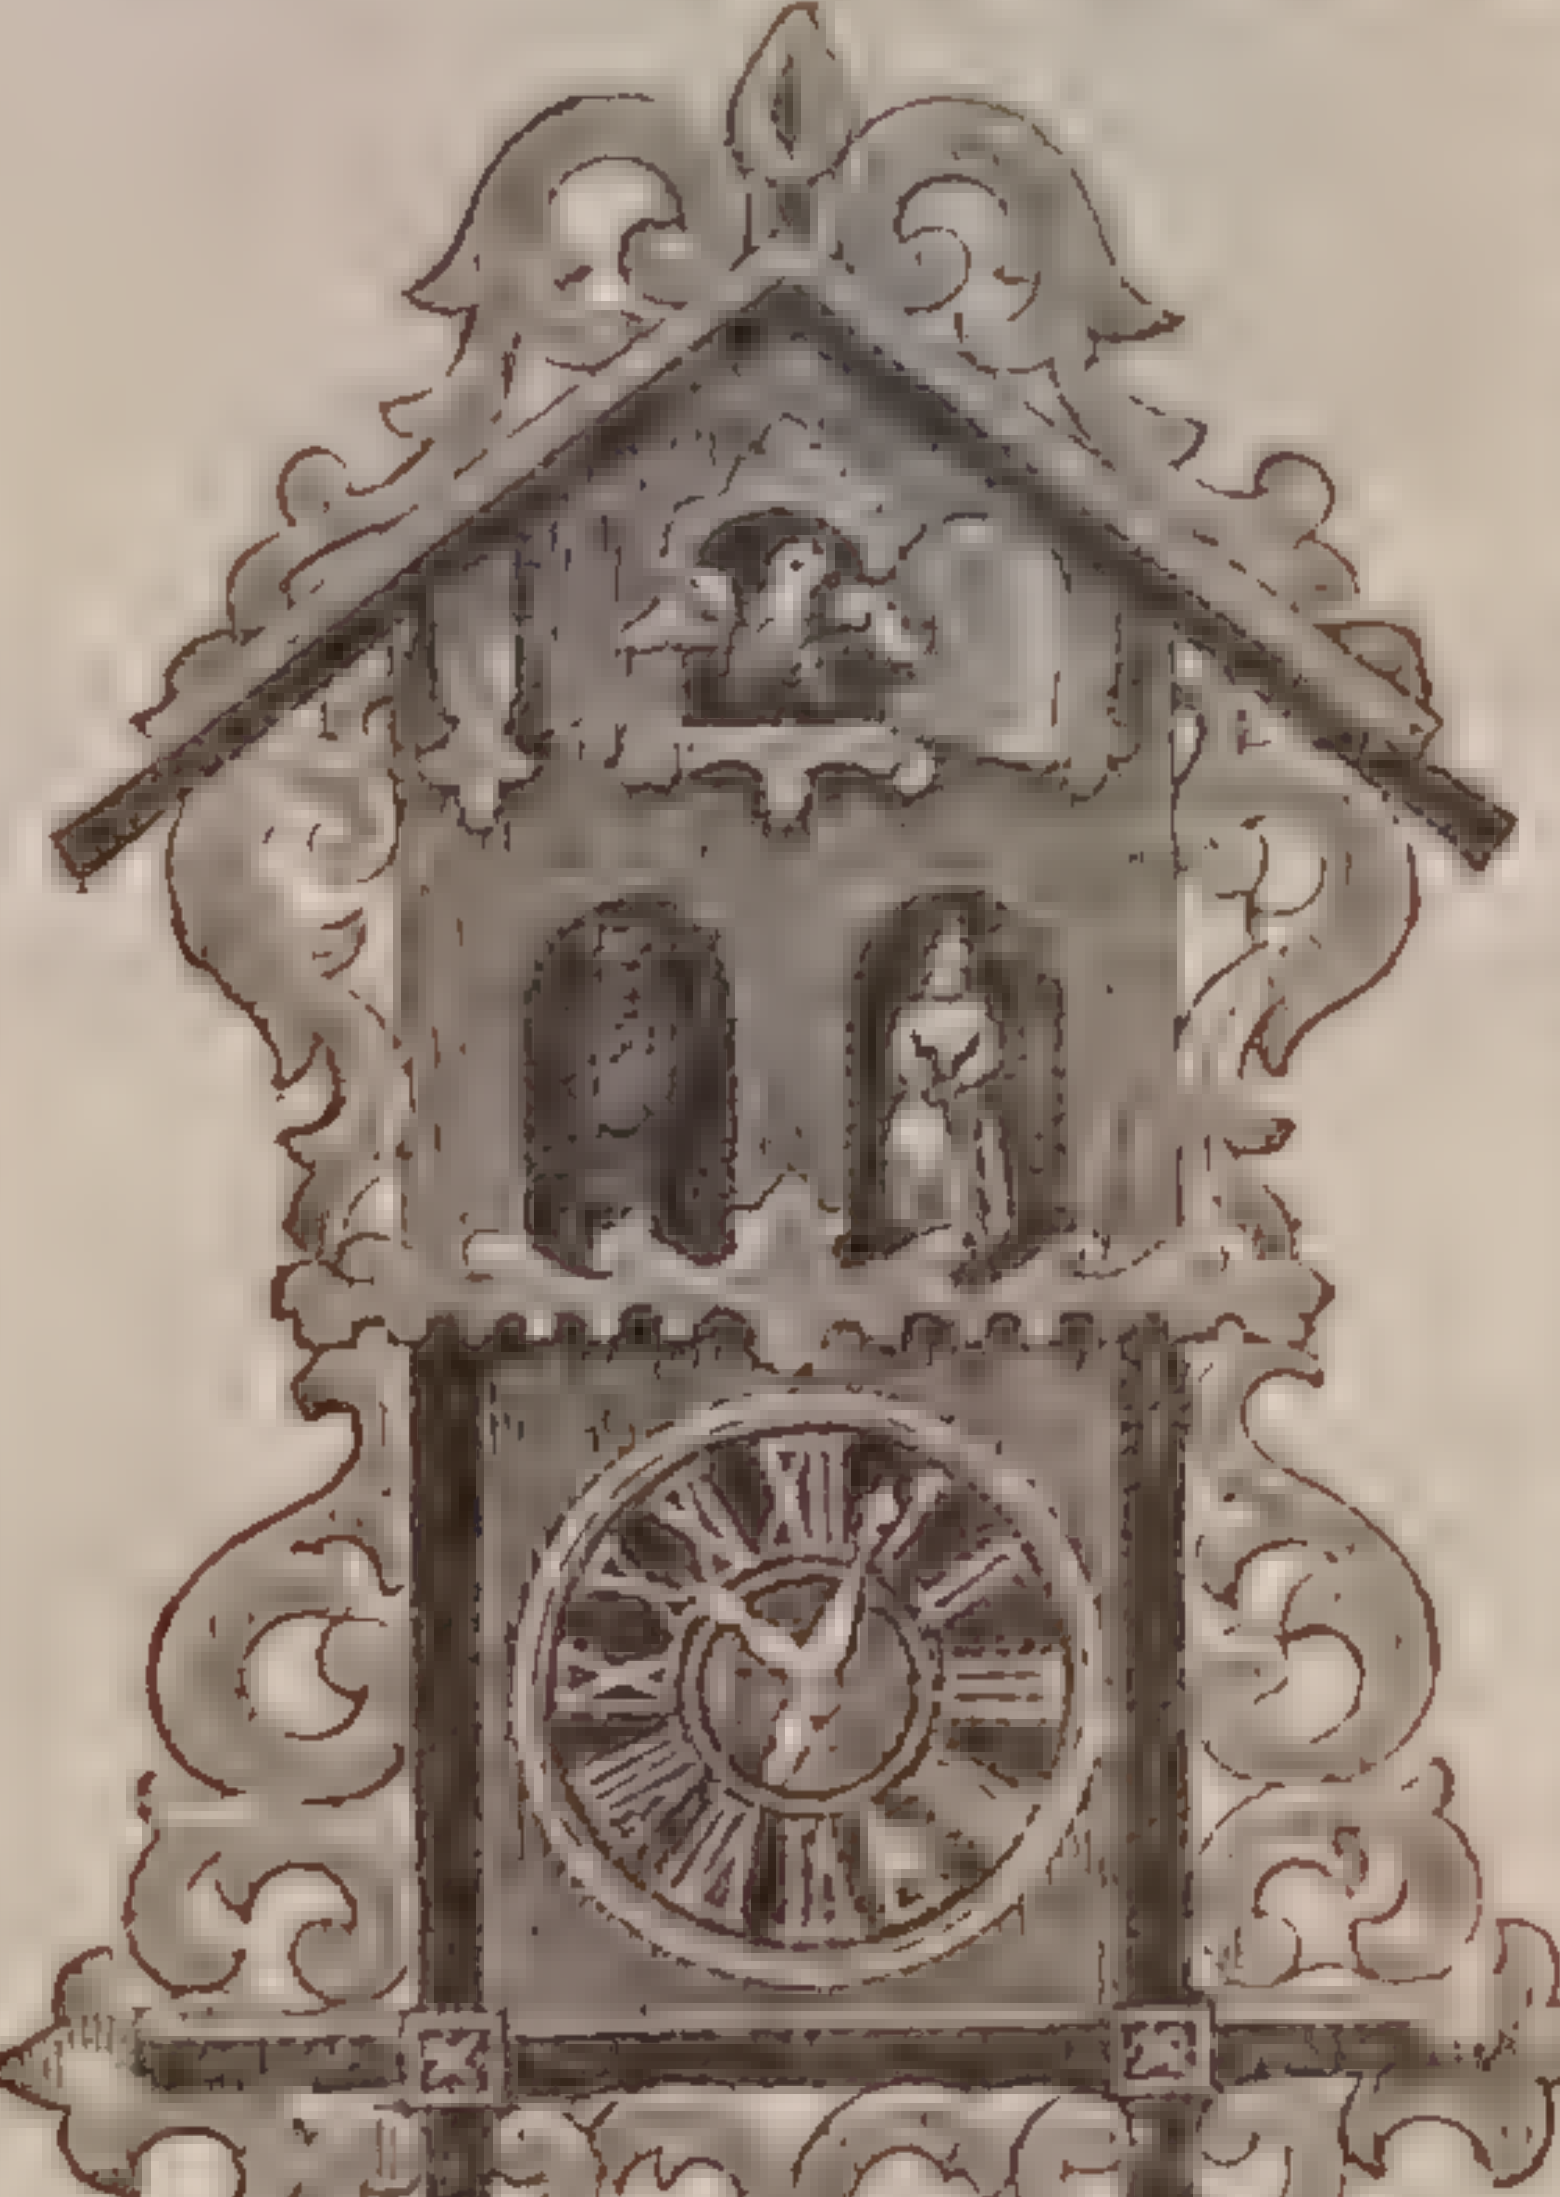
CUCKOO CLOCK and WEATHER HOUSE

(COMBINED).



A handsomely carved wood clock, 22in. in height, with ivory hands and figures, strikes the hours and half hours on a powerful wire gong. Each time the clock strikes a charming little cuckoo pushes open a door at top of clock, and comes out, and cuckoos the hours and half hours, then retires, and the door closes after it. Above the clock is the Weather House, containing beautifully modelled figures of male and female peasants, 4in. high. The man comes out if about to be wet, and woman if fine. We warrant these clocks to go for years, and for timekeeping qualities no better clock can be obtained at any price, while they are ornamental and fit to decorate a palace.

Packed in case free and sent to any address on receipt of 21/-.

Trumpeter Clocks.

Beautifully carved, standing 30in. high, figure of trumpeter, 4in. high, emerges from pair of folding doors, and plays a fanfare for every half hour and a series of flourishes according to hours. Majestic clock.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of CHRONIC BRONCHITIS at SHEERNESS.

On the 22nd of October last the case of GEORGE RICHARDSON, of 126, Berridge-road, was brought under my notice. A severe cold, first affecting the head, had settled on the chest. The throat was affected. There was a troublesome cough, with much pain and difficulty of breathing. Expectoration of viscous phlegm, five ounces in the night. He had lost fourteen pounds in weight in four months.

The patient gradually improved under my treatment. In six weeks he writes: "I desire to thank you very much for your advice and medicine. I am glad to say I am all right again."

"I have derived great benefit from your medicine, and have seen so many gratifying results from its use by others to whom I have spoken about it that it affords me real pleasure to recommend it to all who suffer from any pulmonary affection."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

DR. BRUCE'S PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

On Tuesday morning, in the City Temple, Rev. Dr. Bruce delivered his address as President of the Congregational Union. There was a large attendance of members and friends, and the address was cordially received. Sympathetic in tone, and outspoken in terms, Dr. Bruce's deliverance was felt to be both timely and helpful. The subject of the address was, "Congregationalism: Free, Broad, and Evangelical."

After some preliminary remarks, surveying the religious situation, he referred to the activity of the Roman Church, the spread of Ritualism in the Church of England, and the prevalence of Agnosticism and unbelief.

He maintained with great force that Congregationalists must have positive doctrinal beliefs, as well as preferences and convictions on matters of church polity and order; and his weightiest words on this head were loudly cheered by the audience. He condemned the parading of disputations and doubts, while the people are calling for spiritual food and religious edification. The need for saintliness of life was emphasised, and the reverential study of the Bible was insisted upon at length.

Dealing with the insinuated charge that some Congregational ministers do not believe in the Deity of Christ, Dr. Bruce said:—

"If there be any amongst our ministers—and I do not know any—(loud cheers)—who have given up this and other essential doctrines of Congregationalism, let them be honest and brave enough to go out from buildings erected and churches collected for very different teaching from theirs, and to cast themselves boldly on their new faith and new friends, with a new and appropriate name, and see what power there is in them—apart from the sanction of our good old name—to provide for them a new home, and the means of future support and the propagation of views diametrically opposed to recognised Congregationalism." (Renewed cheers.)

In the course of his concluding remarks, Dr. Bruce said:—"I plead for a free, broad, evangelical ministry, which will not narrow its teaching to one or two favourite doctrines; but which will take in all the facts and embrace all the truths, both of science and Scripture, of reason and revelation, bringing forth out of its treasury things new and old, and which builds on the broad 'foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ Himself being the Chief Corner Stone.'"

BRIGHTON AND HOVE TOWN MISSION.—Last year's efforts were attended with much blessing. Domiciliary visitation was steadily carried on, and in many instances there was fruit to record to the glory of God. Some of the missionaries have Sunday-schools in connection with the mission-halls in which they work. In one of these schools on one occasion a boy of the age of ten was found, in the absence of the teacher, explaining a Scripture card to about sixty interested infants. He maintained the attention of the children for an hour, telling them of the Good Shepherd standing with open arms to receive all who would go to Him. The boy realised two years ago that Christ was his Saviour, and is a constant reader of the Bible.

THE "SYRIAN CHRISTIANS" OF TRAVANCORE.—In the April issue of The Young People's Missionary Letter, there is an account of a tour made last year in the Quilon district of Travancore, by Dr. E. Sargood Fry (London Missionary Society), of Neypoor. The narrative gives a good deal of information about the "Syrian Christians" of that region. For at least fifteen hundred years this interesting people, numbering at present about 300,000, has existed along the South-west coast of India. Preachers from Syria took the Gospel to them; hence their name. Tradition further says that Thomas first evangelised them, and so they are called "Thomas Christians." Though it is possible that they were formerly as lights shining in a dark place, these "Syrian Christians" are now, sad to relate, in a very dead state as regards spiritual life.

WOMAN'S WORK IN PALESTINE.

A meeting on behalf of Mrs. Meredith's Evangelical Church of England Women's Missionary Association was held on Wednesday evening, last week, in Exeter Hall. Rev. J. B. Whiting, of Ramsgate, presided. Miss Lloyd, hon. sec., delivered a practical address. Convinced that Christian effort ought to be extended as much as possible, Mrs. Meredith, and certain of those associated with her, determined to establish in the city of Jerusalem a Women's Missionary House, whence ladies may go forth who are desirous of joining missions already in operation in Palestine, or of seeking service in the extended field presented by Eastern countries. It cannot be doubted that such a work in the very heart of Jerusalem must exercise a powerful influence for good, and in the end greatly redound to the honour and glory of God.

Several speakers expressed the belief that the House will become the centre of important evangelistic work. Rev. Dr. Bruce, for many years a missionary in Persia, having spoken, Mrs. Finn and Rev. J. Campbell Colquhoun delivered sympathetic addresses.

THE RECENT VIGILANCE TRIAL.

In consequence of some statements made by a girl who had been lodging at a certain house, and who was at this time in a Rescue Home, Mr. Mills, hon. sec. of the Paddington Vigilance Committee, went in July last to the address named to procure some boxes left behind by this girl. The boxes were refused unless a sum of money claimed for rent was paid, and in consequence of what then took place, the landlady of the house entered an action against Mr Mills for trespass and defamation of character, claiming £250 damages. This action was tried before Mr. Justice Day, when, in face of a large amount of evidence for the defence, a verdict was given against Mr. Mills for £180 damages and costs. The following evening, without even a demand for the money, the sheriff's officer levied a distress for £180. This has been temporarily found, but the costs of plantiff and defence bring the sum up to £350.

In view of the excellent service Mr. Mills has rendered to the cause of Purity, by successfully closing many houses of ill fame, it is felt that this burden should not rest upon him alone, and a relief fund has accordingly been organised. No words of ours are needed to commend this object to the consideration of those able to assist. Contributions may be sent to Mr. W. A Coote, secretary of the National Vigilance Association, 267, Strand, W.C.; or to Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, secretary of the Rescue Society, 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

MR. PRICE HUGHES ON "ROBERT ELSMERE."—The announcement that Rev. Hugh Price Hughes would make "Robert Elsmere" and Mr. Gladstone's article in The Nineteenth Century the subject of his address at St. James's Hall, brought together a large gathering on Sunday afternoon. He said the book was to him of immense interest, because it is a faithful and vivid revelation of the literary scepticism of our time, and because it is an explicit statement of the best attempt that has yet been made in the sceptical school at religious reconstruction. Mr. Hughes alluded to the belief that the leading characters in the book were men who were really living to-day, or had lived till recently; and, moreover, that he himself had known them all. Under the disguise of Mr. Grey it was easy to recognise the illustrious Professor Green. He lived a beautiful life, and there had been many very lovely characters of both sexes who had departed from the orthodox basis of Christianity; but Mr. Hughes asserted that they were unconscious Christians. It was as impossible to keep the ethical teaching of Christ apart from his Divinity as it was to separate the flower from the root, and although there were, as he had admitted, some beautiful lives like that of Professor Green, they were but the rare products of an age saturated with Christianity. This argument Mr. Hughes elaborated, and submitted, moreover, that the essential feature of orthodox Christianity—the personal relation with Christ—was ignored by the author of the book, and that Robert Elsmere in this sense had really never been a Christian.

TRAINING TIME.

Hebrews xii. 11.

Hush thee, my child! Why art thou still repining?
Why chafe beneath the burden thou dost bear?
Dost thou not know that underneath and round thee
Thy Father's arms are placed with loving care?

Dost thou not know that tender, pale verbena,
Doth ne'er the fragrance of its leaf exhale
Till it be crushed, when thou shalt know its sweetness?
For then its hidden virtues all prevail.

The tender vine must bear the painful pruning,
Of the sharp knife, and loss of many a leaf,
Ere it can bring forth grapes to cheer the fainting,
Or render yon poor sufferer sweet relief.

Or that both gold and silver are the purer,
When through the furnace flames they have to go?
The dross is taken only from the metals,
Then cease the fires and the fierce furnace glow.

The diamond must be cut before its brilliance
Can be discovered, or its worth be known;
When polished, how it sparkles in the sunlight!
At last 'tis set to grace the royal crown.

And thou, my child, must cease thy sad repining;
This is thy schooltime; I am training thee,
That thou mayest teach to others what thou learns
But leave thy woes and care alone with Me.

One day, maybe, thou too shalt know more fully
The reason of thy trials by the way:
Yes, know thy Father's love was watching o'er thee,
In patience, as He taught thee day by day.

MORAL SUASION IN NORTHFIELD.

It would appear (says The New York Evangelist) that Mr. Moody got home from his labours in Louisville and beyond, barely in time to save his town from going for licence, as nearly all the neighbouring towns and villages had already done. He "snatched victory from the very jaws of defeat"; and just how he did it, almost or quite single-handed, is thus related by the correspondent of the Springfield Republican:—

"Northfield had its belated meeting this week, and appears to be about the only town hereabouts that has stemmed the licence tide this spring, the town having gone 30 majority for no licence. The new landlord who bought the village hotel a few weeks ago in anticipation of getting a licence has been down to the county seat to express his indignation, within a day or two. He charges the defeat to the evangelist, D. L. Moody, and, in disgust, remarked that if Moody was going to take a hand in that direction he had better buy the hotel. This is the first time that Mr. Moody, who has just returned from an evangelistic campaign through the West, has done any political work, and the way he went at it fairly dazzled the political manipulators of the town.

"After making an earnest appeal to the voters a day or two before town-meeting, he followed up his preaching with practice. Up bright and early election day he drove about the town all day long, tiring out several horses in drumming up the voters. His frank, pushing, business-like way, and honesty of purpose has made him a favourite with the Irishmen of the town, and among the drinking-men he was particularly busy in importuning them to so vote that the doors of temptation would not be legally thrown open before them. His zeal and energy were simply irresistible, and he went through the town like a tornado. While the licence-men were hovering about the town hall trying to make votes, Moody was driving men in from the highways and hedges, first having sent them on their way with a pleasant chat, a practical appeal, and his cheery 'God bless you,' and of course victory was assured. Mr. Moody was not in the hall when the result was declared, but a glib Hibernian, who loves Moody and his cider, too, arose and called out 'Mr. Cheerman, I move the thanks of this town to the Honourable Mister Moody,' a motion that, of course, brought down the house."

ITALY.—A correspondent who has recently returned from a Continental tour, urges the sowing of the good seed in this country. As Roman Catholic influence decreases, the people are, to a large extent, becoming infidels. Visitors to Italy are asked to provide themselves with a supply of Scriptural portions, and small books, tracts, and cards for distribution; and those who are not going abroad are requested to do their best to secure the dissemination of Gospel truth by persons who are travelling.

HOW TO READ THE PAPER.

(1) READ it with prayer. Pray for the editors and for all who assist them in making up the weekly issues, that they may have the guidance and blessing of God upon their labours. Pray that each copy may be made a means of grace to all who see it, turning their hearts to Christ, and instructing them in holy things. Pray that you yourself may rise from its perusal a better man than when you sat down.

(2) Read it with care. It has been prepared with great care, a sense of deep responsibility to God, and a strong desire to promote his cause. It deserves close attention. Give the writers a fair chance to convey to you their exact meaning. A hasty reading will be sure to lead to misapprehensions. It may also cause you to miss something that God meant especially for your good. It is far better to read one article carefully than several.

(3) Read it with patience. You will, of course, find some things you do not like, things that you wish had not been said, or had been said in a different way. No two minds that are at all independent in their thinking will arrive at precisely the same conclusion. That is impossible. Recognise it, and adjust yourself to it. Do not get out of temper when you come to a paragraph that jars a little with your taste, or runs counter to your opinion. It is a valuable part of education to see how a matter seems to an honest man who differs from you, and to look his ideas fairly in the face. Answer his arguments if you can. It will be a good mental exercise. Find the fallacy in his syllogisms. Account for the mental bias or prejudice that he appears to you to have. To read always and only that with which one perfectly agrees is demoralising and enervating.

(4) Read it with kindly charity. The editor is human, and sometimes makes a mistake. He is liable to err in what he puts in and what he leaves out, in what he says and in the way he says it, in the things he clips from other papers and in the things he fondly calls "original," in his "spicy paragraphs" and in his more laboured editorials. No one knows it better than he. He continually laments his deficiencies. But, after all, he does the best he can, and he tries to learn to do still better. So be kind to him, and make some allowance. Possibly you might do no better if you were in his difficult place. Give him the benefit of the doubt. Though an editor, he is still a human being and a Christian brother, and ought to have Christian treatment. Put a charitable construction on what he writes. Do not set him down as quite a fool or absolutely a knave until you are really driven so to do.

(5) Read it for others. If you find a good thing, do not keep it to yourself. Make haste to tell it to somebody. Talk it over at the table, or in the social circle. Your own ideas will gather clearness and force as you try to express them. You remember a fact or a thought that you have mentioned to others twice as long as if you had not. Be a distributor. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth." Do not tear up a good paper that has been a blessing to you. When you are through with it send it to others, and if possible induce them to subscribe.

(6) Read it for yourself. Do not give it all away to other people. There is many a practical lesson or suggestion in every number just adapted to your good. It means you. Take it home. Think it over seriously, and ask yourself before God if you ought not to do something about it. Perhaps a good cause is mentioned as needing funds. Can you not spare a little? Perhaps the evils of some bad habit are set forth. If you are addicted to it, should you not, and can you not, and will you not, leave it off? Perhaps some high attainment in Christian experience is explained. Is it not your duty and privilege to claim it? This is the way to read a paper practically and with the greatest personal profit.

(7) Read it for God. He should be the first and last in all. Whether we eat or drink, or work or play, or sing or read, it should be to his glory. We are the better or the worse for every book or paper we look through. There is responsibility before heaven about it. The reader as well as the writer needs to remember this. If there was not such readiness to read improper things, they would not be written and printed. Every Christian should see to it that there is on his table a good, earnest, religious paper. And he should read it with prayer, with care, with patience, with kindly charity; read it for others, for himself, and for God. – Rev. James Mudge.

MR. HENRY COOK'S GOSPEL SHIP.

AFTER a very successful four months' mission tour with the seamen and fishermen in the West of England (writes Mr. Cook), we have safely returned. With a goodly number of our workers we met to praise the Lord for the manifest tokens of his favour in sparing our lives and vessels, whilst so many valuable lives have been lost. On Saturday last after leaving Teignmouth, everything favoured us with the prospect of casting anchor before midnight in Portsmouth Harbour. Within one hour's sail of the Needles Light House, a fog arose and we were compelled to put to sea, and until midnight we were kept amidst the dangers of the deep. To our relief the fog lifted and we caught a glimpse of St. Catherine's Light, Isle of Wight. Just previous to this a sad collision occurred, and a noble vessel, bound from London to Sydney, was run into and sunk with her captain and eleven of the crew. We have many times been wonderfully preserved amidst fogs and gales of wind both in England and France.

On Tuesday evening, May 1, our two mission ships' crews, with our workers, met to commemorate the commencement of our thirty-sixth year's work. We are now sending the Herald of Mercy, being the larger vessel, to France for the summer, to help the brethren labouring there. We beg the prayers, as well as the gifts of your readers, both for the French and English work. Our expenses for pilotage, wharfage, crews, ropes, repairs, damages, &c., are heavy.

Belle Vue-place, Stoke-road, Gosport.

REV. H. DAHLE, late superintendent of the Norwegian Mission in Madagascar, is now in England, and is shortly returning to Stavanger to act as secretary to the whole of the Norwegian Foreign Missions.

AMONGST DOCK LABOURERS.—Mr. Waite is carrying on a good and encouraging work in the neighbourhood of Victoria Docks. His method is to give a start to those who are desirous of helping themselves to obtain a livelihood. By advancing to one man a small stock of saleable articles, by lending a woman a mangle, or by providing boys with the means to purchase newspapers or a boot-cleaning box, his endeavours have kept many from crime, and have brought them under Christian influence. He has met with several cases of interest in this manner, which have cheered him to still further developments of the work. A free tea was recently given to about 500 dock labourers, with their wives, in the Lecture Hall of the Presbyterian Church, Tidal Basin, after which the Gospel was preached by several ministers. Mr. Waite's address is 27, Woodstock-street, Canning Town, E.

BISHOP TAYLOR lately reached New York after spending four years in Africa. He is fully convinced of the success of his efforts, saying that a foothold has been established for his missions which now begins to show for itself. He reports that the mission has now thirty-six stations among thirty-five different tribes. Thirty-one of these stations are manned, and five are waiting for more missionaries to arrive. One hundred and forty missionaries have been sent to Africa by the society. Thirty-four of these, including a considerable number of children, have returned; six men, six women, and three children have died; and forty-eight men, twenty-eight women, and fifteen children remain, all doing well. In its schools the mission is teaching the natives, not only to read and write, but the simpler industrial arts as well. Some of the missionaries plough in the morning, and teach in the afternoon.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

REV. JOHN WILKINSON, director of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, has just published a summary of work for the Lord among the Jews, and on their behalf, during the year 1887. Every page breathes an earnest solicitude for Israel, and not a few tokens are given of the evident and gracious development of God's declared purpose to make the seed of Jacob "a praise in the earth." The report will be quite welcome reading to those of Christ's servants who make it a point to "pray for the peace of Jerusalem."

Cheering particulars are given of labours in London for the good of resident or visiting Jews, and the details that are presented of the pending circulation of the Hebrew New Testament on the Continent, and in North Africa, are full of encouragement. It is marvellous to read of the results which have, during recent years, followed the reading of New Testaments by Jews. Mr. Wilkinson says:—

"First, in modern times, we have Joseph Rabinowitz, who has formed such a congregation at Kischeneff in Bessarabia, South Russia. Rabinowitz was brought to Christ by reading a New Testament. More recently we have Rabbi Lichtenstein (of Tapio-Tzele, near Buda-Pesth), who is preaching Christ in the same synagogue in which he has officiated for years as Rabbi. As he is not yet baptized, and as there is no law in the synagogue by which a Rabbi can be expelled for heterodoxy, he remains to preach Christ to his Jewish congregation. Rabbi Lichtenstein was converted through a New Testament.

"More recently we have Scheinman in Russia. When he confessed Christ, mild means to bring him back to the synagogue having failed, false charges, sustained by hard swearing, were brought against him for forgery. He was banished to Siberia. A printed sermon came under his eye. It was one sent out by Rabinowitz, with whom Scheinman communicated by letter, and the result was another company of believing Jews. Scheinman was brought to Christ by a New Testament.

"And now we have more recently still, Greger, in Hungary, forming a company of Christ-believing Jews; and he has been brought to Christ by a New Testament. Surely these facts taken together constitute an intimation of the mind of God as to modern methods in evangelising the Jews. Should not earnest Christians, by prayers and contributions, encourage itinerant missions — blending the preaching of the Gospel with the free distribution of the New Testament Scriptures amongst the Jews in every part of the world? This would bring large blessing to the Jews, through whom we might expect incalculable blessing to the Gentile."

ALBION HILL HOME, BRIGHTON.

THIS institution has been the means of doing much good for thirty-three years, in furthering the reformation of females who have erred from the paths of virtue, and the protection of such as may be in circumstances of peculiar temptation. During last year sixty-seven persons were admitted, and on December 31 there were seventy-nine inmates. About half the number were not more than eighteen years of age on admission, and about a quarter of them only sixteen. The institution has suffered in consequence of the closing of the temporary refuge and cottage for servants through want of funds.

Ven. Archdeacon Hannah presided over a meeting held in the Royal Pavilion Music Hall, Brighton, a few days ago, in support of the Home, when Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe delivered an earnest address. He said that some two years before it pleased God to remove Mrs. Vicars, £2000 a year was received in subscriptions and donations. Since then the receipts had decreased rapidly; and instead of being £2000, this year they were only £911 by annual subscriptions and donations.

To keep the Home in a state of efficiency, it wil be necessary to raise the income by, at least, £500 The secretary is Rev. R. C. Macdonald, Home Lodge Queen's-park, Brighton.

Sundays at Sea.

The Church on the Sea. Edited by John Sinclair. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. This volume contains a religious service for every Sunday in the year, suitable for use at sea. Many a spiritually-minded captain will be grateful to the editor for the assistance thus afforded him in the duty of comforting, putting in remembrance, and exhorting those under his care on the deep. This handsomely-printed work will doubtless be used to great advantage both on board fishing boats and trading vessels, and it is quite likely that its employment will assist in the development of the power of acceptable utterance in the persons using it. The sermons are by evangelical preachers of various denominations, and there are forms of prayers and lessons in full for every service.

The Epistle to the Romans.

Exposition of the Ninth Chapter of the Epistle to the Romans. By James Morison, D.D. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a new edition of a really solid piece of exegetical work, and in addition to some valuable excursus, there is appended a brief treatment of the tenth chapter of the same Epistle. The exposition proceeds on historical lines, and a flood of light is shed upon the Apostle's reasoning. Dr. Morison finds no unconditional reprobation in the Epistle; no reprobation such as is absolutely unprovoked or undeserved. He points out with great power that while God's sovereignty may well be magnified, it must be borne in mind that there is more that this in the circle of Divinity. There is justice, righteousness, holiness, graciousness, goodness, wisdom, mercy, and love, none of which moral contents of the character of God should be held in abeyance for the purpose of making infinite room for the one relationship of sovereignty. Dr. Morison's work is likely to do much good, not only by way of helping the Christian student, but also in the direction of drawing out the pious mind in admiration of the beneficent and glorious works and purposes of God.

MISCELLANEOUS

Raynbirds and Robins, by E. C. Matthews (Elliot Stock), is a prettily told story of the everyday life of two neighbouring families. The characters are faithfully sketched, and young readers will find much to admire, as well as some things to avoid.

The "Short Arrows" in The Quiver are of very varied interest this month. We are specially drawn to the two short illustrated notices of Miss Mittendorff's Orphan Home, and Miss Meredith Brown's "Shaftesbury Institute for Girls," at Lisson Grove.

A new edition is issued of Mr. Isaac Pitman's Manual of Phonography. 1s. 6d. I. Pitman & Sons, Amen Corner. In framing the revisions and improvements, the advice has been sought of many experienced writers of the system, so that in its latest form it may be said to approximate to perfection. Students should supply themselves with the new edition.

Whither are we Drifting? or, The Progress of England Rome-wards. By the Right Hon. Lord Robert Montagu. (2d. Morgan & Scott.) This pamphlet deals with an important present-day subject in an earnest and decidedly able manner. The rites and ceremonies of Rome are shown to have a Pagan origin, and Ritualism is shown to lead to Romanism. Lord Robert Montagu tells the Ritualists that "their love of antiquity has been landing them in Paganism; and that the nearer they bring the Church of England to Rome, the farther it is from God."

Convocation on the Opium Question. By Rev. Goodeve Mabbs. 1d. Morgan & Scott. Persons interested in the opium question will hail this vigorous tract, which clearly shows that the resolutions on the subject, passed in the Lower House of the Convocation of Canterbury, in February last, were based on unreliable information. In the words of Mr. Mabbs, the Report of the Committee of Convocation contained statements which "have no counterpart in the facts themselves, and which, in essential particulars, are the very opposite of the facts." The misapprehensions that have arisen are plainly pointed out.

The Names of God in Holy Scripture, a Revelation of his Nature and Relationships. By Andrew Jukes. 4s. 6d. Longmans. To Mr. Jukes we are indebted for a very suggestive little volume on "The Offerings," and for another on "The Characteristic Differences of the Four Gospels." His "Types of Genesis" is also valuable, though somewhat marred by mysticism. He has, however, gone beyond a sober and safe exegesis in his "Restitution of all things" and "The New Life." The same error of universalism characterises the book before us. These lectures are highly instructive in so far as they show why God is revealed by different names at different times, and explain the appropriateness of the name to the circumstances under which it is used. But it is a very perilous mode of exposition, by inferences drawn from these names, to set aside the plain declarations of the inspired Word. If we are ambassadors for Christ, and our commission is, "Preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be condemned," what must be said of an ambassador who teaches that there is a secret meaning beneath, and contrary to the obvious one? Mr. Jukes confesses in his chapter on "The Most High," "There is surely peril in this high truth." But Scripture never says so, but "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." If perilous, it surely is not truth.

The Coming of the King. By Rev. J. Robinson Gregory. 1s. T. Woolmer. The object of this little book is devotional rather than exegetic. Readiness for the returning Saviour is forcibly urged by divers considerations.

Lyric Echoes. By Edward Nowell. London Literary Society. A book of verses on various subjects, chiefly religious. "Echoes" is a very appropriate title, for the thoughts, and sometimes whole lines of standard poets are plentiful in these pages.

The Sunday Magazine for May (Isbister & Co., Limited) contains an interesting paper from the pen of Mr. Thomas Paul, entitled, "Hospital Ships for the Trawlers." Four excellent drawings by Messrs. Wells & Staniland illustrate the article.

Ebenezer and Its Issues. By Rev. William Miller, LL.D., Principal of the Madras Free Church Christian College. This is a sermon, based on 1 Sam. vii. 12, and dealing with the subject of missionary education in India. (Edinburgh: Macniven & Wallace.)

The Incorporated Free and Open Church Association, 24, Bedford-street, W.C., has issued in pamphlet form (2d.) the recent judgment of Mr. Justice Stephen in the Hampshire Reformatory Case, affirming the right of every parishioner to a seat in the parish church.

An excellent collection of four-page illustrated tracts, for use among sea-faring men, is published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott. Our Sailors' Series (6d. per packet, 48 tracts assorted). The narratives are culled from the personal experiences of sailors who have received blessing at the Ratcliffe Welcome Home.

Ought the Church to interfere in Politics? In this printed lecture, "A United Presbyterian" advances what he calls "a plea for an old position." That position is the negative side of the question, and the author incidentally argues for the separation of religion from State patronage and control. (6d. Edinburgh: Andrew Elliot, 17, Princes-street.)

The Early Years of Christianity. Dr. E. de Pressensé's comprehensive history of the first three centuries of the Christian Church is now being issued in sixpenny parts by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. The work will be completed in twenty-five parts, appearing fortnightly in stiff paper covers. Doubtless many who would not otherwise read this remarkable book will now avail themselves of the opportunity to secure it on easy terms.

A Concise History of Australian Settlements and Progress. This was published in January last in the form of a centennial supplement to The Sydney Morning Herald. Persons interested in Australian affairs will take pleasure in perusing these two hundred and more large pages of letterpress, which are accompanied by an excellent map. It is gratifying to know that the Government of the Colony has purchased a large number of copies for free distribution to public institutions in the United Kingdom, with the object of disseminating useful information.

Government by Police. By Josephine E. Butler. T. Fisher Unwin. The substance of this essay was published nine years ago, in the endeavour to rouse the attention of the people to the dangers of a centralised police system under the direct control of the Executive Government. As the ordinary citizen has yet to learn anything beyond the A. B. C. of this important subject, the publication of Mrs. Butler's excellent essay, in a revised form, taking account of present-day grievances and controversies, is quite justified. "Decentralisation" is no party cry; that it is a desirable reform is well shown in these vigorous pages.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.:—Sermons in Symbols, by Rev. Hugh B. Chapman.

Messrs. J. Nisbet & Co.:—St. John, the author of the Fourth Gospel, by Rev. H. Heber Evans, B.A. 6s.

Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster:—"Theopneustia:" the plenary inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. By the late L. Gaussen, D.D. With preface, by C. H. Spurgeon. 3s. 6d.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE NORWEGIAN MISSION TO SEAMEN have decided to establish a station in the port of Buenos Ayres, where the numbers of seamen from the northern countries are increasing very rapidly. It is through a munificent donation from a Norwegian lady that the Society has been enabled to take this step.

JAPANESE IN THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.—Three missionaries—K. Miyama, his wife, and T. Ukai, Christian Japanese—sailed from San Francisco recently for the Sandwich islands, to labour amongst their countrymen there, who number about five thousand. These earnest missionaries are the fruits of the Methodist Japanese Mission in San Francisco.

MADAGASCAR.—Norwegian missionaries who have recently arrived in London from Madagascar in the mission-ship Paulus are strongly denouncing the liquor traffic carried on mainly by European traders. The Queen has appealed to the European Governments for protection, but apparently without success. Drunken and deteriorated natives were constantly met with by the Norwegian missionaries, especially on the coasts.

MRS. SCHAUFFLER, now in her 86th year, the first unmarried lady missionary ever sent out from the United States, delivered a remarkably impressive address recently at the annual meeting of the women's board of foreign missions in New York. She was sent out in 1829. to Smyrna by the ladies' missionary society of New Haven. There were few dry eyes in the large audience as the venerable lady spoke of the happy years she has spent in the Lord's work, and charged the women not to stop but to go forward.

CHINA.—The Lancet states that a medical missionary nearly lost his life recently through an outburst of fanaticism at Fuh-chau. It seems that the doctor, who was attending a patient with hœmorrhage, immediately proceeded to check the latter in disregard of a native superstition, according to which delay should have been made until the patient's friends had finished consulting the gods in the joss-house. The patient died, and the Chinese would have boiled the doctor in oil but for the courage of some of the converts.

ROMANISM IN CANADA.—Referring to the approaching Conference of the Evangelical Alliance, to be held in Montreal next October, the Toronto Evangelical Churchman remarks:—"We believe that the proposed Conference is needed as a demonstration and rallying-ground in the face of the aggressive Romanism which threatens our political and moral as well as our religious institutions. Nowhere could a Conference more effectively secure this purpose than in Montreal, where 50,000 Protestants are surrounded by 150,000 Romanists, and in the Province of Quebec, amidst whose million and a half the 200,000 Protestants are almost lost.

THE NEW SOCIETY IN PARIS for the evangelisation of Israel (whose population in France and Algeria is stated to be 130,000) has issued a circular showing the pressing necessity of the work by three considerations. First, the anti-Semitic feeling of the world against the Jews, pointing to a new period of persecution in their history; secondly, the movement towards Christianity of the Jews in Eastern Europe; thirdly, the formation also in various countries of free societies of students called Jewish Institutes, in which the Jewish question is studied under competent professors, with a missionary aim, praying for the conversion of Israel. This encouraging step forward is supported by pastors and Christian laymen of all the churches.—Evangelical Christendom.

TWO SONS OF THE MURDERER of John Williams, the pioneer missionary to the South Sea Islands, are the leading teachers in one of the schools in connection with the native congregation at Erromanga, one of the New Hebrides Islands, of which Rev. H. A. Robertson, Canadian Presbyterian missionary, is the pastor. They conduct, one the infant and the other an adult class, within a stone's throw of the spot on Erromanga where Williams fell a martyr, while endeavouring to land, with the object of settling missionaries there, in October, 1839. On this island, the natives of which were until recent years in gross darkness and exceedingly wild and savage, the light of the Gospel is now shining in thirty villages, and a great many of the people are decided Christians.

HURRICANE IN THE SOUTH SEAS.—The island of Rarotonga, one of the Hervey group, has been visited by a severe hurricane, of which Rev. J. J. K. Hutchin, of the London Missionary Society, gives a sad description. The chapel at Titikaveka was completely unroofed, and the mission premises at Avarua suffered severely. In the villages of Ngatangiia and Matavera many of the houses were levelled to the ground, and others much damaged. The plantations of the natives have felt the full blast of the hurricane. Half the oranges and the greater part of the coffee are blown down, while very few bananas or plantains are left standing. To add to the general distress, the people are destitute of taro, bread-fruit, and sweet potatoes.

THE FLOODS IN HONAN.—The repairs in the great breach of the Yellow River go on very slowly, and it is said that the difficulties are so excessive that the officials who are supervising the operations despair of success. If their forebodings prove true, and there is too much reason to fear they will, the submerged part of Honan, comprising some of the most fertile and, until last autumn, most populous part of that province, will remain a lake. It is, of course, impossible to form any accurate ideas of the actual loss of life, but the calamity was immense in its proportions, so much so, as many cities, many towns, and hundreds of small and large villages were destroyed by the surging waters. it seems to us the Chinese estimate that 2,000,000 of people were drowned is not altogether incredible. In very many places, on the lower levels especially, not a soul escaped alive.—Chinese Times.

JUDAS ISCARIOT.

PSALM xli.; JOHN xiii. 18; ACTS i. 16—20.

THE history of Judas Iscariot is a mystery. There is mystery in the procedure of the Saviour with respect to him, inasmuch as he was chosen to be an apostle, and a "mystery of iniquity," in the fact that one so highly favoured should have fallen into such depths of sin. Note with respect to the history of Judas:—

(1) THE PROPHETIC ANTICIPATION (Ps. xli.).—Two Psalms contain references to Judas (comp. Ps. cix. with Acts i. 20, and Ps. xli. with John xiii. 18). In Ps. cix. we have what Chrysostom calls "prophecy in the form of a curse." In Ps. xli. we have the treachery of Judas foreshadowed in the treachery of Ahithophel. Note here (a) The perverse tongue (ver. 6). Judas was guilty of blasphemous speech when he spoke with the enemies of Christ with a view to his arrest (Matt. xxvi. 14). This sin might have been forgiven (Matt. xii. 32). (b) The corrupt heart (ver. 6). In the heart of Judas we see the devil's thoughts (John xiii. 2), and the devil himself (John xiii. 27). The heart of Judas "gathered iniquity." He rebuked benevolence (John xii. 5), stole money (ver. 6), held ungodly converse with the ungodly (Matt. xxvi. 14, 15), sold Jesus for silver (ver. 15), watched for an opportunity to betray Him (ver. 16), dipped his hand in the dish when he had a foul purpose in his heart (ver. 23), acted as a guide to those who took Jesus (Acts i. 16), gave the wicked kiss by which the Master was identified (Matt. xxvi. 48), and committed suicide (Matt. xxvii. 5). (c) The subtle purpose. "Whisper" (ver. 7). Comp. "Is it I?" (Matt. xxvi. 25). (d) The profession of friendship (ver. 9). Judas "kissed Jesus" (Matt. xxvi. 49). Peter was at least more honest when he denied Him with an oath. (e) The acceptance of the King's bounty. "My bread." So Judas (Matt. xxvi. 23). Comp. "eating unworthily" (1 Cor. xi. 27). (f) The betrayal of confidence, "in whom I trusted." Judas was trusted with the apostolic office. Solemn trust! See Paul's thoughts about such a trust (1 Thess. ii. 4). From the greatest heights of privilege Judas fell into the deepest depths of shame (Acts i. 25). He transgressed the laws of friendship, of honour, of love, of hospitality, and of truth, and as the result "went to his own place.'

(2) THE REALISATION (John xiii. 18).—Note (a). A quotation. Jesus endorsed the Book of Psalms (comp. Mark xii. 36). (b) A qualification. The Lord Jesus can distinguish between the false and the true (Mal. iii. 18). (c) An assurance. The Lord knows his own (John x. 14). (d) An explanation. The act of Judas was permitted that the Scriptures might be fulfilled. No historical event can be contrary to a Scripture prediction. All evil is anticipated in the Divine purposes (2 Tim. iii. 1). (e) A sad memory. "Lifted up the heel." "The notion," says Dr. Westcott, "is that of brute violence."

(3) THE RETROSPECT (Acts i. 16—20).—Judas lost his character, his office, his money, his life, and his soul (John xvii. 12; Acts i. 25). Note the five warnings given to him by Jesus on the night of the betrayal (John xiii. 11, 18, 21, 26, 27). How sad, that he was lost in spite of all!

OPEN-AIR PREACHERS.—The quarterly meeting of the Open-air Mission, held on Monday evening at Regent's Park Chapel, was a specially refreshing season. Rev. F. B. Meyer received his guests with much cordiality, and entered thoroughly into the spirit of fellowship which marked the proceedings. After enjoying the hospitality of the friends at the chapel, a preliminary meeting for prayer was held in the Lecture Hall. A subsequent address delivered by Mr. Meyer, on "The True Method of Christian Work," was full of quiet spiritual power. Its seven points were: (1) The necessity of pure motive, (2) of full surrender to God, (3) of daily cleansing, (4) of a consistent life, (5) of continual prayer, (6) of fulness of the Spirit's blessing, and (7) of intimate knowledge of the Word.

JESUS IN GETHSEMANE.

MATT. xxvi. 36—46. Golden Text: Heb. v. 8.

GETHSEMANE=Oilpress—was an enclosed garden on the lower slope of Olivet, just across the Kedron as one came from Jerusalem. Visitors to the city are shown a garden containing eight olive trees of enormous age, which is said to be the actual garden, and the very trees under whose shade Christ prayed and suffered. But the real site probably lies several hundred yards to the N.E., while the trees themselves must have been destroyed at the siege of Jerusalem, if not before.

THE SPIRIT INDEED IS WILLING, &c.—Spoken, not to apologise for their sleep, but as a reason why they should watch and pray for the future. "In both Christ and the disciples there is a willing spirit: in both, weakness of the flesh. But in Christ the spirit conquers the flesh, and He is a victor: in the disciples the flesh conquers the spirit, and they are defeated."—Abbot.

AND HE CAME AND FOUND THEM ASLEEP AGAIN.—May we not say that He still yearned for their sympathy, and so came to them again? THEIR EYES WERE HEAVY.—Luke says they were sleeping for sorrow. Great sorrow often induces stupor, so theirs was not the sleep of indifference. Had they cared less, they might have kept awake more easily. And yet Christ was grieved deeply by their failure to watch with Him. Had their sympathy been deeper, and their understanding of the crisis better, they would doubtless have kept awake.

LESSON-POINTS.

(1) Concerning Christ's suffering. The secret sources of his sorrow are not disclosed, so we must beware of irreverent speculation. The following facts will, however, guide us a little. (a) It was unspeakably awful. "He was sore amazed" (Mark xiv. 33). "Being in an agony, &c., and his sweat was, as it were, great drops of blood" (Luke xx. 44). "There appeared an angel unto Him from heaven, strengthening Him" (Luke xxii. 43). We may suppose his sorrow to be such as would have killed Him outright, but for this miraculous strength given by the angel to his failing body. His prayer (ver. 39) shows with what awful horror of soul He regarded his cup of sorrow. (2) Both his purity and his love increased his power to suffer. Sin deadens our nature. Who can tell of how much greater suffering Christ was capable, in body and soul, because He was sinless? Then, too, "his very love for those who slew Him made their hatred wound Him, as a mother's heart is doubly wounded when a son strikes her."—Glover. (3) He suffered for us: "wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities." (4) He was possessed of such mental and moral power to grasp all the details and dread reality of his coming shame and death as made the prospect incalculably terrible. (5) The value of our Lord's example of obedience is increased immeasurably by the horror with which He anticipated his sufferings. He accepts them at the very moment when heart and flesh most shrink.

Illustration.—"A friend once called the attention of Napoleon to the blanched face of an officer as he was marching into battle, as showing that he was a coward. Napoleon replied that that man was the bravest man in his army; for he saw clearly and felt keenly his danger, and yet went forward into the thickest of the battle.

(2) Concerning our Lord's Humanity.—Point out that people in sorrow naturally crave for sympathy, as thirsty men crave water; that Jesus was like us in this craving, no one knows how deeply, the warm sympathy of Peter, James, and John. How it endears Him to us, and makes his humanity real, to see Him in his sorrow leaning on the love of friends, and grieving when they disappoint Him!

(3) Concerning his Friendship.—He shows sorrow, but no anger, when they fail to watch with Him. Yet how natural anger would have been! Even then, too, despite his own great grief, He thinks of their danger.

(4) Concerning the Bearing of Trouble.—While it is right and natural to lean on human sympathy, "to look for some to take pity," it is very wrong and foolish to lean one's weight on even the best human friend. God only should have our chief confidence. He is our refuge in the time of trouble. Jesus looked for human sympathy, and that failed Him: but his great hope was in his Heavenly Father, and so He overcame.

Observe the striking contrast between Jesus and his friends. They found a passing solace in mere forgetfulness: his one and only solace was prayer. Their sleep was to their great loss; his prayer brought Him most glorious victory. "The Old and the New Testaments give one and the same receipt for bearing trouble—prayer."

(5) Concerning Answers to Prayer.—Was our Lord's prayer answered? Heb. v. 7 says it was: "He was heard in that He feared." How? First, and chiefly, by the bringing of his desire into line with God's will. Observe how the earlier prayer, "If it be possible, let this cup pass from Me," changes into, "If this cup may not pass, thy will be done." The desire to avoid the suffering, if possible, is now changed into a deep and active desire that He may not avoid it, and that He may be strengthened unto the end. The first and chief end of prayer is attained when we adopt God's plan as ours. Then, too, He was strengthened in body by the angel. God always answers true prayer; but He may give, not what we ask, but what we should have asked if we knew all things as He does.

(6) Concerning Submission.—His was no cold, determined yielding to a fate He could not resist, but the deep, loving assent of his heart to the mysterious will of One whom He loved and trusted in all his being. In all the Bible there is nothing more sublime than this whole-hearted submission to the will of the Father in the midst of sorrow so awful. The greatest victory that anyone can possibly gain in this life is the glad and hearty submission to the will of God. We are Christlike just as we attain to this. The great fight of life is to live the prayer, "Thy will be done."

RATCLIFF "STRANGERS' REST."

THE monthly meeting of workers and friends, presided over by Mr. [illegible], was held last Friday evening. Mr. J. T. Isaac, the secretary, stated that the past month had been a time of real blessing. There is, however, much work to be done, both among the sailors at the Rest and at the Lads' Institute, where the rough lads of the Highway are gathered in, and helpers and funds are needed.

An opportunity being afforded by the chairman for personal testimony, cases of conversion and blessing were given; one sailor stating that he had met at Hong Kong and Calcutta those who had been converted to God at the Rest, and he himself blessed God for it, because it was there that he was "born again."

Dr. Barnardo gave an address on "Helpers of the War" (1 Chron. xii.). David's helpers were "not of double heart"; they had "understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do"; their "faces were like the faces of lions, and they were as swift as the roes upon the mountains"; they "could keep rank," and "were with David three days, eating and drinking." Whole-heartedness, understanding of the revealed purposes of God, promptness in obedience, courage, full surrender to God for use in his service, are what are needed by those who are engaged in the conflict with sin, and these truths were pressed home in an eminently practical address.

THE KEITH-FALCONER MISSION, in South Arabia, says The Free Church of Scotland Monthly, is at last fully equipped. Dr. Alex Paterson, the new medical missionary, is in charge, with Mr. Matthew Lockhead as his assistant. The Free Church Foreign Mission Committee asked Rev. W. R. W. Gardner, who has volunteered for Africa, to go to Aden, and Mr. Gardiner, who will be presented to the Inverness General Assembly this month, gave up long-formed plans to carry on Professor Keith-Falconer's work.

DEATH OF REV. SAMUEL HEBDITCH.—Much grief was expressed in Nonconformist circles of Hackney on Monday on the receipt of a telegram announcing the death of Rev. Samuel Hebditch. The deceased minister was formerly for many years pastor of Clapton-park Congregational Church, which he relinquished to undertake the pastorate of a church in Adelaide, South Australia. Mr. Hebditch had attained high position amongst the Australian Congregational churches, having during the past year occupied the presidential chair of the South Australian Congregational Union.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. E. O. Williams, late vicar of St. Stephen's, Burmantofts, Leeds, has been accepted by the China Inland Mission, and will go out to China in the autumn with Mr. Hudson Taylor.

Archdeacon Burney, vicar of St. Mark's, Surbiton, in moving a resolution on Sunday Observance; in the Lower House of Convocation, said he had painful evidence in his own parish of the deplorable increase of the desecration of the Lord's Day.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Isabella Young and Agnes Thomson are engaged in mission work in the meetings of county Kent.

At Yorks Quarterly Meeting, held in Leeds on April 25, George Satterthwaite gave a cheering account of his visit to Palestine.

The "Jesuit Sisters" are opposing the Friends on Mount Lebanon, and holding out awful threats to children. Yet the schools have never been so full as at present

The Friends' Mexican Mission has been reinforced by the addition of Margaret M. Marriage of Iowa, U.S.A., and the work among the North American Indians seems prospering.

Dublin Yearly Meeting commenced on May 2. The Epistles from America, Syria, and India, were very interesting, and indicative of progress. The meetings for worship and special Gospel meetings in Dublin were times of blessing.

BAPTIST.

The autumn assembly of the Baptist Union will be held this year at Huddersfield.

Mr. Spurgeon was sufficiently recovered to be enabled to officiate at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday last. His health, we are glad to say, is now largely restored.

The Church at Gunnersbury, N.W., under the pastorate of Rev. J. Cumming Brown, has been making very encouraging progress. The church has only been in existence for eight months. and during that period twenty-four members have been added.

At the monthly meeting of the Regent's-park Chapel Total Abstinence Society about a hundred cabmen and their wives were entertained to supper. Rev. F. B. Meyer, and three teetotal cabmen. gave addresses, and the pledge was taken by eighteen persons.

Rev. Dr. Edward Judson has received in money and subscriptions, counting value of present property, for the new Adoniram Judson Memorial Tabernacle. over 114,000 dollars of the 200,000 dollars asked for. A plot of land in Washington-square, New York, has been selected for the building.

Rev. C. B. Sawday, of Vernon-square Chapel, King's Cross. has accepted the invitation of the church at Melbourne Hall, Leicester, to become their pastor. The congregation of Vernon Chapel have received this announcement with deep regret, as during a pastorate extending to nearly twenty-five years Mr. Sawday has by his earnestness endeared himself to the church. About 2,500 persons have been received into fellowship during that period.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. S. Flemington, of Cannington, has decided to resign the pastorate at Michaelmas, in order to devote his time to special evangelistic mission work in the villages of Somerset and other counties.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has conducted an eight days' mission at Atherstone. A correspondent speaks of the great power of Mr. Hallowes as a special missioner; he is destined to do a great work in the churches.

Abbey-road Church, Barrow-in-Furness, of which Rev. T. A. Leonard is minister, reports among new organisations started: monthly sermons for young men, children's morning service, and monthly social church and congregational meetings, young men's and young women's guilds, &c.

Rev. W. F. Clarkson has been holding a week of special services at Rugby. On one evening the subject of discourse was "The Religious Experiences of John Bunyan," which Mr. Clarkson dealt with in an interesting and entertaining manner. Bible-reading services and children's services have also been conducted.

Rev. J. and Mrs. Mountain, after more than three years' mission tour in Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand, sailed for Canada on March 26. They have conducted a considerable number of missions in different parts of all these Colonies, and have met with warm appreciation. They purpose labouring for some months in Canada prior to returning to England.

The pastor of Brixton Independent Church and a number of friends visited Herne Bay, on Monday week, to attend the opening of a cottage home in connection with the church, named the Baldwin Brown Cottage Home, in memory of the late pastor. The object is to give the sick poor of Lambeth who come under the cognisance of the district visitors of the Brixton Church an opportunity of rest and change.

Mr. B. Short, for many years a successful lecturer and evangelist, has arrived from Australia after a residence of nearly thirty years. and will gladly visit any Congregational churches during his few months' stay in England. He brings with him, and uses to enforce Gospel truths, a very beautiful and complete model of the Tabernacle, the Ark, Mercy-seat, &c., the whole occupying twelve feet in space. Mr. Short has special aptitude in dealing with young people, as well as interesting and benefiting adults. His services are gratuitous, and communications should be addressed to him at 40, Formosa-street, Warwick-road, Maida Vale, London, W.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The debt of £20,000 on the foreign mission work of the United Presbyterian Church has been wiped out.

Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, has been constrained by his congregation to withdraw his resignation of the pastorate. Dr. Pierson conducts a great class for Sunday school teachers and superintendents every Saturday afternoon, to which hundreds come from the city, and from places eight and ten miles distant.

The English Presbyterian Synod, which met last week, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, appointed the Moderator for the current year (Rev. Dr. Oswald Dykes) to the vacant Barbour chair, and the Principalship of the Theological College in London, in place of Dr. Wm. Chalmers, to whom it was decided to allow a retiring pension of £300 per annum for life. It was decided that next year's Synod be held in Regent-square Church, London.

METHODIST.

The good work of the Birmingham Central Mission is progressing. Every succeeding week the interest is deepening and widening, and there are constant cases of conversion.

A Young Men's Union, originated entirely by young men, has been inaugurated in connection with the church in Tredegar-road, Bow, and promises to be of much usefulness.

The Welsh blind scholar and preacher, Mr. J. Puleston Jones, of Oxford University, has been preaching to large congregations in various parts of North Wales, and many a stout heart was touched by the sightless evangelist.

As a result of a special effort to bring under the influences of the Gospel those who do not usually attend a place of worship, a good work has been going on at Gainsborough for some weeks. Prayer-meetings have swelled into soul-saving services, and crowded gatherings have resounded with praise.

The mission at Abberley, which, it will be remembered, was closed some weeks ago by the local squire, continues to prosper. The chapel is usually full on Sunday evenings, the people coming from some of the adjacent hamlets, as well as from the village itself. Conversions frequently take place, and the evangelist and friends on the ground are full of thankfulness and hope.

Rev. Thomas Champness has received, through his two South African evangelists, the firstfruits of South Africa for the support of The Joyful News Mission, about eight persons in the neighbourhood where the evangelists are working having sent, entirely unsolicited, a donation of £8. Rev. David Hill, of Hankow, has written to Mr. Champness commending to him the claims of Central China, whither, it is expected, one or two Joyful News evangelists will be sent by and by.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A Professorship of Pastoral Theology has been established in Trinity College, Dublin, and Rev. Canon Wynne has received the appointment.

Very successful Gospel mission services have been held at Castlebar Methodist Church, by Rev. C. Inwood, and at Cavan Parish Church, by Rev. Canon Wynne.

The services conducted in Belfast by Revs. W. Hay Aitken and A. R. D'Arcy continue to be largely attended by persons of various denominations, and night after night a considerable number remain for the inquiry-meeting.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Mr. Charles Sturge, a well-known member of the Society of Friends.—Rev. W. Evans, travelling evangelist of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Connexion.—Rev. Malcolm MacGregor, of the Free Church, Urquhart.—Mr. John Roxburgh, a veteran United Presbyterian elder; during his youth he worked alongside of Robert Moffat, about whom he was wont to relate many interesting personal reminiscences.—Rev. Thomas Hughes, for several years the hard working pastor of Bethel Calvinistic Methodist Chapel, Rhyl.—Rev. James Orr, Presbyterian minister, at Newmills, Gilford, co. Down.—Rev. E. H. Harrison, vicar of Kington, Herefordshire.—Rev. William Williamson, parish minister of Kirkmaiden, Wigtownshire.—Mrs. Robert, widow of the founder of the Robert College, Constantinople. — Rev. George Walker, of Oldham, a prominent Wesleyan minister.—Bishop G. K. Dunlop missionary Bishop in New Mexico of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America.—Rev. J. Cowper Thompson, suddenly, while worshipping in Park Church, Glasgow, last Sunday.

MISS MACPHERSON'S WORK.—At the noon prayer-meeting at 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday, Mr. and Mrs. Merry attended with another batch of children about to leave Miss Macpherson's Home for Canada. Rev. T. Grant, of Tain, addressed some touching words to the little ones, for whom fervent prayers were offered to the Father of Mercies. The party, consisting of be-between ninety and one hundred boys and girls, will sail on Thursday next in the Sardinian.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW.—At the meeting of the crew at the Welcome Home last week several sailor members gave bright and simple testimony. Rev. Marcus Rainsford spoke on Heb. vi. 15—20, dwelling specially upon the anchor of the soul cast in heaven itself. Miss de Broen asked prayer for godless France. Mrs. Lucas Shadwell gave a cheering account of work at Rye Harbour. Captain Hutchinson spoke of work amongst sailors in various ports of the world. Miss Macpherson gave an animated address that delighted the sailors. Several of the crew have been used of God lately.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

In connection with the C.E T.S. anniversary 420 sermons were delivered in London churches.

During the last month the Gospel temperance work in and near Dumfries has been much strengthened by a splendid course of lectures given by Mr. J. A. Smith, late of Bowery Mission, New York.

In Joyful News Mr. Champness tells of a wealthy brewer who rents a house at £160 a year, turns it into a beerhouse, puts in as manager a working man at small wages, and makes for himself a handsome return. To talk of compensation in such a case would be absurd.

Lord Brabazon stated recently that during the eight years he had been connected with a large London hospital there had been a marked improvement in the medical students. Some forty attended a prayer-meeting at his house lately, several wearing the blue ribbon, and many are temperance workers.

A prospectus has been issued in England for the conversion into a public company of one of the largest French breweries, the usual large interest being held forth as a temptation to investors. It is to be hoped that Christians will abstain from soiling their hands with revenue which comes to a very great extent from the sorrow and sin of others.

FOREIGN.

The New Zealand Alliance has in less than two years secured an organised majority in the House in favour of the direct veto.

A three years' course of study of temperance books has been inaugurated in America. Examination papers will be issued, and diplomas granted.

Rev. J. C. Price, who has done splendid temperance work amongst his coloured brethren in the Southern States, has been appointed Minister-Resident and Consul-General of the United States at Liberia.

The legislature of Ohio has passed a law prohibiting the sale of cigarettes and tobacco to minors under the age of sixteen. The effects, both mental and physical that come from cigarette smoking are baneful in the extreme.

The growing expenditure upon spirits in France has given great anxiety to those who have the real welfare of the country at heart, and now it appears from the Government statistics that "the consumption of beer is greatly on the increase, having nearly doubled itself during the last few years, the consumption in 1887 being nearly six million barrels."

A new temperance organisation has been formed in America recently which promises to be a powerful factor in the promotion of the great reform. It is intended to include commercial travellers, and is called the "Commercial Temperance League." The members are required to take two pledges: first, to drink no intoxicating liquors, and, second, to get ten others to join the league. Branch societies have already been established in many of the principal cities.

SOLDIERS AT ALDERSHOT.—Tracts, leaflets, and Gospel books are needed for distribution in the large military camp at Aldershot. At the end of this month the dwellers in the camp will be augmented by several militia regiments, &c. The spring drills will shortly commence, and there will be a large number of troops in camp. Parcels (carriage paid) will be thankfully received by John Poate, Sherbourne-road, Farnborough, Hants.

SHOREDITCH Y.M.C.A.—The second year's work has been full of encouragement. This is made clear from the report, which, although fairly exhaustive, is cast in somewhat too "tall" a mould. The members and associates number 270. An appeal is made for special donations with which to clear off the debt of £814 on the institution, incurred, for the most part, in altering the Association premises, so as to adapt them to the special requirements of the work.

"THE MOUNTAIN STREAM."—This is the title of the eighth annual report of the Highland Temperance League. It seems that the work done during last year was accompanied by many gratifying results, notwithstanding the operation of special adverse influences. The prolonged depression in the agricultural and fishing interests, the staple industries of the Highland counties, materially reduced the contributions to the funds of the League, as well as other kindred institutions. Nevertheless, the directors have abundant cause for thankfulness to God, and in intimating their desire to continue as a strictly Gospel temperance agency, they declare that they are "assured that success in the future can only be attained by following the tried paths in the work of the present." Mr. A. Blackhall, 16. Union-street, Inverness, is the secretary of the League.

MR. HENRY TILL has for two years been labouring acceptably in and around Birmingham by means of Bible-carriage work, and will be glad of increased support to enable him to extend his sphere of usefulness. He is well known by some prominent Christian friends. His present address is, Gresmere Mount, New Wortley, Leeds.

NORTH-EAST LONDON GOSPEL MISSIONS.

It is once more our pleasure to plead for our Country Holiday Fund, now the sunshine and flowers are come. The joy the readers of "The Christian" have sown these past four summers by their kind assistance cannot be told. The bright warm weather of the past few days has set hundreds of little hearts beating and lips chattering over the hoped-for Country Holidays amongst the 2,000 Children attending our Eight Mission Halls and Factory Girls' Institute, all situated in the densest parts of East London and the Docks. Not a few of these Children already labour with others for the cruel pittance of the "sweaters" in "dens" or homes that would grieve us to describe.

Among the cripples taken last year was a boy who had never before left the court in which he was born. With the help of his two friendly crutches he managed to get from the tram to the train, though with great effort. But before the three happy weeks at our Holiday Home had expired, he had grown so much stronger that he dispensed with one of his crutches, to his great delight.

To secure the poorest and most needy, we make poverty or nakedness no hindrance, and not infrequently take them from homes where even cleanliness is impossible; but these are, notwithstanding, in many cases the children most to be pitied and in the deepest need of such assistance.

We are hoping friends may enable us to open another Holiday Home this season, a portion of which we intend to devote to weakly mothers with sickly infants, who have no country friends or means of obtaining a change, and are not eligible for Convalescent Homes. We scarcely need say that it is our constant endeavour to seek the spiritual good of our charges at all times, not the least so while they are under our care at our Country Holiday Home.

Contributions will be gladly received by the Editor of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; or would be gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Director,

WILLIAM CHORLEY,
2, Marquess Grove, Canonbury, London, N.

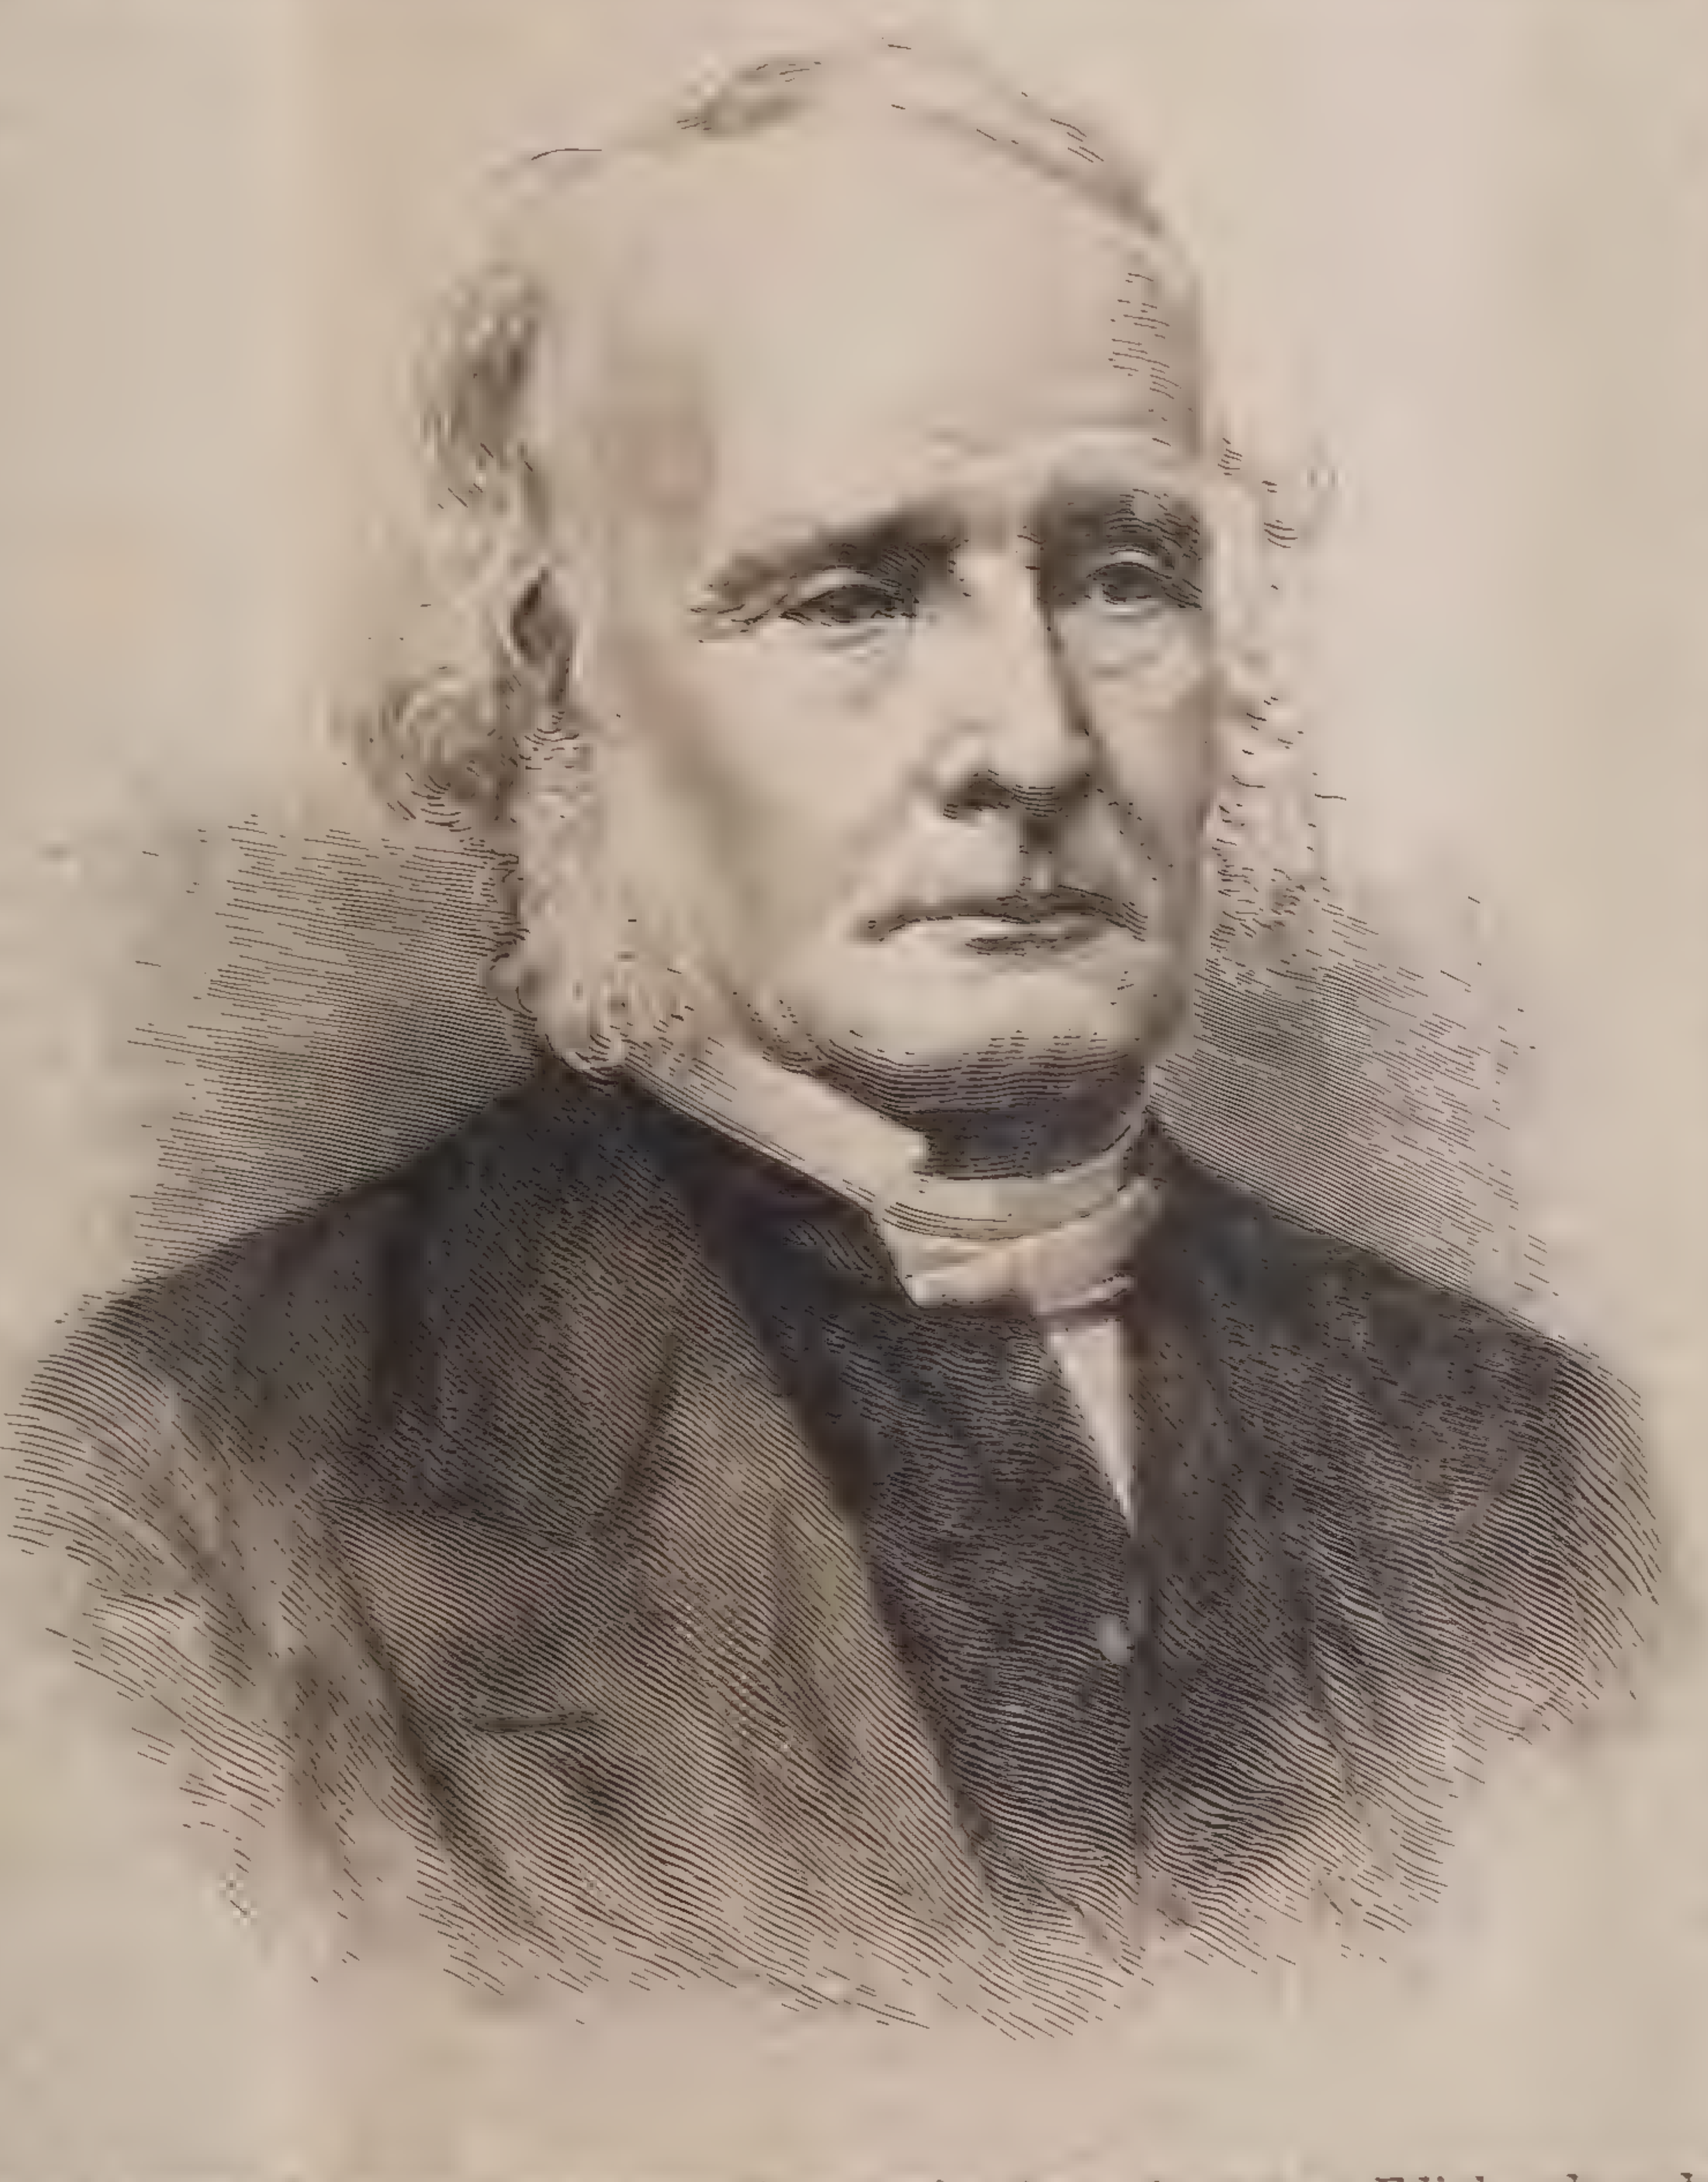
REV. JAMES McCOSH, D.D., LL.D.,

Ex-President of Princeton College.

THE College of New Jersey, situated in the academic little town of Princeton, has had some notable men in its presidential chair. One of these was the famous Jonathan Edwards, and another the doughty Dr. Witherspoon, who, though a Scotchman from Paisley, was one of the signatories to the Declaration of Independence. But none of its presidents has done more for the prestige and usefulness of the institution than the venerable divine who on April 18 resigned the administration to younger hands.

Like Witherspoon, Dr. McCosh is not a born American, but an importation from Scotland, and like him he has been gifted with a double portion of the perfervidum ingenium of his countrymen. He has been unwearied in his exertions during the past twenty years to promote the best interests of the College, and the consequence is that its popularity has advanced by strides under Dr. McCosh's presidency. The number both of students and professors has been more than doubled since he went to America in 1868, and Princeton, under his régime, has fully vindicated its claim to front rank, along with Harvard and Yale, among the many colleges in the States.

It is gratifying to add that, largely through the influence of the president, the religious element in the life of the College has, even ordinarily, been remarkably pervasive. Seasons of special revival, too, have visited it from time to time, and not a few of the alumni have carried with them into the various professions the abiding impress which such seasons have left upon themselves. Dr. McCosh in his last Report is able to say, "Thanks to God, I leave the College in a healthy state intellectually, morally, and religiously...We have vice in our College, but I believe it is reduced to a minimum. It is a circumstance worthy of being mentioned that several students who have acquired a taste for drinking have put themselves under religious students to protect them from temptation. They are praying us to take steps to shut up the liquor saloons. There is a considerable depth of religious feeling in the College. The attendance at each of four class prayer-meetings varies from forty to sixty-five."



JAMES McCOSH was born in the Burns' country, at a place called Carskeoch, near Ayr, on the banks of Doon, in the year 1811. His birthday, like that of Bismarck, and others who might be named, fell on April 1, a circumstance to whose supposed fateful significance he has sometimes humorously referred. His father was a farmer of considerable enterprise, but some of the son's distinguishing qualities are more directly traceable to his energetic and gifted mother. After the usual course in one of the old Scottish parochial schools, he was sent at thirteen to Glasgow College, where he studied from 1824 to 1829. In the latter year he passed to Edinburgh, and there came under the influence of the greatest Scotchman since Knox—Thomas Chalmers. It was while in Edinburgh that young McCosh's philosophic powers showed marked development. An essay of his on the Stoic philosophy attracted such notice that it procured him the degree of M.A. without further examination.

He was licensed to preach the Gospel in 1833, and, having given proof of his ministerial gifts, he was appointed to the old Abbey Church of Arbroath in 1835. By this time the Ten Years' Conflict was in full swing, and the young minister, besides being known as an earnest and scholarly preacher, with special influence over young men, was soon recognised as an ardent local champion of the Evangelical party. In that cause he fought side by side with his friend and co-presbyter, Thomas Guthrie, then settled in the sweet neighbouring village of Arbirlot. It may here be mentioned that Mr. McCosh was married to a niece of Dr. Guthrie's, who has proved herself a true helpmeet for him in all his subsequent life.

In the year 1838 Lord John Russell, on the recommendation of some of the Church leaders in Edinburgh, selected Mr. McCosh for the important congregation of the East Parish, Brechin, where he ministered to no fewer than 1400 communicants. While giving devoted attention to pulpit preparation and the great amount of pastoral work involved in such a charge, Mr. McCosh continued to do hearty service to the cause of non-intrusion in the district; and when at length the crucial Disruption year of 1843 arrived he was found ready to support his protestations by deed, laying his living freely and without hesitation on the shrine of the spiritual independence of the Church.

On the occasion of his visit to Belfast Presbyterian Council in 1884, we find the veteran recalling, in a discourse he gave at Brechin, some of the memories of those early days: "We had many wringings of heart; but we had strong faith and courage among old men and women, among young men and maidens, who bore revilings without reviling again, and gave gifts, and made sacrifices willingly and cheerfully, blessing God that they were called to bear reproach for his name."

After the Disruption, Mr. McCosh remained in Brechin as a minister of the Free Church of Scotland till 1852, and greatly helped its extension and consolidation in that part of Forfarshire. Meanwhile he found time for the use of his pen, and in 1850 he published his first book, which was destined to give a new turn to his life. This was "The Method of the Divine Government"—a work probably as well known even yet as any of his subsequent writings. The first edition was sold out in six months, and the book, which was soon stamped with the favourable judgment of men like Hugh Miller and Sir William Hamilton, attracted great attention both in this and other lands. It is related that the Earl of Clarendon, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, chanced to take it up one Sunday morning, and became so fascinated that he forgot to go to church! A further consequence was, that he soon after appointed McCosh Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in the Queen's College, Belfast.

His Belfast professorship lasted sixteen years, and his success as a teacher amply fulfilled the high anticipations of those interested in his appointment. Besides directly influencing a large body of students, Professor McCosh did not a little during his residence in the Sister Island for the cause of education throughout Ireland; and this period of his life was signalised by the publication of several important works—notably, his "Intuitions of the Human Mind," which, though less popular than the "Divine Government," will probably continue to be regarded as his leading distinctive contribution to the literature of philosophy.

In 1868, unexpectedly to himself, he was called to the position which he has since so honourably held, the Presidency of Princeton College. The great civil war had recently closed, and the condition and prospects of the Institution were at that time anything but bright. The new chief, however, soon imparted his enthusiasm to others. The friends of the College rallied together and were multiplied; and, year by year, genuine progress in all departments of prosperity has been registered. A handsome range of new buildings will be a lasting outward monument of Dr. McCosh's twenty years' tenure of office; and the advance in the standard of scholarship within has been not less remarkable than the change wrought, largely through the energy of the President, on the accommodation without. He has made it his main business to promote the interests of sound education and high scholarship in the United States, through the advancement of his own College, whose flag, as an American correspondent declares, he has borne aloft all over the country, "from Maine to California, and from the great Lakes to the Gulf." At the same time, he has been far more than a mere organiser and caterer for Princeton. While bestowing his first care on his large classes in the College, he has greatly helped to mould philosophic opinion throughout America, by his use of the press. Numerous contributions from his pen have appeared in the leading Transatlantic periodicals, one of which, The New Princeton Review, he had the merit of organising. Among the separate volumes he has issued, his "History of the Scottish Philosophy" should be named, and especially his admirable volume of discussions, entitled, "The Realistic Philosophy." It may be added, that not only are several of his works extensively used as text-books in the land of his adoption, but that through the same medium his influence is being felt among the students of India and Japan.

While Dr. McCosh's life has thus in the main, during the last thirty-six years, been devoted to philosophy, he has held true to his early faith, and has ever striven to make philosophy a handmaid to religion. He has had his own share of controversy, and has never shrunk, or had reason to shrink, from the ablest antagonists who have thrown down the gauntlet to him in that field. When Prof. Huxley visited America a few years ago, it fell to Dr. McCosh to defend the interests of religion against the attacks of the English scientist—a task which he performed with such cogency of argument, as well as moral fervour, that, as was witnessed by the American daily press, "he was hailed as the standard-bearer of the religious element in the country." In the discourse at Brechin, already quoted from, we find Dr. McCosh himself testifying—"I have for most of my life been a student of philosophy. I have been called to study all its systems, ancient and modern. None of them could make up for the want of the Bible. However important in enlarging and stablishing the mind, they cannot give peace and stability to the soul." The patriarch, back among the scenes of his youth, adds, "In all my experience I have found no other name than the One by which I must be saved. How can God be just, and the justifier of the ungodly? Human reason can give no intelligent, no satisfactory answer to this question. All its investigations conduct into ever-thickening darkness and gloom, in which fear and doubt abide. The mind feels that it has nothing to rest on, no truth on which the understanding can rest and the heart repose, till such time as it sees 'a Lamb as it had been slain in the midst of the throne of God.'"

Though Dr. McCosh is retiring from active public duty, he is to continue to reside in Princeton. He will be followed into his retirement by the prayers of many who are thankful for the noble service he has rendered to the cause of truth, that "the Sabbatic period" of his life may be one of peculiar serenity and joy. May his tall, masculine form, though stooping more than it used to do, be long seen going out and in among the Princeton elms, and may many an ardent young student draw inspiration still from grasping the kindly hand and looking into the handsome, thoughtful face of the old Christian philosopher!

It must be no small gratification to Dr. McCosh to have as his successor Professor F. L. Patton, who till now has occupied one of the chairs in Princeton Theological Seminary, and is well known on both sides of the Atlantic as one of the brightest intellects the American Church has produced. It is worthy of note that he, too, was originally a British subject, having been born in Toronto; and, which is of more importance, that he is as loyal as President McCosh himself to the great verities of the Christian faith. President Patton, who is still in the prime of life, has announced his intention of conducting the College on the lines laid down by his predecessor, and its interests, educational and religious, could not have been entrusted to abler or worthier hands. Those who some years ago were anxious for the transference of Dr. Patton to the Presbyterian College in London will be not the least hearty in their prayers that he may be long and largely used of God in the important sphere for which Providence has been preparing him.

MR. MOODY'S SUMMER SCHOOL.

The third session of this admirable gathering will be held at Northfield, Mass., from June 30 to July 15, and will be conducted by Mr. Moody himself. The great success of the two meetings already held, the larger number of students in attendance last year, and the evident intention of some of America's leading Colleges to send yet larger delegations this year, seem to indicate a very encouraging and numerous gathering. Mr. Moody has invited prominent Bible teachers from both sides of the Atlantic to assist him in the meetings. Many of the students last year brought tents and camped on the Seminary grounds, which are well adapted to that purpose. It is hoped that fully six hundred students will make similar arrangements for this year, and that by this means one thousand delegates may avail themselves of the benefit of this meeting.

Mr. L. D. Wishard, the College Y.M.C.A. Secretary for the States, is now in this country, and is endeavouring to arrange for a delegation to attend the School as representing the Universities and Colleges of Great Britain.

MISS SHARMAN'S HASTINGS HOME.

This branch of Miss Sharman's work among orphans continues to prosper. It is designed for the orphan daughters of parents of the more educated classes who have not been able to make provision for their children. There are now twenty-five such inmates of the Home. A good solid education is given, so as to fit them for useful and honourable work in after life. Of course, every care is bestowed on their spiritual as well as their intellectual culture.

An opportunity now occurs of enlarging the scope and the capacity of the Home. Miss Sharman is anxious to secure a permanent Home with increased accommodation, as she is receiving many applications which she cannot entertain. She state in her little report just published that she wil need a good sum for the new Home, but it is for good purpose, and she has no reason to fear that i will not be forthcoming.

THE MISSIONARY COUNCIL.

A paper by Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, on the great Missionary Conference of next month, has already appeared in our columns. That dwelt on several practical questions which will enter into the deliberations of the ten days. This will refer to one only—that of native agencies. Rev. John L. Nevius, D.D., an American Presbyterian missionary, has reprinted in pamphlet form some important letters which first appeared in The Chinese Recorder. The pamphlet has been privately circulated among friends of missions, and enters with great wisdom and ability into the methods and results of successful mission work, on the part of Baptists and Presbyterians, in the large Province of Shantung, China. Although the pamphlet is one of 106 pages, it may be possible to present to our readers a condensed view of its contents. It mainly discusses—

THE EMPLOYMENT OF PAID NATIVE AGENTS.

Dr. Nevius argues the following points as the result of a careful experience. He is not alone. Missionaries in the East, and South also, have long considered the difficulties which are now more formally set forth. (1) Making paid agents of new native converts proves a serious injury to the converts personally; affects very disastrously the stations with which they are connected, and sorely arrests the voluntary action of the native churches in advancing the Saviour's kingdom.* (2) Men join a Mission to be employed. The Chinese are adepts in dissembling. The Old System, therefore, makes judgment of professed converts increasingly difficult, and deprives missionaries of an effective means of separating the chaff from the wheat. (3) A mercenary spirit is excited in the churches by the employment system, and the missionary enterprise is lowered, both in the eyes of foreigners and natives. (4) Christ's great lesson of self-denial ought to be practically taught everywhere, but especially in lands where disinterestedness is little understood, where enemies are on every side, and where an unworthy motive is sure to be attributed to a man who seeks to propagate a foreign religion.

After arguing these objections to the Paid Agent system, the writer pleads that every man should "abide in the same calling wherein he was called." Special providences may indeed indicate the fitness of a young convert for higher service. But let there be more waiting for Divine designs to be manifested. Let the young Christian first develop his qualifications as an unpaid evangelist in his own sphere. Foreign missionaries have mostly no other choice than that of submitting to the disadvantage of having their disinterestedness questioned; let them not add to this disadvantage, and let them trust more to the wholesome effect of the consistent and earnest influence of the native churches. The development of individual gifts and aggressive power of these churches is the first duty.

Conformity to the teachings of Scripture has been the aim in these modern Chinese missions. The Baptist missions have multiplied chiefly through the voluntary labours of unpaid Christians. In Central Shantung the Presbyterians and Baptists have about one hundred and fifty stations, and nearly three thousand five hundred converts. All these stations provide their own places of worship; none of them is cared for by a resident paid preacher; in each one of them one or more of its own members voluntarily conducts services on Sunday (the sacredness of which is carefully taught), and attends to the spiritual interests of the company of believers.

Dr. Nevius speaks of more than sixty stations under his own care, which have, within the last eight years, been almost exclusively commenced through the unpaid efforts of Church members. Only two Chinese helpers are paid, and their support comes in part from the native converts. The stations have been organised on the principle that all the members are to be workers and witness-bearers. The order is: First, the foreign missionary in charge; second, the native helper who directs and examines the leaders and their stations; and third, the leader, who has only an advisory power, and constantly superintends, directs, and examines those under him. The Spirit is looked to for the bestowment of gifts suited to present times, as his gifts were suited to the circumstances of the early Church.

It might seem that with the missionary far away from some of the stations, difficulties would arise from converts being left too much to themselves. The difficulty is acknowledged, but the advantages are held to outweigh the disadvantages. There is less motive for concealment of offences when pecuniary support is not drawn from foreign sources, and the fact that the station belongs to Church members, and not to the missionary, develops dependence, prayer, and integrity.

It is held that the example of an early ordination of elders in the cities, where the Gospel was first planted by apostles, may be misinterpreted in modern times. Many of the first converts were Jews and Jewish proselytes who were familiar with the Old Testament Scriptures. In Shantung, at the opening of the mission, men who had been trained in the manifold evils of idolatry were ordained soon after their conversion. The system did not answer, and there is more guarded remembrance under the new system of the inspired injunction, "Let these first be proved." It is hoped that many of the present leaders will become elders; but there is no haste in the present action to introduce the one-man system of European and American churches. Ecclesiasticism, which may quiet native converts under the idea that duty lies in sustaining the church edifice and the preacher, does not work well. (Where, it may be asked, does it work well?) Moreover, the fixing of the amount of the stipend for a pastor is very difficult. High salaries for native teachers have, it is contended, sorely hindered the development in foreign lands of independent, self-sustaining churches, while low salaries may close the door to educated men.

This brief résumé of a useful pamphlet involves reflections which go to indicate how wide and weighty will be the discussions of the approaching Conference. Never was there a more urgent call to prayer to God, without ceasing, on the part of the whole Church. Hope also may abound. Not merely the difficulties, but the opened doors, and the widening prospects of the missionary enterprise, have led to the summoning of the Conference. Not only so. Is not the whole Church being led by the Spirit to a more imperative conviction that the conversion of the world unto God is the supreme object for which Christ came, and that it is this consummation that should be the life-aim of every one of his followers? Money will still, and increasingly, be wanted for this end. The methods, however, on which money is used, must form a very prominent consideration in the great Convention which is at hand. May we not hope that the honoured men who will come together from all parts of the world will arrive at conclusions which they may speak of, as did apostles and elders in their Missionary Conference (Acts xv.), as those which "seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us."

* When we learn from an Indian missionary that in Benares alone 40,000 men give up wives, children, and lands, and go from place to place in the service of idol gods, we cannot but look in the East for something like the same consecration among native converts to Christ.

NOTES ON DOCTRINES.

FAITH.

Faith is often described as only the hand that takes blessing from God. It is far more than this. It is the basis of obedience, the germ and essence of righteousness, as unbelief is the basis of disobedience, the germ and essence of sin. For "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." The Fall consisted in disbelieving God. Man's fall consisted in repentance (change of mind) from faith in God to faith in the devil. The incarnation, death, and resurrection of Jesus, the Son of God, are to this end, that by Him we may "believe in God, who raised Him up from the dead, and gave Him glory, that our faith and hope may be in God." God is the ultimate object of faith; and Jesus is the Way to God. The difference between an angel of God, and a fallen angel, is that the one has faith in God, and the other has not. The devils believe there is one God: and tremble. The holy angels fall before the throne on their faces, and worship God, saying, "Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might be unto our God for ever and ever."

The faith which justifies and gives peace to the soul is faith in God: not simply in God as God; not God as the Creator, Preserver, and Benefactor; not even God as a Father; but, specifically, faith in God "who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead, who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification." We fell out of faith in God. Nothing would be salvation which came short of restoring us to faith in God. But faith in God is faith in One who is first King of Righteousness, and after that, King of Peace. Therefore, the faith which a saved sinner has in God must include a peace which comes by righteousness, and therefore involves the holy life, the atoning death, and the mighty resurrection of the Man Christ Jesus—Jesus the Son of God. Jesus is the immediate but not the final object of our faith. Being redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, by Him we believe in God, who raised Him up from the dead, and gave Him glory, that our faith and hope might be in God. Thus is Paradise far more than restored; for this faith brings with it a new creation. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation: old things are passed away: behold, all things are become new." MRS. ORMISTON CHANT, one of England's representatives to the recent International Women's Council at Washington, has decided to prolong her stay in the United States, and will lecture under the auspices of the W.C.T.U.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XI.—Watching with God.—Gen. xv. 7, &c.

It is not easy to watch with God, or to wait for Him. The orbit of his Providence is so vast. The stages of his progress are so wide apart. He holds on his way through the ages; we tire in a few short hours. And when his dealings with us are perplexing and mysterious, the heart that had boasted its unwavering loyalty begins to grow faint with misgivings, and to question. When shall we be able to trust absolutely, and not be afraid? When once, in human relationships, the heart has found its rest in another, it can bear the test of distance and delay. Years may pass without a word or sign to break the sad monotony. Strange contradictions may baffle the understanding and confuse the mind. Officious friends may delight in putting unkind and false constructions on conduct, confessedly hard to explain. But the trust never varies or abates. It knows that all is well. It is content to exist without a token, and to be quiet without attempting to explain or defend. Ah! when shall we treat God so? When shall we thus rest in Him, trusting where we cannot understand? Can any education be too hard which shall secure this as its final and crowning result? Surely this were heaven, when the heart of man could afford to wait for a millennium, unstaggered by delay, untinged by doubt.

At this stage, at least, of his education Abraham had not learnt this lesson. But in that grey dawn, as the stars which symbolised his posterity were beginning to fade in the sky, he responded to the Divine assurance that he should inherit the land of which he did not own a foot, by the sad complaint: "Lord God, whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?"

How human this is! It was not that he was absolutely incredulous, but he yearned for some tangible evident token that it was to be as God had said; something he could see; something which should be an ever-present sacrament of the coming heritage, as the stars were of the future seed. Do not wonder at him, but rather adore the love which bears with these human frailties, and stoops to give them stepping-stones by which to cross the sands to the firm rock of an assured faith.

I.—Watching by the Sacrifice.—In those early days, when a written agreement was very rare, if not quite unknown, men sought to bind one another to their word with the most solemn religious sanctions. The contracting party was required to bring certain animals, which were slaughtered, and divided into pieces. These were laid on the ground in such a manner as to leave a narrow lane between; up and down which the covenanting party passed to ratify and confirm his solemn pledge.

It was to this ancient and solemn rite that God referred, when He said, "Take Me an heifer of three years old, and a she goat of three years old, and a ram of three years old, and a turtledove, and a young pigeon. And he took unto Him all these, and divided them in the midst, and laid each piece one against the other."

It was still the early morning. The day was young. And Abraham sat down to watch. Then there came a long pause. Hour after hour passed by, but God did not give a sign or utter a single word. Judging by appearances, there was neither voice, not any to answer, nor any that regarded.

Higher and ever higher the sun drove his chariot up the sky, and shone with torrid heat on those pieces of flesh lying there exposed upon the sand, but still no voice or vision came. The unclean vultures, attracted by the scent of carrion, drew together as to a feast, and demanded incessant attention if they were to be kept away. Did he ever permit himself to imagine that he was sitting there on a fool's mission? Did the thought not instil itself into his ear that perhaps after all he had been led to arrange those pieces by a freak of his own fancy, and that God would not come at all? Did he shrink from the curious gaze of his servants, and of Sarah his wife, because half-conscious of having taken up a position he could not justify?

We cannot tell what passed through that much-tried heart, during those long hours. But this, at least, we recognise; that this is in a line with the discipline through which we all have to pass. Hours of waiting for God! Days of watching! Nights of sleepless vigil! Looking for the outposts of the relief that tarries! Wondering why the Master comes not! Climbing the hill again and again, to return without the expected vision. Going to the Post-Office, till the path is trodden down with constant passing to and fro, and wet with many tears, but all in vain. Nay, but it is not in vain. For these long waiting hours are building up the fabric of the spirit-life, with gold, and silver, and precious stones, so as to become a thing of beauty, and a joy for evermore.

Only let us see to it that we never relax our attitude of patience, but wait to the end for the grace to be brought unto us. And let us give the unclean birds no quarter. We cannot help them sailing slowly through the air, or uttering dismal screams, or circling around us as if to pounce. But we can help them settling down. And this we must do, in the name and by the help of God. "If the vision tarry, wait for it."

II.—The Horror of a Great Darkness.—The sun at last went down, and the swift Eastern night cast its heavy veil over the scene. Worn out with the mental conflict, the watchings, and the exertions of the day, Abraham fell into a deep sleep. And in that sleep his soul was oppressed with a dense and dreadful darkness; such as almost stifled him, and lay like a nightmare upon his heart. "Lo, a horror of great darkness fell upon him."

Do any readers understand something of the horror of that darkness? When one who has been brought up in a traditional belief, which fails to satisfy the instincts of maturer life, supposes that in letting go the creed, there must also be the renunciation of all faith and hope, not seeing that the form may go, whilst the essential substance may remain. When one, mistaking the nature of sin and the mercy of God, fears that there has been committed an unpardonable sin, or that the bounds of repentance have been overstepped for ever. When some terrible sorrow which seems so hard to reconcile with perfect love, crushes down upon the soul, wringing from it all its peaceful rest in the pitifulness of God, and launching it on a sea unlit by a ray of hope. When unkindness, and cruelty, and monstrous injustice browbeat, and mock, and maltreat the trusting heart, till it begins to doubt whether there be a God overhead, who can see and still permit. All these know something of the horror of great darkness; and in that darkness what weird and frightful visions will pass one after another before the spirit, like the phantoms of a drunkard's delirium, or the apparitions of an unhealthy brain.

It was a long and dark prospect which unfolded itself before Abraham. He saw the history of his people through coming centuries, strangers in a foreign land, enslaved and afflicted. Did he see the anguish of their soul, and their cruel bondage beneath the taskmaster's whips? Did he hear their groans, and see mothers weeping over their babes, doomed to the insatiable Nile? Did he witness the building of Pyramid and Treasure-city, cemented by blood and suffering? It was, indeed, enough to fill him with darkness that could be felt.

And yet the sombre woof was crossed by the warp of silver threads. The enslaved were to come out, and to come out with great substance, their oppressors being overwhelmed with crushing judgment. They were to come into that land again. Whilst, as for himself, he should go to his fathers in peace, and be buried in a good old age.

It is thus that human life is made up. Brightness and gloom. Shadow and sun. Long tracks of cloud succeeded by brilliant glints of light. And amid all, Divine justice is working out its own schemes, affecting others equally with the individual soul which seems the subject of especial discipline. The children of Abraham must not inherit the land of promise till the fourth generation had passed away, because the iniquity of the Amorites had not yet filled up the measure of their doom. Only then, when reformation was impossible, and their condition had become irremediable, and their existence was a menace to the peace and purity of mankind, was the order given for their extermination, and for the transference of their power to those who might hold it more worthily.

Oh, ye who are filled with the horror of great darkness because of God's dealings with mankind, learn to trust that infallible wisdom which is co-assessor with immutable justice; and know that He who passed through the horror of the darkness of Calvary, with the cry of forsakenness, is ready to bear you company through the valley of the shadow of death, till you see the sun shining upon its further side. "Who is among you that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God."

III. The Ratification of the Covenant.—When Abraham awoke the sun was down. Darkness reigned supreme. "It was dark." A solemn stillness brooded over the world. Then came the awful act of ratification. For the first time since man left the gates of Eden there appeared the symbol of the glory of God; that awful light which was afterwards to shine in the pillar of cloud, and the Shekinah gleam.

In the thick darkness that mysterious light, a lamp of fire, passed slowly and majestically between the divided pieces, and, as it did so, a voice said: "Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates."

Remember that promise; made with the most solemn sanctions, never repealed since, and never perfectly fulfilled. For a few years during the reign of Solomon the dominions of Israel almost touched these limits, but only for a very brief period. The perfect fulfilment is yet in the future. Somehow the descendants of Abraham shall yet inherit their own land, secured to them by the covenant of God. Those mighty rivers shall yet form their boundary lines, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

A foreign power forbids their entrance yet; and Jerusalem is trodden down of the Gentiles. But we may be entering on a series of events, which shall shatter the decrepit empire of the unspeakable Turk, and release Egypt and Palestine from his blighting sway, so that the land which awaits the people, and the people which awaits the land, may be reunited beneath the blessing of Him who, by word and oath, gave strong consolation to his much-tried servant Abraham.

INDIAN NATIVE MISSIONARIES.

Application was recently made to Dr. C. S. Valentine, superintendent of the Agra Medical Mission Training Institution, to receive into the Institution eleven Christian young men who were desirous of studying with a view to becoming medical missionaries. These young men belonged to the aboriginal tribes of the Coles and Santhals, and were of excellent character and good education, all of them having passed high standard examinations in the Calcutta University. Their desire was to take the Gospel to their own people.

Two German missionaries labouring among the aborigines made the application, and how it was met is thus told, in a letter, by Dr. Valentine: "I do not remember anything more remarkable in the whole course of my missionary experience. The missionaries have written to ask if I can provide scholarships for these lads, and, in faith, I have answered 'Yes,' although our scholarship fund is all but exhausted. A scholarship of £16 a year for four years will support a student in our Institution, at the end of which time, with the diploma of the Agra Government College in his pocket, and the Spirit of the living God in his heart, he is ready at once to preach the Gospel to his countrymen. I feel sure that there are many Christians who, did they but know, would gladly assist in this great undertaking."

It is pretty well known that there are some fifty millions of people in India, belonging to the aboriginal tribes, who have hitherto remained untouched by Hinduism and Mohammedanism. The Coles and Santhals have already shown themselves amenable to Christian influence, and much blessing has resulted from work among them.

Donations in behalf of the Agra Medical Missionary Training Institution, and contributions towards founding scholarships, may be made through our donation list, or sent to Rev. Dr. Lowe, Medical Mission-house, 56, George-square, Edinburgh.

JEWS OF SPITALFIELDS.—The meetings on Saturdays and Sundays in the hall of Miss Macpherson's Old Home of Industry, 60, Commercial-street, are attended by an increasingly large number of Jews. During the past six months some 4500 have listened to the truth concerning a living and saving Christ. Only recently four more Israelites have confessed, in the words of Philip, "We have found Him of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth." Three others have also decided, as Nathaniel the true Israelite did concerning Jesus, "Thou art the Son of God, Thou art the King of Israel." As a rule, the converts have had to endure much persecution, and it has been found necessary to help them to be independent of their friends. Mr. Paulus Ashkenazi, the missionary, hopes that lovers of Israel will not fail to sustain his efforts by fervent prayer and practical sympathy.

VII.—THE FOUR-STORIED HOUSE.

A person is an object of suspicion when he cannot give his address. Where do you dwell? is a fair question, and it is satisfactory to be able to answer it. Many believers are in a very homeless condition, and have no certain dwelling-place. They are, as it were, tossed about on the waves of this troublesome world, and know not where to rest.

There are others again who know about a dwelling-place, but they do not dwell there.

"I really do not know what to believe, or whom to trust," said a gentleman to me, "so many people tell me different things; and so many who promised well have failed."

He was like the man we read of in the Psalms, who said, "Who will show us any good?"

I told him that the restlessness he was labouring under was not altogether an uncommon experience, that I would rather he was restless than resting in a false and dangerous security. "Tell me," I said, "are you on the Rock?"

"Yes, thank God, I am," he replied; "but I have been sadly put about since I have been there."

"You are not alone in that experience," I said. "A good man once felt like you, and wrote a hymn to express his need which I dare say you know:—

Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee.

He, too, was on the Rock, and longed, as all earnest souls do, for a resting or hiding place. He saw this provided in the cleft Rock of Ages (that is the risen Christ), and prayed that he might be hidden there. David could say, 'Thou art my hiding-place' (Ps. xxxii. 7). Noah when dwelling in the ark was sheltered from the surging flood and the descending rain."

"Yes, yes," said my friend, "I understand about all that; but how am I to get there? There is a gulf between me and that dwelling-place."

I answered: "A friend of mine had a four-storied house, thoroughly furnished, presented to him. One New Year's Day a carriage was driven to his homely cottage, and he and his wife were invited to come out for a little while. They were taken to this new house, where they were asked to alight. On going in, the gentleman recognised several friends who lived elsewhere in the city. He asked, 'Whose house is this?' and was told, 'It is yours; these gentlemen desire to present you with it.'

"Believing this, my friend thanked God and thanked them, then took his wife all over the furnished house. The kind thing was done in a kind and considerate way, and touched his heart. He came back from the upper stories, and again thanked his friends.

"What do you think he did next? Did he take a photograph of the place, make an exact inventory of all it contained, and then go back and live in his cottage? No, he came and dwelt in his four-storied house. So should we also take possession of the four-storied house God has provided for us in Christ. He is the cleft Rock of Ages, the Hiding-place, the Ark. He is our wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. The Lord Jesus died, rose again, ascended up on high, and is coming again for us."

"Oh, do stop," said my friend; "you tantalise me. How am I to dwell in this great house?"

"There is but one way," I said; "and that is by believing—simply believe, and keep on believing."

"But, I tell you, I do believe," said my friend, somewhat impatiently.

"Excuse me," I said, "you only believe about these things, or otherwise you would be resting. Christ died to save you, and, believing this, you are safe. He rose to keep you. Do you believe this also? If you did, you would be kept by Him; you would be dwelling in the secret place of the Most High, abiding under the shadow of the Almighty" (see Ps. xci. 1). "You would not be as you are—a restless wanderer seeking rest."

My friend was silent, and evidently thinking, so I continued, "There is a third story to this house. It consists in believing and trusting the ascended Lord. If we believe this, we may, in heart and mind, thither ascend, and where He is, with Him continually dwell; sitting in heavenly places.

"Lastly, there is the fourth story of this heavenly palace. Christ is coming again to receive us to Himself. Here the most glorious view may be obtained. From its heights we can look away into the ever brightening eternity before us. Too many content themselves by dwelling in the basement of the house, when they might occupy the whole of it."

"That is where I am," said the gentleman; "I am on the Rock, but not in it yet."

"It is a good thing," I said, "to see what you want, and, if you can see it, you may have it. God said to Abram, 'The land which thou seest, to thee will I give it' (Gen. xiii. 15). So He says to you. Abram took possession of the land by building his altar, and offering a sacrifice. Like him, I would advise you to take possession with thanksgiving."

"But how can I take possession," said my friend, "before I have it? It is so difficult."

I replied, "Abram took the land in spite of all difficulties, and though the Canaanite was still there. You do the same; never mind difficulties or obstacles. If God gives you a gift, He knows how to convey it to you, if only you will believe in Him."

My friend, like too many more who look within for feelings, declared his inability to do this.

I said, "You believed in the Lamb of God who died for you, and, believing, you became a lamb of God's flock. In the same way, believe in a risen Saviour, who is the Shepherd of God's lambs, and you will enter into the shelter of his keeping.

"Again, looking at the ascended Lord, you will be endued with power for service; and, looking at his glory, you will be changed into his image. The Apostle says, 'It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is'" (1 John iii. 2).

"You put me out of my depth," said my friend. "What can I do?"

"One thing at a time," I said. "Get into the second story, that is, believe in a risen Christ, and rest under his keeping power. Sing with the poet,

Other refuge have I none,
Hangs my helpless soul on Thee.

Then you will go on to know from the ascended One, the power of service through the Holy Ghost, and the brightening joy of hope from the thought of the Lord's coming. When He comes you will be with Him for ever, and in his company you will meet loved ones gone before, never again to be separated from them."

A CONFERENCE FOR BIBLE STUDY will be held at Holden, Missouri, May 25 to 30. The general theme will be the inspiration and authority of the Bible, but collateral attention will be given to special subjects, such as "The Holy Spirit," "Typology," "Methods of Study," "Principles of Interpretation," and "The Scripture Basis of our Orthodox Faith," besides conferences and addresses on methods of work. Among those expected to address the Conference are Prof. W. G. Moorehead, D.D., Professor of Theology, Xenia, Ohio; Rev. W. J. Erdman, of North Carolina; Rev. J. H. Brookes, D.D., of St. Louis, and others.

For the Young.

A LETTER FROM A PARENT.

One of the many May meetings which I have attended will have a special interest to you. It was the annual meeting of the Children's Special Service Mission, the object of which, as some of you know, is to arrange meetings for children, in order that they may hear of the love of God, as shown to little children as well as grown-up people, by Jesus Christ. In the winter time these meetings are held in schoolrooms and other public buildings; while, in the summer, they are frequently held on the sands, at our many beautiful seaport towns.

As a rule, these children's meetings are very happy. Ladies and gentlemen who love little boys and girls, put themselves to a great deal of trouble, so that kind-hearted missionaries may tell the old yet ever new story of Jesus, and hundreds and thousands of children have heard words that have gladdened their hearts, while many have found it to be their highest pleasure, as well as their first duty, to love God and keep his commandments as made known by his well-beloved Son. The Mission has a Scripture Union, with hundreds of thousands of members who read the same Bible portions every day, and then there are monthly letters and magazines, all specially for boys and girls who wish to grow up Christian men and women.

Without saying more as to the good work of the Mission and the many means which it employs to do the very most it can, not only here in England, but, more or less, all over the world, I wish to tell you something about the annual meetings which were held on Thursday last week in Exeter Hall. A great deal that was very cheering was said of the work of the Mission—how the children of England are everywhere so pleased to flock to hear its missionaries, while in countries over the seas and far away its picture leaflets in many languages are greatly prized by boys and girls, no matter whether their skins are white, yellow, or black.

Some pretty stories were told of children who so liked the picture leaflets that they put aside the pennies which they were in the habit of spending on trifles, and bought tracts with them to hand round to other little boys and girls. It was very pleasing to hear of one little girl who made up her mind to try in everything to do as God would have her. She was soon afterwards taken very ill, and her Sunday-school teacher was sent for. What do you think she said to the teacher? Well, this: "Do you know, teacher, I used to hate you. I hated you because you loved Jesus; but, thank God, now I love you because I love Jesus." Now, think of that! We are all by nature disposed to hate that which is good, and inclined to choose that which is bad; if we do not love God, we are prone to hate that which is holy. We are by nature just like that little girl was, but so also, by God's grace, we may become what she afterwards became; we may be renewed in heart, and live, not unto ourselves, but unto Him who loves us. The Creator and Redeemer of that happy little girl was pleased to receive her spirit to Himself, and, while sorry to be denied the pleasure of looking upon their darling's face, her parents knew that it was "well with the child." That little girl had the sum of £5 in the savings bank, and what do you think was afterwards done with it? Well, her father and mother thought that nothing could be better than that it should go to helping to teach other children the Gospel in the same way their own little one had learned it—by means of the Children's Special Service Mission, and so they handed the money over to the funds of the Mission.

One of the ministers of the Gospel who addressed the afternoon meeting said that on one occasion his little daughter was questioned by the nurse about the sermon she had heard at church, and in her reply she very plainly said that the sermon, which her father had preached, was "not very interesting." That was very outspoken, was it not? There was nothing for her in the sermon. On thinking the matter over, her father, who is a good, earnest man, made up his mind not to forget in future to say something in his sermons specially for the children who might be present. It was mentioned that the "little ones" are spoken of three times in the Bible. In Joshua viii. 35 they listened to the reading of the law of Moses, and thus attended what we may call a big Bible-class. In 2 Chron. xx. 13 they are shown to have attended what we may call a great prayer-meeting. In 2 Sam. xv. 22 it is said that there were little ones with Ittai when he ranked himself on the side of King David; so, also, must the little ones be encouraged to-day to take their place on the side of the Lord Jesus Christ, who is both Son and Lord to the great King of Israel.

In the evening one of the speakers pointed out that children owe much to the Lord Jesus Christ. In early times little ones were everywhere despised, just as they are to-day in many dark countries. Jesus, whom high as well as low adore, has altered this state of things, for He came into the world as a child. Not only, too, did Jesus look with pleasure upon children, and say, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me," but He also said that none but the childlike—those who become affectionate, and trustful, and obedient, as good children always are—shall enter into the kingdom which God has promised to those that love Him.

A missionary from India told of the joy with which the children of that great country receive the picture leaflets, and keep them month after month with much care, so that at the end of the year they may be bound in a volume. The fathers and mothers read them when they can, and thus the little homes are in many cases made happy by a knowledge of Gospel truth. And what great results may come of simple acts! It was stated that some of the heathen temples of India are thousands of years old, and, though strong in structure, are tottering to their fall. In some cases their ruin has been brought about in a remarkable way. A little bird drops a seed on a wall; the seed falls into a small cranny, and when a storm comes, the rain touches the seed. The rain seems to say, "I will help you, little seed." And then the seed begins to lift itself up, and a slender root is struck down into the wall. The sun helps the rain; and, as time goes on, the work of pulling down the wall of the temple is slowly progressing. What a power in a little seed which has life in it! Those thick walls would even stand battering with cannon, but the tiny seed, helped by the rain and sunshine, brings them down, silently and surely. So, too, little picture leaflets, setting forth the living Gospel of Christ, will, if sown in India, not be lost or wasted, but, with God's blessing, will have a glorious effect upon the hoary and cruel heathenism of that beautiful country.

Little children can thus help in a great work by sending the truth to foreign lands. They can also, while serving God themselves, teach others by example as well as by a kindly word, how to do the same. Some children have been the means of showing grown-up people that God expects hearty love and loving obedience at their hands. Christ expects the service of young and old alike. The weary and heavy laden may find rest in Him, and the young also may find joy in Him. If, like Timothy the youthful Apostle, you give heed, while yet children, to the Holy Scriptures, and become "wise unto salvation," you will, I am sure, in time to come, thank God and rejoice unspeakably that the evil which abounds in the world has not overwhelmed you in ruin, unto an end that it is altogether sad to think of.

THE LATE SONG.

Resting in an English meadow,
  Stretched upon the fragrant hay,
'Neath an elm tree's pleasant shadow,
  How I missed the lark's sweet lay!

Long mine ear was vainly straining,
  Still no voice of song I heard,
Till I caught the soft complaining
  Of the gentle mother bird.

Low the mother lark was pleading,
  "Dearest, how I miss your song;
Comfort my weak heart is needing
  From your carol clear and strong.

And the young ones nestling under,
  Closely covered by my wing,
They, poor things, are full of wonder
  Why their father does not sing."

Then he spoke (could pride be lurking
  In the music of that voice?),
"I have been too busy working,
  Far too busy to rejoice.

"First, while you were soundly sleeping,
  With your head beneath your wing,
Watch so earnest I was keeping,
  That I never thought to sing.

"Next, instead of idle soaring,
  I was searching all around;
Food I was so busy storing
  That no time for song I found.

"Now the evening shades appearing
  Tell of dread the night may bring;
For the future I am fearing,
  And I have no heart to sing."

"Ah! your day indeed was dreary,"
  Said the tender answering tone.
"Dearest, you may well be weary—
  Doing all that work alone.

"Come and rest, the mighty Father
  Wakes and watches through the night:
What his kind hand gives we gather,
  Food is coming with the light.

"Think of all his love has given,
  Anxious fearing does Him wrong,
Nay, I think that in his heaven
  He may miss his lark's sweet song."

Then from 'mid the dewy daisies
  Quick he soared, and eager sang;
Crowded notes of hurried praises,
  Till the silent heavens rang.

And the labourer stopped to ponder,
  As he closed his garden gate,
Looking up in puzzled wonder
  Why the lark should sing so late.

Well I knew, and home returning,
  Musing on my silent days,
Shame and love alternate burning,
  As I thought how poor my praise.

Till my heart with love grew tender,
  And my lips were singing too,
"Tell me, Lord, what shall I render,
  For thy mercies ever new?"

Now the lark's late song is over,
  Safe he rests beneath the hill,
Nestling in the dewy clover,
  But my heart is singing still.

A FLAG FOR CHRIST.

A FEW years ago a converted Sikh lay dying at Amritsar, in the Punjaub, India. Before he passed triumphantly into the glory, he expressed his desire to put up a flag for Christ, and left some money for the purpose. To-day a flag waves in the gentle breezes above the houses of that city, bearing simply the words, "FOR CHRIST," in bold letters on a scarlet ground. That bright flag seemed to us a monument of the grace and mercy of God, who could transform an idolater into a saint; and also a glad prophecy of the future when all nations shall own the sovereignty of our coming King.

Below in the city the Hindoos bow before their idols; the Mohammedans perform their religious rites, not acknowledging the Saviour, and in ignorance of his love; and within a short distance the Golden Temple of the Sikhs shines and glitters in the sunlight. But still the flag floats calmly above it all, a reminder of the glorious fact that Christ shall reign and all his enemies be put beneath his feet.

The Golden Temple is a magnificent building. The lower part of the walls are of pure white marble, and the upper part, with domes and minarets, is copper plated with gold. The temple is situated in the centre of a large tank of water, and can only be entered at one side by means of a bridge. The "grunth," the sacred book of the Sikhs, is kept in the temple by day, and while there is constantly read by a priest, three of them taking turns at this duty. At night the book is carefully and tenderly carried by the priests to a house opposite, where it remains until with the dawning of another day it is again carried into the temple. All day long the people crowd the bridge, going to and from the temple, and numbers of them wash in the tank, supposing that they get virtue from the water.

We were told that there are no chairs or bedsteads in any of the houses near the Golden Temple. The reason for this being that the "grunth" is placed upon a low stand, and the Sikhs would consider it a crime indeed to sit or lie above the level of the book.

Amid all this idolatry and superstition, it is cheering to find those who are faithfully lifting up the banner of truth and righteousness in the Lord. Another flag for Christ is the Gospel shop, which has been opened in one of the most frequented thoroughfares, where meetings are held several times a week. The Gospel here is as accessible to the people as the necessaries for their daily physical life, which are supplied at the neighbouring shops. A board over the door characterises it as "the meeting-place of the saints," and Gospel texts, in the native language, are given a prominent place.

One of the missionaries told us that he frequently used the Golden Temple as an illustration of the fact that there is only one way of salvation. "There is only one way to heaven." He tells the people, "You must come through the Lord Jesus Christ." "Oh," they reply, there are plenty of roads to Amritsar; they all take you there in the end." "Yes, but there is only one way into the Golden Temple —over the bridge," the missionary answers; and they see the point at once.

Our short stay in Amritsar did not allow time to see all the mission work that is going on in the city. But, amongst other things, we had the privilege of attending a mothers' meeting of native Christian women, at the Church Mission-house. The bright, intelligent faces of the women, the interest they manifested in the Scripture lesson; and, at the close, their affectionate greeting to the lady who had spoken to them, pleased us much.

Nor must I omit to mention the Orphanage, under the care of a German lady, who acts as mother to about fifty girls, of ages varying from fifteen to five, and has also a few little boys, the youngest scarcely more than a year old. As we walked through the Orphanage, the girls were at their sewing lesson, the little black heads bending earnestly over their work with an air of gravity and importance. We felt sorry for the thimbleless fingers, as we noticed the thick calico, but they seem to consider thimbles quite a superfluity. Their kind caretaker showed us some very creditable pieces of work turned out by the little fingers. Some of the older girls were busy, preparing the food for dinner, and the tinies playing out in the compound came to make a "salaam" to us.

Surely the work among the little ones will not be the last to receive commendation in the day when the Lord makes up his jewels!

Let all who look for, hasten the coming of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. More volunteers are needed—oh, how sorely needed! —to carry the Gospel flag into the dark places of the earth. Even in India there are many villages where the good news of the Saviour's love has never been heard. Let the soldiers of the cross go forward, till the Gospel flag shall be planted in every town and village throughout the world where there are perishing souls needing a Divine Saviour. E. A. C.

A VISIT TO AMERICA.

DEAR SIR,—In the middle of a calm Atlantic, I pen a few lines for your columns. Accompanied by my wife, I have visited many cities in Canada and the States, and we shall return to our work for the Master in Manchester much refreshed. In the face of recent remarks in THE CHRISTIAN, I must say I discerned nothing of spiritual "Down-Grade" among the Y.M.C.A.'s which, in each town and city, I visited. Speaking as a visitor paying surprise visits, I was pleased with the religious work going on. It did appear that general evangelistic work was not undertaken quite so much, but this seems to have given place to work specially for and among young men. At New York, Philadelphia, and other places, the boys' departments seem to be a new and interesting feature, being wisely arranged to lay hold of the lads without driving away the young men.

We were delighted by a visit to Mount Hermon and Mr. Moody, and quite confirm the opinion of others, that whatever claims Chicago or India may have upon the attention of Mr. Moody, these great seminaries should have a first thought.

On my outward voyage I was entrusted with thirty-five children from our Manchester Homes, whom I deposited with our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace, of Belleville, Ontario, who have since placed all of them out on farms. This week they will receive a party of girls whom Mr. Shaw has sent, for whom situations are already obtained. On board the same outward-bound vessel over 100 boys from Mr. Fegan's Home were en route for Toronto, and very pleasant meetings were held with them and the passengers.

While at Boston we had pleasant intercourse with Mr. George C. Needham, who was holding most successful meetings in that hot-bed of Unitarianism and "culture." We found him simply and fearlessly preaching "Christ, and Him crucified," to large congregations of business men. GILBERT R. KIRLEW.

SHAFTESBURY MISSION HALL, POPLAR.—During the past winter, strenuous efforts have been put forth to cope with the appalling poverty and destitution resulting from the depressed state of trade in the neighbourhood of the Docks. Since December, on an average, 4000 meals have been given weekly, mostly to poor children, and many men and women who are out of employment have had work found for them. The ways and means have been forthcoming through the kindness of friends. At the same time there is a debt of £680 remaining on the building itself, and it is important that this should be paid off soon. Rev. James Chadburn, writing from Trinity Parsonage, Poplar, E., says: "Any contributions sent to me will be gratefully acknowledged, and devoted exclusively to the building fund of this City Mission Hall, in memory of the noble Earl whose name it bears."

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

WHAT did Jesus mean by saying, "Of them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist; notwithstanding, he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he"? Luke explains, "There is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist." There was no greater prophet in the old dispensation, for John was the last and the nearest to the Messiah, of whom he was the forerunner and the witness, whom he saw, whom he baptized, and whom then he knew and testified to be the Son of God. But the least prophet in the kingdom of heaven has a greater testimony to bear than that of John. He can tell of a Lamb slain, of an accomplished salvation, of a rent veil, of a new and living way into the holiest, and of liberty to enter by the blood of Jesus. John convinced men of sin, and baptized them confessing their sins; saying unto the people that they should believe on Him that should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus. At Ephesus certain disciples had been baptized by Apollos, who knew only the baptism of John; but Paul preached Jesus to them, and baptized them into the name of the Lord Jesus (Acts xviii., xix.). This is a vivid illustration of the superiority of the new dispensation to the old.

Were the Old Testament saints born again? or is regeneration a blessing peculiar to those of the Gospel dispensation? Dispensational distinctions are of very great importance, and knowledge of them is essential to an understanding of God's progressive method of revealing Himself and his work. But dispensational distinctions are rather as the scaffolding than the building itself. Life and immortality were brought to light (not into existence) by the Gospel. "We are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." But Jesus said, "Your father Abraham saw my day: he saw it and was glad." Therefore, he was a child of God by faith in Christ. We become partakers of the divine nature by receiving the exceeding great and precious promises of God, which are all Yea and Amen in Christ Jesus. But the elders of the Patriarchal and Mosaic Dispensations saw the promises from afar, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. Therefore they were partakers of the Divine nature. It is inconceivable that Abraham, the father of believers, and Moses, who accounted the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he looked unto the recompense of the reward—should be shut out from the new creation in Christ Jesus, which is promised to those who in this dispensation are exhorted to imitate their faith. Indeed, in saying that they, apart from us, should not be made perfect (Heb. xi. 40), it is necessarily implied that they and we shall be perfected together. Progressive dispensations are but the means of manifesting to created intelligences eternal and unalterable truths. M.

CONVALESCENT HOME, WILTS.—This useful Home of Rest, for women in business and others, at Heytesbury, Wilts, is again open for the summer season. Last year between fifty and sixty patients, from various parts of the country, found here a pleasant recruiting place, and were benefited by the change. Particulars and rules upon application to the Lady Superintendent.

CAMDEN TOWN Y.M.C.A.—The second annual May breakfast was held on Sunday week, when over 250 young men sat down in the Lecture Hall, under the presidency of Mr. George Williams. A meeting commenced at nine o'clock and closed at ten, thus enabling the young men to attend their own places of worship. If the first hour was spent in refreshing the body, surely the second was a season of spiritual blessing, for an excellent address was given by Mr. Joseph Benson, based on the words. "When Thou saidst, Seek ye my face; my heart said unto Thee, Thy face, Lord, will I seek."

THE NEEDS OF FRANCE.

IN a communication on this subject, Rev. N. L. Bluett writes, regretting that more Christian ladies, with independent means, and their time at their own disposal, do not resolve to live and work among the poor and neglected. There are many well-disposed and gifted young ladies whose talents for music and languages, &c., are lost to all Christian mission work, because their education is conducted upon worldly principles, but whose gifts might be won for the work of Christ, if the thought of self-devotion to his cause were made a distinct basis of their education. This is the more sad, seeing the great lack of lady workers in so many parts of France and elsewhere, where there are such precious opportunities of furthering the Gospel. The people are ready to welcome thankfully the thoughtful, loving lady visitor, who will care for them, if sick, and show a real interest in their needs, temporal and spiritual.

After giving some details of what has been done in this direction, Mr. Bluett says :—" To meet an evident need, some Christian friends propose to establish a Missionary Pension, with a twofold object: (1) Where ladies who wish to perfect themselves in French could stay for a longer or shorter period, going in and out among the people, and so fitting themselves to take up work in other parts of France; (2) to receive young ladies who have the desire, and whose parents would like them to be trained for Gospel mission work, their gifts for music, singing, and languages being developed, and experience gained in mission work, the Word of God being taught in all its bearing on Christian life and service." Further particulars may be gained from Rev. N. L. Bluett, Grande Rive, Evian-les-Bains, Haute Savoie, France.

MISS WILLARD ON SOCIAL PURITY.

IN a recent circular note on this subject Miss Frances Willard says :—

There is a strong and growing demand for the treatment of these subjects, and the man or woman who can present them with mingled fearlessness and delicacy will accomplish untold good. I have been disappointed in the response of the pulpit and Y.M.C.A. to our plea for their help, and am compelled to believe that for some time yet we must rely almost wholly upon the free lance of the temperance reformer to pierce the traditional reserve that is but the lava-crust over a volcano, and bring to the surface that flaming wrath in the people's heart whose flame alone can burn out the corruptions that disgrace our nation in its public walks and private ways alike. Above all have I desired to see some young man, gifted and good, a Chevalier Bayard, sans peur et sans reproche, who would enter the lists of this splendid fight wearing the white ribbon as his badge, bearing the white cross as his weapon, and the white shield as his defence. I am amazed that America has not by this time her William T. Stead, the defender of degraded womanhood and the inspirer of manhood to deeds of personal valour of the battle-field of purity and honour, compared with which the knights of old were mere boys at play. I would that the courage and faith of the white ribboners might stir many a manly young heart to sacred emulation, and I can but believe that, if there is no leader of the White Cross host as yet developed, he is being trained in some white ribbon mother's home. Nay, there should be ten thousand such growing up to bless the homes of the future, else our women are oblivious of their opportunity and recreant to their trust.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN.—The many friends of Miss von Finkelstein, says The Sunday School Chronicle, will be glad to learn that the Orient Line steamer Orizaba, which left Gravesend on March 30 last, and Plymouth the day after, arrived at Adelaide, where our friend disembarked, on Tuesday, May 8.

A CENTENARY OF MISSIONS.

THE General Conference of Missions, to be held in London next month, is now at hand, and promises to be one of the most important and far-reaching events of our day.

Whether we look at the long list of questions proposed for deliberation by the members in private, at the many interesting subjects for discussion in public, or at the numerous meetings for spreading information and exciting a deeper interest in mission work as carried on in the different fields of labour,—all point to a movement which can scarcely fail to place missionary enterprise on a higher and broader platform than it has occupied in the past, and will, we trust, through the Divine blessing, give new life and impulse to the cause of missions, and bring back to the Church at home that quickening and power which have always followed the outgoing of a true missionary spirit.

Missionary Methods, Medical Missions, Women's Work in the Mission Field, the Place of Education in Missionary Work, the Training and Support of Native Workers, the Missionary in Relation to Literature, Home Work for Missions, Missionary Comity, Commerce and Diplomacy in Relation to Missions.

Afternoon meetings of Conference will be held in the Lower Exeter Hall as follows :—

Monday, June 11.—The Increase of Islam, and the Social, Political, and Religious Influences of Mohammedanism.

Tuesday, June 12.—The State of the World a Hundred Years Ago and Now, as Regards the Prospects of Foreign Missions.

Wednesday, June 13.—Buddhism and other Heathen Systems; their Character and Influence compared with those of Christianity. The "Light of Asia" and the "Light of the World."

Thursday, June 14.—The Missions of the Roman Catholic Church to Heathen Lands: their Character, Extent, Influence, and Lessons.

Friday, June 15.—The Intimate Relations between Home and Foreign Missions: or the Reaction of Foreign Missions on the Life and Unity of the Church.

Public evening meetings in the Large Hall :—

Monday, June 11.—Great Missionary Meeting. The Condition and Increase of the Heathen, and their Claims upon the Christian Church.

Tuesday, June 12.—Medical Missions.

Wednesday, June 13.—Commerce and Christian Missions.

Thursday, June 14.—Women's Mission to Women.

Friday, June 15.—The Benefits Conferred by Christian Missions.

Monday, June 18.—The Church's Duty, and a New Departure in Missionary Enterprise.

Tuesday, June 19.—Valedictory Meeting, and Addresses on the Bible and Christian Literature in the Work of Missions.

Public meetings in the Large and Lower Hall, afternoon and evening. Descriptive of missionary work in all parts of the heathen world :—

Monday, June 11.—China: the Eighteen Provinces; Missions to the Jews.

Tuesday, June 12.—Japan and Imperial China and Dependencies; the Turkish Empire and Central Asia.

Wednesday, June 13.—Africa: North and West, the Nile, the Niger; Oceania: Polynesia, Australasia, &c.

Thursday, June 14.—Africa: the Lakes, the Congo, and the Zambesi; South Africa and Madagascar.

Monday, June 18.—North and South America.

On Sunday, June 17, sermons or missionary addresses by many delegates from America and the Continent of Europe, and by missionaries and others, will be delivered in different parts of London.

EAST LONDON GOSPEL MISSION.—By the death of Mr. S. Morley, M.P., the Mission, of which Mr. George Fuller is the superintendent, suffered a sad loss, and, owing to the decrease in the support accorded, it has been found needful to abandon some of the very useful agencies. The Factory Girls' Institute has been given up, but the other work is proceeding as usual, and is highly recommended by several energetic Christian ladies and gentlemen. Letters addressed to Mr. Fuller, at the Brunswick Hall, Brunswick-road, Poplar, E., will receive prompt attention.

CLAPTON HALL CONFERENCE.

LARGELY attended meetings of Christian people were held on Wednesday and Thursday, last week, in this commodious hall, situate in Alkham-road, Stoke Newington. They were convened by Mr. John Morley, the founder of the hall, and there were three services each day.

The first subject considered was: "Practical Sanctification." Dr. Neatby pointed out the implication of Hebrews xiii. 20, 21, and Mr. A. Stewart illustrated the subject from the Pentateuch. Under the old covenant the consecration of priests was attended by the shedding of sacrificial blood; under the new covenant, those who are called to holy priesthood are made perfect "through the blood of the everlasting covenant." Mr. H. W. Taylor also spoke.

Messrs. J. B. Millar, F. C. Bland, and G. F. Trench delivered addresses on "The Holy Spirit in relation to Worship and Ministry." The last-named maintained with much force that true worship must begin by an emptying of self. Then, depending on the Holy Spirit, believers should see to it that, by constraint of the love of Christ, they search out the needs of their fellow-men and minister to the good of those by whom they are surrounded.

The third subject for the first day was "Prophecy in relation to the Jews, the Gentiles, and the Church of God." Dr. McKilliam maintained that the Church's place in the purposes of God is the key to unfulfilled prophecy. Dr. R. Anderson, dealing with the Jewish phase of the subject, showed that the descendants of Abraham must not be regarded as enjoying a monopoly of God's blessing, for the Divine intention, as disclosed in the Scriptures, is to bring in a time of blessing for all nations, and in accomplishing this He will employ the Jewish people as one agency. God's dealings in the past and the future with the Gentile peoples was spoken of by Mr. F. C. Bland.

On the second day the proceedings opened with addresses on "Hindrances to the fulness of the Spirit, in individuals and assemblies," by Messrs. J. B. Millar, H. Groves, and W. R. Lane. It was shown that although hindrances are of the flesh, they may be turned into opportunities for service. Selfishness, sluggishness, and slothfulness, all grieve the Holy Spirit.

The second session on Thursday was occupied with a consideration of "our responsibilities in relation to the world." Dr. Neatby exhorted to the testimony of a happy life, such as Paul led, even while suffering bonds and imprisonments. Mr. W. H. Bennett urged a witnessing for the plain truths of the Gospel. Mr. H. A. Mandeville earnestly called upon his hearers to invite the attention of the indifferent to the love of God, and his provision for fallen men.

"Fundamental truths of the Gospel" was the last subject treated of, the addresses being by Messrs. H. Groves, G. F. Trench, and A. Stewart.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.—Changes have arisen on account of a new railway running right over the ground of the old mission building in Townsend-st., Dublin. The extensive premises in Luke-street, which were occupied chiefly by the Female Teachers' Training School, Girls' Home, and Infants' Ragged Schools, have also been required. As compensation the Mission was awarded £6000, which will be fully needed for rebuilding. A site in the most suitable position in the city has been obtained. The fine upon the lease of ninety-nine years is £750, which we are endeavouring to collect and place in the hands of the Mission Committee to enable them to commence building at once. The meetings in the temporary iron room and the other mission stations in Dublin are attended by hundreds of the poorest people every week, while some 1300 children are enjoying the benefits of the Homes and schools. (MRS.) ELLEN SMYLY.

SACRED SONGS & SOLOS

Compiled and Sung by

IRA D. SANKEY.

Consisting of a Choice Assortment of New Pieces, with an approved Selection of Standard Hymns.

309 HYMNS AND TUNES; IN ONE VOLUME.

"This book is beautifully got-up. We casually opened upon what may be called 'a Standard Hymn,' headed with that precious portion, 'The Redeemed of the Lord shall Return,' and 'Come with Singing unto Zion.' In glancing through the work, we find it abounds with well-known hymns; hence it cannot but find a welcome to many a singing family."—Gospel Magazine.

"Three hundred and nine more Songs and Hymns, mostly of the same class as the former ones, with the addition of a few Standard Hymns and Tunes. We also recognize some from the 'Christian Choir.' The collection will, no doubt, be readily welcomed wherever its predecessor is found. And where is it that it is not found? It is almost an omnipresent book."

WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING? OR,

The Progress of England Rome-wards.

By the Right Hon. LORD ROBERT MONTAGU,

Author of "Recent Events—and a Clue to Their Solution;" "Reasons for Leaving the Romish Church;" &c., &c.

"Some Ritualists know very well whither they are tending; and are, as it were, the agents of Rome to bring over the Church of England. I do not address them; for it would be useless. Some who become Ritualists do so—because it is, alas! the fashion; because the Bishops favour Ritualism and the Government promotes it. I do not speak to them. There are some who become Ritualists from a love of antiquity; but also with a hope of greater spirituality, and with a sincere desire to get nearer to God. I address myself to THEM, and beg to consider with me whither are they tending. I sympathise with them; for I felt a strong desire for more spirituality in religion, and once deemed that it would be found in the Roman Church."

MAY MEETINGS.

Church of England Zenana Missions.

There was a crowded audience in Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, on Friday, May 4, on the occasion of the eighth annual meeting of this Society. Rev. F. E. Wigram presided. The report was a very encouraging record of quiet and persevering work done by a hundred missionaries who are labouring for Christ in heathen and Mohammedan lands. Of eighteen missionaries added to the staff, six were wholly or partly honorary. The year's expenditure, £24,559, was in excess of the income.

Not only did the Chairman, in his speech, urge the need for more missionaries, but other speakers also dwelt upon the same point. The devotedness of those now in the field is beyond all praise, but from many places there comes calls for more workers. Rev. H. E. Fox maintained that the growing neutrality in religious things that characterises much of the work of the Government of India is fraught with peril to the people of the country.

United Kingdom Band of Hope Union.

On Tuesday and Wednesday, last week, the anniversary of this very useful and healthy organisation was celebrated at Exeter Hall. On each day there was a conference, the annual public meeting being held on the Wednesday evening. Mr. George Williams, president of the Union, occupied the chair. An abstract of the report, read by Mr. C. Wakely, general secretary, showed that last year was one of satisfactory progress. According to recent returns, there are nearly 14,000 Bands of Hope and other juvenile temperance societies in the United Kingdom, with a membership of over 1,700,000 young people, who are receiving instruction calculated to assist them in becoming good and useful men and women.

Archdeacon Watkins, of Durham, delivered a hearty address on the Union and its work, being followed by Rev. Charles Garrett, of Liverpool, who spoke with much power on the evils resulting from indulgence in intoxicating drink, and the enormity of such a wasteful expenditure of money. We have, he said, but to take the money which, as a nation, we spend on strong drink, and give it to our Government, and they could therewith arrange that we should all live rent free, coal free, gas free, and water free! If some emigration agent were to offer us settlement in a country where all these immunities could be enjoyed, we should at once make up our minds to go to the new land. But home is that land, if the people will but abstain from that which not only costs much, but at the same time does an infinite amount of injury to body and soul. Having dwelt with great force upon the economic aspects of the subject, Mr. Garrett alluded to the many social evils resulting from the drink traffic. A deep impression was caused by his reference to the drink death-roll. There is, he said, on an average throughout the year, a funeral every minute during the eight hours per day of public burial, of persons whose deaths have been caused by the influence of strong drink. And what funerals these are! With reference to the proposal of the Government to compensate disestablished publicans, Mr. Garrett said he could hardly conceive a more monstrous and unrighteous suggestion. If we interfere with the offensive thing, we are to pay a penalty; if we do not, we are to receive a bribe in the form of additional licence revenue! And this is claimed in the sacred name of justice! Then let justice decide the matter. Let an impartial court of arbitration be instituted, and after the publicans have, by laying bare their deeds, shown cause why they should receive compensation, witnesses can be called to tell another tale—a tale of property injured, trade ruined, and hearts broken. Masters and men, husbands and wives, and shoeless little children, too, will all have something to say then, and at the end there will go up a cry like thunder of "not compensation, but restitution!" Let those who have an interest in the traffic show that we owe them anything, and then we are ready to pay, but not before. (The statement was loudly cheered).

The meeting was also addressed by Rev. Charles Leach. A petition was adopted calling upon Parliament to amend the Local Government Bill, so that no legal impediment may be created to the successful prosecution of the temperance reformation; and a telegram was sent to Mr. T. W. Russell, M.P., congratulating him on securing the second reading of the Bill for the early closing of public-houses in Ireland on Saturday evenings. The meeting was very cordial throughout, and rendered especially attractive by the excellent singing of a choir of five hundred senior members of London Bands of Hope.

London Missionary Society.

Travellers in foreign parts do not always bring back with them a sympathetic and favourable report of missions among the heathen. All the more welcome was the cordial testimony rendered by Lord Brassey in his capacity as chairman at the annual meeting of this ancient Society, in Exeter Hall last week. His Lordship has been a great voyager round the globe, and he has nothing but praise for the work of Gospel missions. In his excellent speech he said:—

> I have been on board the storm-tossed vessel in which a good bishop of the Anglican Church was engaged in carrying the Gospel to the distant and storm-bound and ice-bound shores of Labrador. I have been in the stormy waters of the Straits of Magellan, and have seen at what sacrifice and by what efforts the Gospel is carried to the savage people of Tierra del Fuego. I have seen the devoted missionaries who are sent forth by the United States at their work at Beyrout and Lahore. On the occasion of a recent journey, both at Amritsar and Agra I saw what devoted men, and not less devoted women, were doing in the great cause of the education of heathen children. I have had the privilege at the Island of Tahiti of listening to a French Protestant pastor, a man of great culture, a man who had formerly held the post of teacher to one of the most distinguished nobles of our land, and I have heard that man deliver a sermon which was listened to with great attention by his native audience. The last missionary station which I visited was that established by yourselves in Darnley Island. We had the pleasure and the privilege of taking the wife of Mr. Hunt, your missionary, in the Sunbeam from Thursday Island to Darnley Island. At Darnley Island we met your own mission schooner, which had brought Mr. Savage from Murray Island to Darnley Island to meet his newly arrived colleague. We spent a most interesting day with Mr. Hunt and Mr. Savage at Darnley Island. We saw the place of worship on the island—a humble but picturesque building; we saw much of the native teacher and his wife, persons whom it was impossible to know without feeling the greatest admiration and respect for them. We heard a most interesting narrative of the difficulties and efforts which are involved in carrying the Gospel to the savage races of New Guinea. We heard, and it was impossible to hear the story without a thrill of admiration, of the devotion which is shown by the native teachers acting under the guidance of their English leaders in this great cause. The greater the peril, the more imminent the prospect even of death, the more earnest is the enthusiasm of the native teachers to go forth into this dangerous field.

Lord Brassey went on to declare that it is England's highest mission and imperative duty to civilise, educate, and Christianise those in foreign lands whom her influence can reach. He made a strenuous appeal for increased help towards the Society's operations—an appeal backed up by a generous donation and the promise of continued support. Altogether, as Dr. Bruce remarked, it is seldom one hears a better missionary speech from the chair than that of Lord Brassey.

The other speeches were also good and embraced a wide sweep of missionary effort. Mr. Albert Spicer gave an interesting account of his recent visit to the Samoan Mission. Despite many difficulties, he asserted that a splendid work for Christ is being done in these islands of the Sunny South. He spoke highly of the native pastors, and, as to the mass of the native Christians, he would take the first twenty Samoans he met and would back them in Bible knowledge against any twenty he might meet in this country. At the same time there is need of purifying the family life of the people, and more lady-workers are wanted.

The great land of China was represented by Rev. George Owen, of Pekin, who dwelt very impressively on the vastness of the field, the fewness of the workers, and the openness of the doors on every hand. The triumphs of the Gospel of Jesus Christ have been very manifest, especially in its bearing on the position of Chinese women, who are subject to great degradation under the native systems of religion. In Northern China many are breaking away from the old creeds, and nothing but Christianity can take their place. In an earnest speech, Rev. R. F. Horton said that missions would never be adequately supported till the members of the churches at home are more embued with the spirit of self-sacrifice. Is it true, he asked, that the majority of church members spend more on entertainments than on missions? He was persuaded that the ruin of our country at the present time is the passion for amusement, and declared that he deemed no novel or biography so interesting as missionary reports and missionary biographies.

Mr. A. J. Swann, of the Lake Tanganyika Mission, referred pathetically to the traces he had found in Central Africa of the work and influence of David Livingstone. He contravened the statement of Canon Taylor, that slavery in the hands of the Moslem is a mild institution. It involves the tearing away of children from their homes, and all the nameless horrors of the Central African slave trade. Rev. J. Jones, recently expelled by the French authorities at Maré, South Seas, told of the great progress made in that far-off region during his thirty-four years' labours there, and attributed his recent expulsion to Popish influence and intrigue. The report submitted by the secretary, Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, was a record of "steady work, steady progress, and evident blessing." Cordial references were made to the good cheer given to some of the missionaries by Lord Brassey's visit, and also to the visit of Mr. Spicer to Samoa. During the year eight male missionaries were sent out, but six had retired from the field, and nine ladies have taken the place of one who has been called away. Evangelisation, said Mr. Thompson, is advancing in all parts of India, and in Madagascar the work is steadily progressing. As the result of his visit to the Cape he was more than ever convinced that the religious condition of the natives in that colony is such as to awaken grave anxiety. The controversy with respect to Mohammedanism has done good in revealing the weaknesses of some Christian methods, and in showing the need of greater consistency and consecration. The most jarring note in the proceedings appeared to be the deficit of £8000, and during the meeting many appeals were made for more liberal support to meet the growing demands of the Society's work.

Missions to Seamen.

The Bishop of London presided over the annual meeting in connection with the Missions to Seamen, which was held on Friday afternoon last, at Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's. The organisation endeavours to supply the spiritual needs of half a million British sailors and fishermen, besides thousands of foreigners on board vessels in British ports. It has 74 honorary chaplains, 23 chaplains, 44 Scripture-readers, and a number of other agents working afloat in fifty seaports, at home and abroad, who are furnished with 40 mission vessels and boats in roadsteads, &c., and have 42 churches, institutes, and mission rooms in docks, &c.

Commander Dawson, the secretary, read the thirty-second annual report, which stated that last year witnessed considerable spiritual progress among seamen, fishermen, and bargemen. Through lack of funds, the committee had been compelled to refuse urgent requests for religious ministrations at several ports. It appears that two-thirds of the English ships of war are without chaplains. With regard to temperance work, it was stated that whole crews of total abstainers are frequently to be met with.

Christian Education in India.

The thirteenth anniversary of the Christian Vernacular Education Society for India was celebrated on Friday last at Willis's Rooms, by a meeting over which the Earl of Northbrook presided.

The report for last year showed the training institutions of the Society at Ahmednagar and Dindigal to be in a flourishing condition; nearly 7000 children attend the inspected schools. The principal feature of the work of the year has been the publication of several pamphlets and books intended for the use of educated Hindoos. These have appeared with marvellous rapidity from Dr. Murdoch's pen.

Among the speakers was Mr. J. S. Haig, principal of the Ahmednagar Training Institution, who gave an admirable account of its working. There is, he said, an increasing demand for Christian teachers in the Mahratta country. Over 300 men trained in the institution are now at work in some teaching capacity in the Bombay presidency. He bore testimony to the beneficial effect of Christianity in India. The Government officials of the collectorate of Ahmednagar, which contained a population of 800,000, informed him that they could at once tell whether there was a Christian school in a village by its cleanliness or otherwise, and the "general hang" of things in it.

Rights and Wrongs of Children.

If Christianity has done anything for the world, surely it has taught men to regard and care for the defenceless and the weak. And yet there seems much that remains to be done in this respect, judging from the terrible report of the London Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. It is difficult to write about it in cool blood, or to credit the fact that such cruel monsters in human form can exist in this enlightened age. As Mr. Mundella well remarked at the annual meeting in the Mansion House last week, it is a terrible reflection on our boasted civilisation, and a slur on our common Christianity, that there should be need for such a Society. Is there not some truth after all in the charge that we are neglecting our heathen at home, while we are so solicitous as to the heathen abroad.

The speeches at the Mansion House meeting, as a whole, did not seem to us to be near enough to boiling point. Rev. B. Waugh, the man who, above all, ought to have spoken, and who could have pleaded the cause of the deeply wronged children, too modestly effaced himself, and even permitted his report to be "taken as read." If quotations from that report had been given to the meeting, and sent forth to the world, they would have done more to arouse indignant sympathy than all the speeches put together. What do our gentle readers think of these facts, taken in connection with the engraving kindly supplied to us by Mr. Waugh?—

WEAPONS AND THEIR MARKS.

Besides the usual weapons of ordinary punishments, which in 100 cases of assault have been used most unreasonably: such as canes, straps, whips, and the less usual boots, belts, thongs of rope, there has been used hammers, pokers, cold and hot—deliberately heated in the fire; hot stoves on which bare limbs have been put; hot fire grates against which little hands have been held.

The condition in which little victims' bodies have been found may be gathered from the following extracts from reports on cases.

On the right arm (girl of nine) were four recent bruises, five old ones, a recent burn, and a scar as of a cut. On the left arm were four recent bruises. The bottom of the back was greatly inflamed as from recent whippings, the left thigh was swollen as from a severe blow. On the groin were marks of burns.

On the right side of the head (boy of four and a half) was a large blister where the hair had been pulled out by the roots, on its left side the same, and remains of older removals of the hair were all over the head. On the left shoulder was a scar, on the bottom of the back a burn. On the left elbow and right hand, ulcerating sores; on both thighs, scars. Burns were scattered over the limbs, and there were blisters of burns on the soles of the feet.

Her back (a girl of three) was one mass of black and green bruises; her thighs were almost raw. She had small wounds on the knuckles of both hands which were much swollen. There were old marks on her arms. Her head had on it bruises, and the calves of her legs bore old marks of blows.

When first seen, the mother had bound up the face, and applied lotion to it for two days. His brow (a boy of six) and right side of his face were livid with liver-coloured bruises; his eyes were scarcely perceptible, being almost lost in swelling. On the left cheek and chin were lesser bruises, the lower lip was swollen and broken.

The child (a girl of twelve) had a black eye, twenty cuts on the back, which must have been given with a stick on the bare flesh, and a burn four inches long, caused by the application of some hot instrument, which might have been the poker produced.

Her whole body (a girl of twelve) was much emaciated, on her thighs were sores from the protrusion of the bone. Her eyes were sunken, and dark rings were round them; her skin was yellow. Under her left eye was a mark of a blow, and on her shoulders were several, they were of long standing. She weighed 36½ lbs. (Normal weight 63 lbs.)

1. A toasting-fork with bent points used as a cane.
2. A file used to file the shoulder-bones and spine.
3. A poker laid on the back red hot.
4. A toasting-fork beaten out and untwisted, making a wire scourge.

We sincerely hope that many friends of the helpless little ones will send to Mr. Waugh (7, Harpur-street, Bloomsbury, W.C.) for a copy of this report, and will inform their friends and neighbours as to what is going on. The only speaker at the meeting who seemed to us to hint at the root of the evil was Mr. Mundella, M.P., who told a touching story of a little girl he encountered in the street, and who he discovered was practising gross deception in order to gratify the drink craving of her unnatural mother. Surely the accursed drink is at the bottom of most of this evil; could parents in their sober senses possibly treat their offspring so? The Lord Mayor, Colonel Howard Vincent, M.P., Mrs. Garret Anderson, Mr. Kegan Paul, and others pleaded the claims of the Society, which has dealt during the past year with over 280 cases, and prosecuted in 50 of these; the others received a warning, which it is to be hoped proved effectual. The aim of the Society is preventive, more perhaps than punitive, and this can be helped forward by a wide dissemination of the scope of the Society's work. Mr. Mundella is about to introduce a Bill to the House of Commons for strengthening the hands of the authorities in dealing with the rights and wrongs of children; we trust it will speedily pass into law.

George-yard Mission and Schools.

It was cheering and refreshing to listen at the anniversary meeting at George-yard, last week, to the record of the many tokens of blessing which God has vouchsafed to the different departments of the work during the past twelvemonth. Everybody was delighted to see Mr. Holland, the venerable founder of the Mission, looking so hale and hearty, and so full of life and energy; there was quite a chorus of eager responses to this petition in the opening prayer: "We ask Thee to grant that thy servant, who has been so long at the head of thy work, may yet be spared for many years to lighten up the neighbourhood with the Gospel, to lift up the fallen, to save the outcast, and to train up the rising generation in the nuture and admonition of the Lord."

Mr. Holland's statement was of a highly interesting character; one could not fail to be struck with the far-reaching character of the work, and with the quiet, unostentatious manner in which everything seems to be carried on. In the nursery there are received forty infants daily, whose mothers have to go out and earn a livelihood. Referring to the free ragged day-schools, Mr. Holland observed: "When our late President, the Earl of Shaftesbury, visited this institution for the last time, he strongly expressed a wish that the day-schools should never be given up. He was often a visitor, and took a deep interest in the poor children. 'You will promise me,' said his lordship, 'that these schools will go on; God will supply all the means necessary,' and we have found his words true." During the winter months the scholars are frequently fed; very often as many as 330 boys and girls partake of a nourishing meal. A bright and cheerful infant school has been opened; it is quite full, and forms a valuable addition to the day-school department. About 800 children are connected with the Sunday-schools, which have a staff of forty-eight voluntary teachers. The Band of Hope is in a flourishing state, so also are the classes for rough boys. Some 250 girls under thirteen years of age are gathered together regularly in classes presided over by ladies, and taught sewing and knitting. A new work has been commenced among Hebrew boys and girls, conducted by friends from Mildmay. The spiritual, as well as the industrial, work among big boys and lads has been attended by a large measure of success; and so have the efforts on behalf of elder girls and young women.

As to the work among the grown-up people, it was pointed out that the Bible-classes for men and women have been signally blessed, and that much good had resulted from the mothers' meetings. Hundreds of the starving poor have been fed; and sewing-classes for poor women were held during the winter months. The Homes near Croydon, erected by Lady Ashburton (who also bears all the expense of their maintenance), and which are open for the reception of the very poor in failing health, have during the year benefited 1100 men, women, and children. There are other Homes: the Mary Baring Rest for children, the Lady Ashburton Rest for grown-up people, the George Holland Dovecot for mothers and their babes, the Prophets' Chamber for weary Christian workers without means and friends, and Norrington Hall for motherless girls who are trained for service. God in his goodness has moved his stewards to supply all the funds necessary for carrying on so large a work.

The helpers in many of the departments proceeded to give details of their work, reciting numerous incidents illustrative of the saving power of God, and of the beauty of a Christian life. Lady Ashburton conducts a mothers' meeting at George-yard, which she declared was "the nicest in all London"; she testified that as a Christian she received great comfort and help from her association with the Mission. After some cordial references by Mr. Holland to the great service rendered by Mr. R. L. Lankester, treasurer of the Mission, the Bishop of Waiapu gave a brief and practical speech, showing how work such as that carried on at George-yard not only purifies and improves the lives of the people of London, but contributes largely towards saving the colonies from being flooded with unwelcome and undesirable settlers.

The Earl of Harrowby, who presided over the meeting, said the influence of the work of their esteemed friend had been felt in the West-end as well as the East. There are thousands of men and women, and of children, who are thanking Mr. Holland every day for the change wrought in them.

At the conclusion of the speeches a large number of young men and women, who have passed through the schools, and are still attending the classes, were presented with illuminated certificates, and handsomely bound Bibles, in recognition of their good conduct, and length of service.

Missions to the Jews.

The eightieth anniversary of the London Society for promoting Christianity among the Jews was celebrated on Friday, May 4, at Exeter Hall, Sir John Kennaway, M.P., occupying the chair. The Hebrew children from the schools of the Society attended, and sang a number of hymns and anthems. Rev. W. Fleming, secretary, had to report an adverse balance of £5700. Mr. J. A. Campbell, M.P., delivered an interesting address on Christian work among the Jews. He said he understood that the number of Protestant agents now employed in missions to the Jews is about 260, fully one half of which were connected with the London Society. Rev. Gordon Calthrop spoke of the present stir among the Jewish people. Appealing for increased support, he said: We do not expect to convert the whole Jewish nation—the Lord will do that when He comes again; but we expect to be the instrument in God's hand of bringing out "the remnant according to the election of grace," and of contributing to the forming and swelling of a stream of Christian Israelites which shall connect the wondrous Jewish past with the still more wondrous Jewish future, when the Lord shall call his chosen people together again.

Addresses were also delivered by Revs. F. A. C. Lillingston, and R. W. Hurden, and Dr. T. Chaplin, inspector of mission stations. The last named said that, instead of shunning the missionary, as once they did, the Jews now, in hundreds and thousands, earnestly seek him in order to receive instruction with reference to the nature and claims of Christianity.

Irish Church Missions.

On Tuesday morning, last week, the thirty-ninth anniversary meeting of the Irish Church Missions Society was held at St. James's Hall, Piccadilly. Lieut.-General Sir Robert Phayre presided, and in the course of some introductory remarks said that there are indications of a mighty religious work being in progress in Ireland.

Rev. E. N. Thwaites spoke in warm eulogy of the work of the Society. During the past fourteen months he had thrice visited Ireland; he now "testified that which he had seen" in the country, and he had seen many cheering things. The Society is, he said, erecting a finger-post to point those to Jesus who have been bitten by the fiery serpent of Romanism; it says to them, "Look and live." The Society is planting lighthouses, living lighthouses, to warn people off the dangerous rocks of Popery, and the quicksands of superstition. I know, said Mr. Thwaites, no agency equal to it. There are altogether 210 agents, men and women, who are sending out rays of light where there would otherwise be nothing but darkness.

Rev. H. Fishe, superintendent of the Dublin Mission, expressed the conviction that the prejudices which in days gone by existed in the minds of the Roman Catholics of Ireland are passing away; and other speakers made it clear that it is not difficult in the large centres to get Romanists to hear Protestant preachers. Rev. J. McCormick, of Connemara, gave it as his deliberate conviction that Ireland is fast ripening for a national revolt from the usurpation of Rome, and for a national reception of the Gospel of Christ. Emancipation from the Papal yoke is, he held, within measurable distance.

Great Western Railway Temperance Union.

The fifth anniversary of this union was celebrated on Monday evening at the Central Hall, Acton. Lord Lyttelton (president of the Union) occupied the chair. The hon. sec., Mr. R. S. Alford, reported a total membership of 2,118,621 belonging to the A or general section, 1,497 to the B or total abstinence section. These numbers were an increase over last year of 367. There are twenty-one branch unions and six more are in course of formation. The Union is an outcome of the effort of Mr. Alexander Wood, and has for its object the promotion of temperance among the 40,000 railway men, and to provide coffee taverns for supplying them with non-intoxicating drinks.

Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon presided over the annual meeting of this Association, which was held on Monday evening in the Metropolitan Tabernacle. There was a large audience. Last year's operations were attended with much blessing. The agents of the Association number eighty, and they labour in twenty-eight counties. Sales were effected amounting in the aggregate to £9,166, and to accomplish this, 831,000 visits were made by the colporteurs, in the course of which people were kindly conversed with on spiritual things. Many of the men attended the meeting. They marched down the building to the platform with their book packs on their backs, presenting just the appearance they bear when following their calling.

In opening the proceedings, the President acknowledged the abundant blessing which God had vouchsafed to the labours of the Association. Later on in the evening he pointed out that like all the agencies connected with the Tabernacle the Colportage was carried on without any debt being incurred. So far from telling people to pay their debts, Holy Scripture distinctly enjoins, "Owe not man anything"—don't go into debt at all. Remarking upon the fact that funds had come in just as they were required, Mr. Spurgeon said: We have generally had the readiest help in the worst times. I suppose I never was in such ill-repute as at the present moment—in which ill-repute I will glory for Christ's sake, as I have only defended the truth of God against deadly error—and yet just now the help we are receiving from God's people is simply unparalleled. There never was a time when there was so much water under the ship as there is to-day; there has always been enough, but at times I have felt the gravel grating. Running aground has, however, never been feared for a moment, and surely never will be. The Lord liveth, and will supply the needs of his own work, if we do but trust Him.

An abstract of the report was read by Rev. W. Corden Jones, secretary, who observed that the Association has just attained its majority. He showed that the need for colportage was never greater than it is now, when the opportunities for usefulness on the part of the agents are also remarkably increased.

Three of the colporteurs having given brief reports of their work, a sympathetic address was delivered by Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson, who maintained that the wide circulation of corrupt and contaminating literature makes it all the more important that wholesome and elevating books should be made accessible to all.

The Book World.

The Fourth Gospel.

St. John the Author of the Fourth Gospel. By Howard Heber Evans, B.A. 6s. Nisbet. While the assertions of Baur and his followers continue to be repeated and echoed, there cannot but be room for such a sound argumentative treatise as this, wherein the sad emptiness of negative criticism is forcibly shown by comparison with positive fact and manifest truth. Those who are not convinced by this book that the "Diamond Gospel" proceeded from the same pen as the Apocalypse must be beyond conviction by logical demonstration. For the most part the book consists of excerpts from the writings of acknowledged Biblical authorities, but there are, at the same time, many evidences of independent research on the part of the author.

The New Guinea Mission.

Seldom have we read a more deeply interesting narrative of Christian work in a heathen land than Dr. Samuel Macfarlane's Among the Cannibals. It is the Story of the New Guinea Mission, and is the first of a series of manuals to be issued by the London Missionary Society describing the work of their agents in various parts of the globe. It contains a complete, yet concise history, of one of the most remarkable missionary enterprises of our time, carried on amid many difficulties and much discouragement on the "largest, darkest, and most neglected island in the world." The volume is embellished by life-like portraits of the pioneer missionaries, Revs, James Chalmers, W. G. Lawes, and the author, besides a number of original illustrations, drawn by an artist who recently visited the island. (5s. John Snow & Co., Ivy-lane, E.C.)

The Inspiration of the Scriptures.

"Theopneustia:" The Plenary Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. By L. Gaussen, D.D. 3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster. In the absence of an exhaustive work reverently dealing with the Divine authority of Holy Writ in such a way as it is possible to treat the subject in the present state of religious thought and Biblical learning, and at the same time honestly meeting and fully answering the many modern objections to the claim of the sacred Scriptures to be inspired of God, we heartily welcome this re-publication of a work which did good service to the Church many years ago. Holding that some such a work as this is greatly needed at present, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon has issued this edition, and in a prefatory note he says:—"In this work the author proved himself a master of holy argument. His testimony is clear as a bell." For this edition the work has undergone some revision; a little more overhauling might have made it an abler advocate of the truth. Nevertheless, the book still remains without a peer as a defence of the inspiration and authority of the sacred Scriptures; and we sincerely hope it will again find many readers.

Three New Gospels reviewed.

Gospels of Yesterday. Drummond: Spencer: Arnold. By Robert A. Watson, M.A. Second Edition. 5s. Nisbet & Co. The first edition of these three critical essays was speedily exhausted, which proves the interest taken in the authors criticised, and the appreciation of the criticism. There have been of Prof. Drummond's famous and attractive but mistaken book, reviews of which we can only say, "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." There is nothing savage in the critique before us, though it is an uncompromising condemnation of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World." Of that book it says: "The reign of law in the spiritual sphere traced by Mr. Drummond appears as cruel as it is unscientific... neither science nor theology, but a bastard Calvinism, with all the faults ever charged against the old, and none of its massive vigour or philosophic range." Prof. Drummond's theory is termed "The Higher Biology;" that of Mr. Herbert Spencer, "The Lower Biology." The latter is declared to be "a counterfeit gospel, requiring a special education to read, and a complete ignorance of Evolution to accept." Matthew Arnold's gospel of yesterday is termed by the reviewer, "The Gospel of Nature," of which he says "We have a distinct admission that Evolution has never produced a sound community, and cannot ensure the 'issue of things' which conscience foretells." The reviewer asks, "A not-us making for righteousness, abstract and impersonal—what is this for practical purposes?" Many Christians have been fascinated by these "gospels of yesterday;" to all such we commend this able, pungent, evangelical exposé of them.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. H. C. G. Moule, of Cambridge.

Light is poured upon the truth from unexpected quarters. A recently published work by Professor Max Müller—"Biography of Words" (Longman)—furnishes additional evidence on the origin of man. The Darwinian hypothesis that man's beginning was one of the lowest barbarism finds no support as words are traced to their most ancient source. There are traces in the earliest language of an unknown Being to whom prayers were addressed; of a patriarchal form of government; of the recognition of "father" as protector, feeder, ruler; of a civilised naming and tethering of cattle; and no traces of brutality, savagery, communal marriage, cannibalism, or barbarism.

Equally valuable is the evidence, so far as it can be carried back, of the birth-place of man. A modern school of ethnologists have sought to prove that the furthest stretch of investigation into the backward history of Sanskrit, and the languages that have branched off from it, take us to the north of Europe as the place of man's earliest appearance. Prof. Max Müller contends that such a theory is altogether untenable; that jade tools found in the earliest period in Europe were brought from Asia; that the earliest names of animals and trees do not support an original migration from the north of Europe, and that, apart from Biblical teaching, linguistic facts point to Asia as the first home of man. It is very satisfactory that those who want to arrive at conclusions different from Scripture provoke rejoinders whereby they are continually beaten with their own weapons.

A correspondent suggests that a great boon would be conferred upon many a weary clergyman and minister if owners of pleasant country or seaside homes would lend them to such during their own absence for a few weeks in summer. There would be no difficulty in finding willing and grateful recipients of such benevolence.

The friends of Miss Mittendorff will be glad to hear that her health has, in some measure, improved, and she hopes to return to her beloved children at Clayton House, Epsom, early in June. We trust she may be gladdened on her return by knowing that kind friends have liberally remembered the needs of the Home, which at this time, we learn, are greater than usual.

Rev. George Owen, of Pekin, made, at the annual meeting of the London Missionary Society, a most valuable speech on Chinese missions. Ancient race-pride, strong national prejudice, and political suspicion are giving way. Of the 32,000 Chinese now confessing Christ, two-thirds were brought in by the converts themselves. Chinese women, who can seldom come to mission-halls are being powerfully influenced by English and American ladies. Entire families come over, and in Pekin three generations worship side by side. Clearly an era of Christian progress has begun in this mighty empire of heathenism.

We presume Mr. Owen had authority for his assertion when he said that whereas London spends annually seven shillings per head on theatres, the churches of Great Britain give fourpence halfpenny per member to foreign missions. Can it be that any desire, not merely a free salvation through Christ's sufferings, but with this, a cheap profession of his name?

To be convinced of the inspiration of Scripture, it is not necessary so much to discuss theories of plenary, verbal, or partial inspiration, as to become thoroughly acquainted with the Book itself. And in order to this it is essential not merely to know and feed upon special texts, however full of blessing they are; but to know the great outstanding historical and prophetic features of the Book. Its great claim to inspiration is that it is the only record of the pre-historic world, and that it has written beforehand the history of the Jew, the Gentile, and the Church of God.

From this point of view as well as on account of the very valuable information which it has gathered and condensed, we commend to all our readers, and especially the young, Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness's new book, "The Divine Programme of the World's History." (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) It is divided into the Adamic, the Noahic, the Abrahamic, the Davidic, the Danielic, and the Christian Programme. These represent the great outstanding eras and epochs of history, and each contains its own contribution to the great irrefutable scheme of prophecy which has become and is becoming history.

The one question of the day seems to be whether or not the publicans should be compensated in case the new County Boards resolve to cancel their licences. The eagerness with which this question is being canvassed indicates pretty clearly what may be expected when the power is transferred into the hands of the people. The handwriting is already on the wall. The country will await, however, with considerable interest the result of the appeal in the recent Cumberland case. If the late decision is sustained, then it will be established that licences may be withdrawn if the needs of the neighbourhood do not require them. But if the recent decision be not sustained it will still be a matter for consideration, whether the country should burden itself with such an enormous cost on the behalf of the large brewers, who would principally reap the benefit. At the most, a fixedness of tenure for five or ten years would surely be amply enough to satisfy any claim which they might be supposed to possess.

It is at last decided that Rev. Dr. Oswald Dykes should vacate the pulpit of the church at Regent-square, which he has filled so usefully and brilliantly for the last eighteen years. This is in itself a task well worthy to have been the work of a life, and it has been nobly performed. Eternity alone can show the results of preaching like his on the multitudes of young lives which have passed beneath his influence. And yet his appointment to the Barbour chair of Systematic Theology and the Principalship of the Presbyterian College will give him an even wider field of ministry, and will enable him to perform that most essential service to the Church of moulding its ministers at the most formative time of their lives. It is a work that will not reveal its magnitude or importance until those who are now but students have won their spurs in the great world beyond the college walls, which never needed true ministers of Jesus Christ more urgently than to-day.

The disclosures which are being made from week to week as to the Sweating System are very sad, and betray a heartless selfishness which is utterly merciless. And yet, though the wretchedness of the sweater's den seems to have reached its furthest point, there is a continual influx of foreign immigrants and wares which threaten to reduce the paltry pittance still further. What is to be the end of it all, but revolution born of desperation, unless the Christian Church can insist upon the ancient law that men should not look on their own things only, but also on the things of others?

LISTEN!

THE first place has been secured on Tuesday, June 5, for a motion for the total repeal of the Indian Contagious Diseases Acts and of the regulations under the Cantonment Acts. It is most urgently pressed upon all who fear God to take immediate steps to urge upon their representatives in Parliament to be present, and to vote for this imperatively necessary repeal.

The best service can be rendered by personal letters from constituents to their own representatives. Next to that, Memorials addressed to Members of Parliament from religious or other bodies in their own constituencies. No matter whether the representative be Conservative or Liberal, or whether known to be in favour of, or adverse to Repeal, or their views unknown; in any case personally write to them and collectively memorialise them.

A number of questions have been asked in the House of Commons, and are at last answered. The Government have signified their disapproval of some of the more abominable circulars and regulations issued by the military and other authorities in India. But these are only the natural evil out-growths of the system, and so long as the system exists, similar enormities, even if condemned, will and must take the place of those recently disclosed by Mr. Dyer and others. This is illustrated by the fact that the whole of the official reports for 1885 had one all-pervading tone, that of confession of the complete hygienic failure of the system; and that in 1886, the same official reports have another all-pervading tone, resulting in the suggestion of the atrocious remedy, the supply by the authorities of a much greater number and of younger and more attractive women.

Nothing less must be aimed at than the destruction of the system under which such things are possible, viz., the complete and unconditional repeal of the Contagious Diseases Act in India (i.e., Act xiv. of 1868), and also the complete and unconditional condemnation and abandonment of all those regulations which have been made for the same object under the various Cantonment Acts. It is this which ought to be urged on our representatives, so that a pretence may not be offered instead of a real Repeal. No better service can at this crisis be rendered to Christian Missions in India than the total repeal of these anti-Christian enactments.

CHRISTIANS versus GOD.

Our publication of Mr. Dyer's appalling letter, entitled "British Indian Government in Agreement with Hell," has brought us four letters, of which the following is the substance. General —— regards the document of which Mr. Dyer gave a facsimile as a fabrication; and also as equally imaginary two letters quoted by him. General —— adds that no proof could be stronger than an authenticated copy of the documents he considers to be fabrications; and there could be no better justification for our grappling in any form with a heinous sin, bringing shame upon an honourable service, and reproach upon Christians generally.

In reply we have sent the General a copy of a "Circular Memorandum" addressed by "Major-General E. F. Chapman, Quartermaster-General in India, to General Officers commanding Divisions and Districts." A copy of this shocking document may be obtained from the office of The Sentinel, 31, Paternoster-square, by sending a stamped and directed envelope.

Admiral C —— thinks differently from General ——. He raises no question as to Mr. Dyer's reliability, and does not, like the General, appear to think that anything could justify our exposure of these wicked ordinances. He says:—

> "Be good enough to refrain from sending me The Christian newspaper. It may be Christian by name but it cannot be Christian by nature, when I see a heading, 'British-Indian Government in Agreement with Hell.' This will do a great deal of harm, and only alienates those minds who wish well to morality."

Major-General S—— as head of a family protests against such things in a periodical supposed to be for Christian teaching and information, and would really be ashamed of such a production being found in his house, putting into the heads of young people things they never dreamt of.

> "What are we coming to, that all the devil's work should be published in Christian literature? If you wish your paper to have a good circulation amongst Christians may I advise you to keep such things out. I have spoken to a few of my friends, and they agree with me that it is not for the glory of the Master. I have discontinued my copy of the paper. Believe me yours faithfully in the Lord."

Our fourth letter is not from a military or naval officer, but from a civilian, who confesses the pain he feels at the altered character of our paper. We can only say that in this respect, at least, it has never altered. In its very early days, when Midnight Meetings were commenced, and we used to hear heart-breaking stories of girl-life from that saintly woman Elizabeth Bramwell, and others, we let the light in upon it, as we are doing now on the Satanic doings of our Indian military government. During all our literary life we have been subject to furious attacks and mild remonstrances against the impropriety of obeying the first command of God, "Let there be light," and by his help we do not mean to alter the character of our paper now.

We gratefully acknowledge the courteous tone of many such communications, and we give the writers full credit for thinking they are doing God service. But we must tell them, nevertheless, that they and those Christians who think and act with them are responsible in the first degree for the degradation in time and the damnation in eternity of the men and women who are the victims of the State encouragement of vice. They will not enter into conflict with those foul C. D. Acts, and those who are entering in they hinder.

We have entitled one of Mr. Dyer's letters, "Government versus God in India;" we need to frame another indictment under the title "Christians versus God in England." Instead of "British Indian Government—" we shall have to say "English Christianity—in Agreement with Hell."

We should be appalled at the audacity of a Christian who asked, "What are we coming to, that all the devil's work should be published in Holy Scripture?" We are astounded at the short-sightedness that can ask, with Major-General S——, "What are we coming to, that the devil's work should be published in Christian literature?" If we are wrong for exposing and denouncing sin, then Moses and all the Prophets, Paul and all the Evangelists and Apostles were wrong also. And if they were wrong, the Inspiring Holy Spirit was the real offender. Our brethren would be shocked at so blasphemous a conclusion, but it is the natural and inevitable issue of their own line of thought and action. And as they proscribe The Christian on this ground, they are bound in consistency to proscribe the Bible also.

The plea always is that the young are injured by contact with these painful subjects; but He who made the young, the faithful Creator, who is the source of all innocence and purity, commanded his people not only that his words should be upon the parents' heart, but also that they should teach them diligently to their children, and talk of them continually.

This is more literally obeyed in the families of Friends than by any other class or denomination. With what result? That the Quaker women are the most simple-hearted, the most pure-minded, the most modest in manners and appearance, of all the daughters of England; the least frivolous, the most common-sense, the most useful, the most reliable, of any class or denomination in the land. And wherever a mother in any other denomination trains her daughters after the same divine pattern, other things being equal, the results are similar.

We are continually told that Government can never go ahead of public opinion. But in keeping the commandments of God, the public conscience must be formed and educated by Christians, for the Church of the living God is the pillar and ground of the truth. A very fearful responsibility, therefore, is incurred by those who boast of being savourless salt, and who refuse to let their light shine where the darkness is the most profound.

We beg them to reconsider their position, and to judge whether the sorrows and oppressions of other men's daughters should form no part of the education and training of their own.

With great satisfaction and thankfulness we note that The Methodist Times, The Christian Commonwealth, and The Rock, are serving God and man by bearing witness against the immoralities which are undermining society, and crying out, like Sodom, for the judgments of God.

From The Times of Tuesday, the 18th instant, we take the following report of Sir J. Gorst's reply to Mr. Stansfeld on Monday night, in the House of Commons.

> Mr. Stansfeld.—I wish, Sir, to ask the Under Secretary for India whether he is now prepared to make the statement he promised as to the recent correspondence with the Government of India on the subject of the Contagious Diseases Acts.
>
> Sir J. Gorst.—In consequence of the action taken by the Secretary of State upon the questions put to him in another place last year by the Lord Bishop of Lichfield, what is known as the regimental system has been absolutely stopped. The Commander-in-Chief has prohibited women from accompanying regiments on march or to camp, and also from residing in regimental bazaars. The administration of the Contagious Diseases Act in Bombay, Madras, and Bassein, the only places in which it is in force, has been suspended by the Government of India under a power contained in the Act. The Government of India is now engaged in a revision of the regulations made for preventing the spread of venereal disease in cantonments, under Section 27 of Act III. of 1880; and a despatch is going out to India from the Secretary of State in Council, which will prohibit the compulsory examination of women and the making of any regulations which can be justly construed into a legalisation of prostitution.

This is apparently so incorrect and so self-contradictory, that we wait for further information. We must be content with nothing short of the entire and unconditional repeal of the whole system, root and branch.

EVIL LITERATURE.

The discussion on the spread of corrupt literature, which followed the stirring and able speech in which Mr. Samuel Smith last week brought this important subject before Parliament, will do good. The resolution was agreed to, by which the House deplored the rapid spread of demoralising literature in this country, and was of opinion that the law against obscene publications and indecent pictures and prints should be vigorously enforced, and, if necessary, strengthened.

Mr. Mundella suggested that the real antidote was the establishment of free libraries in all our towns. In our judgment a very insufficient remedy, seeing that three-fourths of the books in most such libraries are novels, and these often of a very sensational and "risky" type. Every child who can read is now a possible purchaser of vile prints and pictures, and consequently the operations of the ghouls and harpies who produce them can be spread over an increasing area. "Stolen waters are sweet," and these poor children do not find out till too late the ruinous results of drinking them. There is no one so continually trying to induce young people to read good books as there are tempters to induce them to read bad ones; and one of the first functions of Government is to prevent or punish those who seek to foul the springs of life at their very source.

If Christians will but do their duty, and support those who are bringing these dark deeds to light, it will be a benediction on their children, and their children's children.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—In the May issue of Night and Day, Dr. Barnardo states that he has taken the large and responsible step of associating with himself in the work five lecturers, who will go from town to town, speaking for the masses of neglected children, spreading the tidings of the work, and seeking to revive flagging interest among old friends, and to influence new centres of population. The lecturers will be practically travelling secretaries. Two are to be clergymen, who will respond to the invitations not unfrequently received from the clergy in different parishes and districts throughout England, to provide them with a preacher to advocate the work. Two will be Nonconformist ministers of good standing and repute, who will be free to offer pulpit supply to the various congregations in all denominations where an interest in the work is felt, or where there is an opening for the creating of such an interest. The fifth lecturer will be a layman, a thoroughly good platform speaker, and an earnest and accredited Christian worker. It is hoped he may be able to arrange for large meetings throughout the week in all sorts of places where, perhaps, it might be less convenient for the ministerial secretaries to attend

AMERICAN STUDENTS & MISSIONS.

Last week, our thoroughly "live" friend Mr. L. D. Wishard, of New York, addressed two meetings at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. on the different phases of Christian work among American male students. The statistical figures quoted by Mr. Wishard convey some idea as to the width and importance of the field. There are altogether some 150,000 young men and 100,000 young women students in the States and Canada, scattered over 1200 higher educational institutions. Of these 15,000 are medical students, 3000 students of law, 25,000 in Normal schools preparing to be teachers, 60,000 arts students, 40,000 commercial students, and nearly 10,000 students in scientific subjects. Among these, in affiliation with the Y.M.C.A., a large amount of religious effort is sustained. In America, as well as here, there is the "town and gown" difficulty, as between College students and young men generally, but much has been done to break down the distinction by interchange of meeting and of view. It is good for the cloistered student to mix with the more matter-of-fact business men, and catch some of their business-like methods. College life is comparatively short, and as many of the students ultimately become business men in the large cities, it is desired to interest them beforehand in Y.M.C.A. work, so that they can join the Associations in the towns where they settle. As educated men, they take the lead in social and public affairs, and their influence is helpful when it is ranged on the side of Christian life and work.

During the last eleven years nearly 300 College Y.M.C. Associations have been formed in the States and Canada, and perhaps 50,000 young men have been identified with them. The agencies used are prayer-meetings, Bible-classes, personal effort, evangelistic meetings, missionary meetings, and so forth. The aim is first to get the students into personal relations with Jesus Christ, and then to awaken their interest for the salvation of others. The whole organisation is thus made a great missionary society. Many who had no thought of devoting themselves to foreign mission work become interested in the subject, and are led to consecrate their lives to this service. Some who do not go to the foreign field themselves support those who do go.

Intercollegiate effort is also maintained, so that by frequent contact with each other all are strengthened in points where they would otherwise be weak. Mr. Wishard spoke of the work done through annual conventions with the different States, and made special reference to the Training School, held for the last two years at Mr. Moody's Northfield home. At the summer school of this year it is hoped that some thousand students will attend, and that the tide of missionary zeal will rise higher than ever.

As to the 15,000 medical students, these are scattered over the Republic in small schools. Probably not a fourth of these students make any profession of Christianity. Special emphasis is laid on the importance of medical mission work, and conferences on this subject have been held, which have resulted in the sending of some of the students to the foreign field as medical missionaries. By social gatherings, and in other ways, these students are reached, and interested in Christian work. The social evenings and conferences are universally closed with a season of prayer and consecration, and these are found to be times of great blessing.

Mr. Wishard's interesting statement was followed by an account from Mr. G. B. Studd, of medical mission work in China as witnessed by himself during a recent stay in that country. The medical missionary has an immense advantage over all others, because he has free access to all classes of the people, and the physical healing pre-disposes the patients to listen to the Gospel message. Chinese doctors are very ignorant and unskilful, so that a really qualified foreign doctor is sure to get an audience. The in-patients in the hospitals have the opportunity of hearing the Gospel day by day, while the cure of their bodily ailments is being effected, and thus the good seed is sown. Much good work is also done in connection with the opium refuges. Mr. Studd dwelt on the comparative fewness of medical missionaries in China, and pleaded that many more should go forth to that vast field for Christian service, not only in healing the body, but in leading the people to a saving acquaintance with Jesus Christ.

MESSRS. CROSSLEY AND HUNTER.

Messrs. Crossley and Hunter have laboured most faithfully in the largest Methodist Church here for six and a half weeks, and the results have been most encouraging, for which we thank God. They are specially gifted men, the one just the complement of the other. Mr. Crossley sings the Gospel sweetly, and is a very clear convincing preacher, as well as a splendid worker in the inquiry-room. Mr. Hunter leads the meetings, giving a short, practical and pithy exposition of some striking passage, always very much enjoyed. He gives an exhortation at the close of Mr. Crossley's sermon, inviting the anxious forward either to the front seats or the inquiry-room as the case may be.

The Spirit was powerfully present at the meetings; there were from twenty to forty inquirers every night, besides as many more who stood up for prayer. There never was such a revival in Belleville before. Members of all classes and of every church have been moved and converted, including High Church and Roman Catholic. Now the city pastors and workers of the different churches are hard at work gleaning the field, and caring for the converts. They are much pressed with engagements at present, but look forward to visiting England in about a year, where I am sure they would be warmly welcomed.

Our first party of boys arrived on April 1, and are happily placed already, a second party of 100 is now on the water. We have far more homes waiting for the girls who come in May and June than we can possibly supply.

Robert Wallace.

Marchmont Home, Belleville, Ontario.

WIMBORNE Y.M.C.A.—New premises for this Association were opened on Thursday, May 3. The rooms are handsome and commodious and in every way adapted for the use of members. Canon Bernard, Captain Dawson, of Bournemouth, Capt. Carr S. Glynn, J.P., and others took part in the opening meetings.

EAST LONDON INSTITUTE.—In a circular letter dated Harley House, Bow, E., Mr. and Mrs. Guinness write:—So many missionaries have left us within the past year that we shall have no more ready to start till the end of the present session. But our three colleges are filled with about a hundred young men and women preparing for their life-work among the heathen. All our home mission operations are also in full swing, and we have no funds in hand just now for any department of the work! Moreover, a special outlay has, we are sorry to say, to be met shortly. Dry-rot has so injured some of the main timbers of the College building at Cliff as to endanger the stability of a portion of it, involving repairs which will be expensive. The means are also still required to secure the additional water supply, which will be essential to health and comfort when the hot weather sets in. We have heard from our daughter on her arrival in China. Only three days after landing she started for the interior. Her first prolonged sojourn will be at Yang-Chau, on the Grand Canal, where a number of the new missionaries are studying the language. The latest tidings in our daughter's letter were dated from this great city of 300,000 inhabitants, and are accompanied by expressions of thankful joy at finding herself at last where she has long yearned to be, and of confident hope for future usefulness.

"He that believeth on Me, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. But this spake He of the Spirit which they that believed on Him were to receive; for the Spirit was not yet given, because Jesus was not yet glorified."

O Thou that in the wilderness
The living stream didst pour
From out the bosom of the rock
That men might thirst no more.

Thus may thy Spirit fill our hearts,
That rivers thence may flow,
To bid the thirsty all around
Thy true salvation know.

Jesus has now been glorified,
Redemption's work complete,
The cross endured, the grave o'ercome,
And gained the Victor's seat.

Now, Saviour, from thy glorious throne
The promised Spirit give,
That through believers, filled by Thee,
The world around may live.

Daily be Jesus glorified,
The Church his truth proclaim,
And copying Him in mind and life,
Best magnify his name.

Thus may the Spirit's power descend
In fulness of his grace,
And rivers flow through hearts of saints
To save the human race.

REV. F. B. MEYER AT RAMSGATE.

A four days' mission at Ramsgate has been conducted by Rev. F. B. Meyer. The aim of the services was to raise Christians to a higher spiritual life and experience, and there is manifest evidence that the effort has not been in vain in the Lord. Day by day the gatherings increased, and a quiet, deep, spiritual work went on in the hearts of many, as the missioner continued to reveal the unsatisfactoriness of the average Christian life. Many eager hearts were thus prepared to welcome the remedy, which was shown to be an entire surrender to Christ, and a habitual dependence upon Him as the source and power of Christian living.

A special meeting of ministers was held, twenty-six of whom from the surrounding district responded to the invitation. The gathering was deeply earnest, as an adjourned meeting was held for prayer and consecration. Two stirring meetings for men only were held after the public meetings. Mr. Meyer's manly and Christian "talks" on these occasions cannot fail to be productive of abundant good. We bless God for the ministry of his servant.

MR. DENHAM SMITH is feeling the benefit of the warmer weather, and was enabled to sit up for a short time each day last week. His physicians are, however, still anxious concerning his condition, notwithstanding the decided improvement in some of his symptoms.

HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN.—The eighteenth annual report of the School and Home for Blind Children, Goldsmith-place, Kilburn Priory, N.W., is an interesting record of good work. The Home will accommodate thirty-six children, and in January last the inmates numbered 35—19 girls, and 16 boys. All letters should be addressed to Miss Emma F. Newbery, 127, Portsdown-road, Maida-vale, W.

BILLINGSGATE MARKET.—The usual monthly noonday services of the District Association was held on Tuesday week in the Fish-market. Rev. Archibald G. Brown gave an address on the words, "Lord, remember me when Thou comest into thy kingdom." The preacher earnestly pointed out the conditions of salvation, and his remarks were followed with evident interest by all. The Association removed from their old premises to make way for a new street. They are now appealing for funds to rebuild on a site secured by lease from the City Corporation.

DEMORALISING LITERATURE.

At last the attention of Parliament has been called to the circulation of corrupt literature in the country. It was high time that something should be done.

On Tuesday evening, last week, in the House of Commons, Mr. Samuel Smith moved a resolution in these terms:—"That this House deplores the rapid spread of demoralising literature in this country, and is of opinion that the law against obscene publications and indecent pictures and prints should be vigorously enforced, and, if necessary, strengthened." In the course of a speech treating with the subject at considerable length, Mr. Smith showed that, unhappily, in recent years there has been a great development of this evil, by the sale of translations of a class of French novels, which are commonly described as "realistic," a term which, however, he took to mean "nothing short of sheer beastliness." He mentioned some shocking facts that had come to his knowledge. He had been informed, by a lady who had herself investigated the matter, that it had become the rule with a class of low booksellers in London to provide indecent literature for young girls—to supply them, in private rooms, with indecent prints and literature on the payment of a small sum. In one street in London there were ten shops devoted to this purpose. This question, he said, lay at the root of national life, and he could not conceive of any subject about which they should be anxious to deal more wisely than with this. Having also spoken of the circulation of lewd photographs, and the publication of loathsome divorce-court revelations in newspapers, Mr. Smith maintained that the law as it stands is strong enough if only vigorously enforced. It is, he said, through a false notion of liberty that Lord Campbell's Act has been allowed to fall into disuse.

The Times says that Mr. Smith's appalling statement respecting the manner in which young girls are corrupted produced a "strong impression on the House." Some discussion ensued upon the speech, and on all hands it was allowed that Mr. Smith had done right in calling attention to this important subject. One speaker, Mr. F. Powell, took occasion, however, to enter a protest against "the action of those well-meaning people who, in their endeavours to improve the condition of the women of India, thought it right to circulate in English homes and among English girls a class of literature that was calculated to do permanent harm." The spirit of this deliverance was emphatically repudiated by other members of the House, one of whom was Mr. H. Wilson, who pertinently said that "the only way to stop the circulation of such literature was to put a stop to the hideous system which made it necessary."

The Home Secretary, Mr. H. Matthews, expressed himself in terms showing sympathy with Mr. Smith. He thought the law as it stands to be a tolerably effective weapon with which to meet the case. As to the manner in which young girls were being corrupted, he said that such acts are within the criminal law, and he would certainly, on reasonably good evidence, direct proceedings, if any such facts were brought to his knowledge. So far, moreover, as he could influence the Public Prosecutor, he would certainly urge prosecutions in any cases in which it did not appear that more harm than good would result. He had in his official capacity to consider the case not only of obscene but of blasphemous literature. But on inquiry he found that the offending publications were so contemptible and obscure that much more harm than good would be done by dragging them into the light of day. He was sure, however, that those who had honest convictions on the subject would not shrink from the slight personal inconvenience of putting the law in motion in any case of real public mischief.

The motion was agreed to. On the question of remedying the evil, some pertinent remarks were made by Mr. Mundella, who maintained that the real antidote is the establishment of free libraries and the making of pure and elevating literature more accessible to the young.

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

IMPORTANT DISCUSSIONS.

At the closing session of the Congregational Union last week, there were important discussions on church life. Rev. Colmer B. Symes, in a paper on the question, "Is there danger of the churches being regarded as ends, instead of being used as means to an end?" pointed out that with some persons entrance upon church fellowship seems to mean the same as becoming a Christian. As a fact, "joining the church" should be an avowal that regeneration has already taken place. There may be much activity without spiritual energy. The enlargement of a sanctuary may only mean material bricks and mortar with gold and silver to pay for them. A church that has a name to live and is spiritually dead shows no spiritual life by building galleries, or even by erecting an organ. It only means that the corpse must have a bigger coffin, and the dirge must be melodious. It is too common for those who have entered upon church fellowship to rest satisfied, although they ought to consider it incumbent upon them to show zeal for mutual edification. I believe, said Mr. Symes, that we shall never be what churches should be, until the conviction is supreme, "We must help each other," and not as now, "The one man must help us all."

Rev. F. Hastings, in the course of the discussion, asked: "When do church members get an opportunity to build up one another? Do not we, as ministers, preach twice every Sunday, and once during the week? But do we give the people a single opportunity of saying a word. I think it would be a great advantage to give the people an opportunity of speaking sometimes on what we have said." Rev. Newman Hall remarked that some church members are instructed in Christian truth and zealous withal; others are neither well informed as to doctrine nor fully consecrated as to life. Dr. Dale advocated frequent church meetings. The week evening service, he said, would be far more wisely and effectively used if it were restricted to church members, and if there were far more frequent meetings of the church for free conference on great questions relating to Christian life, Christian thought, and Christian duty. Dr. Dale added that some meetings of this kind in connection with his church had proved of great spiritual value, and through them he had been able to understand the highest needs of his people much better than would otherwise have been possible.

Rev. E. White called attention to the "house-to-house" meetings of the early Church. He said: We have not nearly enough domestic gatherings. It is from house to house that edification goes forward best, and if the richer, well-to-do members of communities would, at periodical intervals, if only once a month, have a family meeting and invite the young people recently admitted to the church and others to talk, not of the abstractions, but of some passage of the Holy Scriptures, they would find that edification would advance. Mr. White told of a case in which this method of edification had been followed.

Rev. Dr. Clifford (who was present as a visitor), in the course of a few friendly remarks, said: I believe if it were possible for us to generate a greater amount of spiritual heat in the church, our Sabbath services would have a great deal more attractiveness in them. You know that among the people in Wales it is customary to have week by week a meeting like that which Dr. Dale has described, and I can testify from the statements of witnesses in whom I have the utmost confidence, that the Welsh churches owe a great deal of their vitality and success to these weekly meetings.

Rev. R. Baldwin Brindley read a paper, dealing with the ministry and its results. Having criticised the modern method of publishing spiritual statistics, and noticed the multiplication of agencies in the church life of to-day, he said he feared that it was only too true that the spiritual tone of the churches is not healthy. Piety is low; worldliness is rampant; conversions are few. The churches are baptized into the spirit of Martha; they are cumbered with much serving; they want more of the Mary spirit of devotion, more prayerful communion, more personal aspirations after true saintliness of character and mind.

Rev. S. Pearson was afraid sometimes that ministers are satisfied with preaching. We think then that our duty is done, and we do not get into that close personal contact with souls with whom we have been speaking, to enable us to say whether the truth has told or not. I believe that what we all want, and what the wise amongst us specially want, is that we shall be fools for the sake of Christ, and for the sake of souls, and preach such sermons as will not tickle the fancy and instruct the intellects of the well-advanced Christian people, but will bring home to the young, the halting, and the hesitating, that great and solemn duty which lies on every man to surrender himself fully to the Lord Jesus Christ.

A suggestive paper was read by Rev. Alex. Wilson on the hindrances to spiritual life that come from defective Christian fellowship. Among the causes of this referred to by Mr. Wilson were exaggerated individualism, social distinctions, the caste of culture, and the spirit of faction. As practical remedies, the speaker suggested the better training of young church members, more extended scope for personal service, the development of corporate church life, and the encouragement of religious meditation as a means for the increase of individual piety.

Another paper on "Methods of Church Ministration" was read by Rev. Alfred Morris. Reviewing the changed conditions of society from the growth of intelligence and a quickened interest in social questions, he urged that there should be higher ideals as to the mission of the Church of Christ in its duty to meet the varied needs of the time, and make social movements subserve to the highest interests of the people.

The Armada, and Protestant Accession.

Sir,—At a full meeting, at the National Club, of the general council appointed to celebrate this year the centennial anniversaries of the above-named events, it was resolved that a circular be issued stating that, as this movement had been inaugurated in commemoration of the establishment of the Protestant Constitution (whereby alone the liberties of the nation were secured) and in acknowledgment of the providential deliverances of this country from despotic rule and from Romish superstition, this council is acting altogether independent of the Plymouth committee, which, under the presidency of the Duke of Norfolk, recently assembled at the Mansion House—a committee which has for its avowed object merely the carrying out of an historical celebration of the defeat of the Spanish Armada, and under the conditions imposed by the Duke of Norfolk, "that politics and religion are to be ignored, and that neither the glorification of Queen Elizabeth nor anything tending to the triumph of Protestanism are to be sought in the celebration"—conditions which, in the opinion of this council, would stultify the movement, and reduce to the position of meaningless celebrations the numerous meetings that have been held, and are yet to be held, throughout the country in memory of the mercies vouchsafed by Almighty God to this nation.—I am, &c.,

A. H. Guinness, Hon. Sec.

ARE WE IMPROVING?

The Northern Weekly Leader has sent to about four hundred ministers the three following questions:—Whether people generally are improving morally and spiritually? What are the chief influences that make for degradation? and Whether the influence of the secular daily and weekly press is healthy on the whole? A large number have returned answers, of which two instalments have been published. Twenty-five out of thirty-two declare (some more emphatically than others) that the people are growing better. Three think they are growing worse. One or two distinguish between moral and religious improvement; and one—the Rev. John F. Barnard, of Newcastle—is of opinion that there has been an advance in morals, but a decadence in religion, and that this decadence will issue in a serious moral decline. Others think they see moral and religious improvement; while another view is that, while there is more religious observance, there is more refined scepticism. One cause of the variation is that no standard of comparison is given. Some of the writers compare this period with the past centuries; others evidently confine their field of view within their own experience, which is greater or less, according to their age.

In answer to the second question, the chief causes of degradation are said to be drink, gambling, licentiousness; sensational fiction, especially French; dress; unhealthy amusements; early and improvident marriage; excessive competition; grinding poverty.

In reply to the third question, the influence of the secular press is generally said to be healthy, in a few cases without qualification; but in the great majority of the answers this favourable opinion is seriously qualified by censure of the space devoted to gambling and sporting news, criminal intelligence, and unhealthy sensationalism.

Of London ministers Dr. Thain Davidson, Dr. Donald Fraser, Revs. G. W. McCree and H. R. Haweis, think people are growing better; Mr. Archibald Brown thinks they are worse. Mr. Brown and Mr. McCree both particularise sensational religious services as causes of evil. Dr. Thain Davidson thinks the secular press has, on the whole, a healthy influence; but that "the so-called religious press, with a few rare exceptions, is doing more harm than all the infidel publications combined."

The editor of the newspaper in question, in remarking upon these opinions, defines his own view of the duty of a journalist, and distinguishes between the two functions of the press—the historical function and the teaching function. He says that few complain of any evil arising from the direct teaching of the newspapers; the indictment is against what it records. He believes that the newspaper should be a faithful, impartial, ruthless historian, day by day, of the people among whom it circulates. But he seriously modifies this by saying that "there is no fact more conclusively established in newspaper experience than that the general public resent their newspaper being devoted to religious and ecclesiastical news. What, then, is the use of putting it there? If nobody will read it, what good can be accomplished?" But what then becomes of the "faithful, impartial, ruthless historian"? And if the people will have sporting, gambling, and divorce, and will not have religious intelligence; if the newspaper that is "good" in the sense of suppressing demoralising intelligence "dies young," what becomes of the consensus of opinion that the people are, as some say, gradually, slowly, on the whole, improving; or, as others affirm, generally, decidedly, vastly improved?

THE ETON MISSION.—Old Etonians held a meeting, in support of the Eton Mission, a few days ago at Grosvenor House, by permission of the Duke of Westminster, when it was decided to replace the temporary church at Hackney Wick by a permanent building, to accommodate from eight hundred to a thousand people.

Letters to the Editor.

DRINK IN PAYMENT OF WAGES.

Dear Sir,—As hon. sec. of the Agricultural Department of the C.E.T.S., I am anxious that the valuable provisions of the Truck Amendment Act should be made known in the rural districts.

A four-paged leaflet can be had from the Secretary, 9, Bridge-street, Westminster, at 2s. per 100 (at half price if 1000 copies are taken), containing information on the subject, and if sown broadcast throughout the country without delay, much good might result, both to farmers and their men. The leaflet might be distributed by willing hands at very little cost. Henry Joy, D.D.

Gretford Rectory, Stamford.

A CONTRADICTION.

Sir,—You quote in your issue of the 11th instant, from Light of the World, the oft-repeated and often-contradicted statement, that in the Metropolis "there are 40,000 poor fallen women who perambulate the streets day and night." No census has ever taken place, and I trust none ever will. To enumerate will be the first step to issue licences, as in Europe and in India. The only attempt of the police in London to form an estimate, placed the number at a fifth of that quoted in your columns. This is lamentable enough, but it was the desire of the police authorities at that time not to understate the number.

Yours, &c., B. S.

MISSIONS IN INDIA.

Sir,—Mr. Caine's statistics concerning India as well as Singapore must be taken cum grano salis. It is an error to imagine that the bishops, priests, and schools are all supported out of the sum of £36,000. Roman Catholicism in India, and especially in South India, is wealthy, and possesses investments which are almost enough to render it independent of European aid.

It ought to be stated that unmarried Christian workers can live on £40 per annum in India, and find magnificent fields for mission work. How I wish that some ladies and gentlemen were moved to give even a few years of their life to missionary work in our grand Indian field, and be supported either by themselves or friends. They would never regret it. If readers meditating such a step desire information, any that I can give to them is at their service. India ought to have a large agency of this kind. G. Mackenzie Cobban,

Wesleyan Missionary (late of Hyderabad).

THE SALVATION ARMY AND BAPTISM

Dear Sir,—In your issue of May 4, there is a letter from one signing himself "An Old General Officer" respecting the S.A. and baptism. I am in a position to state that what he infers, viz., that the S.A. does not baptize its converts, is correct; nor does it encourage them to obtain baptism at the hands of any missionary.

Having been a missionary in India for eighteen years, I maintain that the error is a most fatal one. Baptism is a distinct command of our Lord and Master, and we have no right to set it aside; but, apart from this, the public profession of faith in Christ is not in any way an equivalent to it, and, as your correspondent justly remarks, it is absolutely necessary to test the profession of Christianity by requiring baptism.

A Hindoo, as such, may believe anything, and may openly profess any doctrine he pleases; he may acknowledge new gods, or no God; he may abuse all the gods in the Pantheon and still be a good Hindoo, and need fear no persecution as long as he does not break his caste. Without baptism, therefore, there is no reproach of the Cross for him in professing faith in Jesus; but let him be baptized, and he at once becomes an "out-caste" and liable to persecution, even to the death. Mohammedans have less freedom; but, still in India, they can profess a good deal, if only they abstain from baptism.

Any missionary in India who preached that baptism was unnecessary would soon be counting his "converts" by hundreds, but the majority of such "converts" would be persons who, having experienced no change of heart, could not be ready to bear or to do anything for Christ.

There are numbers of intelligent and educated Hindoos who have lost all faith in their own religion and are intellectually convinced of the truth of Christianity; such willingly express their convictions publicly on any and every occasion, but they will not be baptized.—Yours faithfully,

A Zenana Missionary.

NOTES FROM THE NORTH.

RETAINING SUNDAY-SCHOOL SCHOLARS.

A Conference of United Presbyterian elders took place in Edinburgh on Thursday morning, at which the subject was discussed of "How to Retain our Young Men and Women." Mr. R. Dunn said he believed Saturday sports were affecting the attendance at churches, and it would be well for them to counsel their young men and women not to engage in any amusements on which they could not ask God's blessing. Mr. J. H. Waterston asserted that the Church must come forward on evangelistic lines, if it would keep a hold of the young people.

PRESENTATION TO DR. SOMERVILLE.

At the Committee Meeting of the Scottish National Bible Society in Glasgow last week a Bible was presented to Dr. Somerville in recognition of his invaluable services to the cause of Bible circulation throughout the world. In his acknowledgment of the gift Dr. Somerville alluded to his long connection with the Bible Society, and remarked that his experience in going over the world convinced him that the services of the Society were more necessary than ever for the well-being of mankind.

THE U.P. SPANISH MISSION.

At the United Presbyterian Synod meeting on Wednesday the question of withdrawing from the mission in Spain came up for consideration. The foreign secretary, Rev. James Buchanan, submitted a special report from the Board asking the Synod to empower them to discontinue the Spanish Mission, and to take steps to form, along with the other Protestant agencies in Spain, a native Spanish Protestant Church. Rev. A. Campbell, in moving a resolution disapproving of this step, said he believed that God would punish them if they withdrew from this field of labour, for the persecuting character of the Church of Rome was well known. Mr. Campbell's motion was lost by 306 votes to 125.

ZENANA WORK.

The annual meeting of the United Presbyterian Zenana Mission was held in Edinburgh on Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Mackenzie spoke on missionary effort in China, and pointed out with satisfaction that while some years ago the Chinese were unwilling to allow their girls to be educated, now in some places as much as three dollars to ten dollars were paid every year by parents towards the maintenance of girls in connection with the mission station. Rev. John Traill, of India, in referring to zenana work, stated that in Bengal only one woman out of 566 could read, and none of them are educated in the true sense of the word. They are the great teachers of idolatry, and have the power to fill the native mind with all its superstitions and forms.

LOCAL OPTION IN SCOTLAND.

An interesting example of the adoption of the principle of Local Option has occurred in the parish of Balmaghie, Kirkcudbrightshire. For some years there has only been one licensed house in the parish, which has a population of about 900. This hotel, strange to say, is the property of the School Board, and at the election of new members recently the candidates who were in favour of tranforming it into a temperance hotel were placed at the top of the poll. As soon as this was known an application was made by other persons for a licence for other premises in the same village, but that application has been rejected by the licensing court. Thus the parish of Balmaghie, which twenty years ago contained about a dozen public-houses, is now happily without one such house.

WOOD GREEN, N.—In this rapidly increasing suburb a useful work is carried on, in the neighbourhood of Acacia-road, by the "Welcome Mission," started some couple of years ago by a few working-men and others. At the annual meeting held in the Gospel Hall, Southgate-road, on Monday evening, an encouraging report of the past year's work was presented. Over 250 indoor and twenty outdoor services were held; a good number of Gospel tracts were distributed, and the seed sown has borne fruit. The work is entirely unsectarian, the services from time to time being conducted by members of the Church of England, Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregational, and Methodist churches. Sympathetic addresses were given by Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P., who presided; Messrs. A. Bagley, W. Cozens, and A. Ashmead. The secretary is Mr. G. Haycock.

THE LATE ABRAHAM LAMB.

AN APPEAL.

◆◆◆

ABRAHAM LAMB finished his course in January last, at Melton Mowbray, Leicestershire. He was an earnest and honoured servant of Christ, and many have mourned his loss.

During a long period of years he toiled as a Christian Evangelist in various parts of the country—in the slums of London, at Portsmouth, Hammersmith, Stockton-on-Tees, and at Leicester. His ministry was blessed to very many, and he rejoiced in seeing such fruit of his loving labours.

To make provision for those depending upon him was never within Mr. Lamb's power as an evangelist. So when he died, he left a widow and daughter, as well as an aged mother, all but destitute. An endeavour is now being made to provide in some measure for the needs of these. Friends in Leicestershire and a few others have subscribed, but the required sum has not yet been raised.

It is felt that many Christian workers who knew Mr. Lamb will be glad to do something for his family, and also that some who owe their introduction to the spiritual life to the message as Mr. Lamb preached it, will be pleased to contribute something towards the comfort of those whom he loved, but could not provide for. Others again may be disposed to help by constraint of the love of Christ, and a desire to act on the apostolic injunction as to "distributing to the necessity of saints."

Donations, large and small, will be thankfully received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, Office of The Christian, on behalf of the Committee which has charge of the matter.

his telling Treatise by the veteran Protestant writer, Dr. Wylie, could not have appeared more opportunely than in the present year (1888)—when we are about to commemorate the TER-CENTENARY, or the three-hundredth Anniversary, of the defeat of the attempted Invasion of our country by the Spanish Armada; and the BI-CENTENARY, or two-hundredth Anniversary, of the Accession in 1688 of the Protestant dynasty to the throne of the United Kingdom.

"It would be difficult to discover a book of more t rest, or one so completely filled with valuable istorical data. Every line of the 108 pages is full f carefully sought out evidence upon the subject which it is intended to be a trustworthy guide. he simple facts and data will certainly provoke hought and research upon a question that is rowing each day into increased importance."
Isle of Wight Advertiser.

"As may be supposed, the publication is intended hiefly to draw attention to the fact that the throne as held on condition that the sovereign is of rotestant persuasion, and also to the necessity, or the welfare of the country, of the public eeing that those conditions which were enforced y our forefathers are kept up in their integrity."
Brighton Times.

"We don't know anything better fitted to promote this much needed enlightenment of the public mind regarding Popery than just the broadcast circulation of the admirable little three-penny book before us, the abridged edition of Dr. Wylie's noble volume, 'Which Sovereign,' &c. We are perfectly certain that the perusal of even this abridgment would open the eyes of very many to a state of matters of which at present they have no idea."—Perthshire Courier.

The volume is entitled, 'James Scott, a Labourer for God,' and is from the loving pen of Dr. Andrew Bonar. Mr. Scott was converted through the instrumentality of a devoted 'elder,' Mr. John Muir, of Glasgow, who visited him as a 'seat-holder,' and unfolded to him the way of life. Who may be personally or relatively INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Mr. H. S., a YOUNG MAN at MANCHESTER.

This patient asks that his name may not be published for special reasons, but I will refer anyone to him privately.

He first wrote me in August last. His illness commenced with a cold, taken from bathing twelve months before this. His symptoms had become more severe. There was violent cough, with much expectoration of purulent character, pains in the chest and side, flushings, oppressed breathing; the strength had begun to fail, flesh wasted in legs, arms, and face. In this sad plight he commenced with my advice and medicine.

In less than a month there was decided improvement. Unfortunately circumstances prevented his continuing regularly. When I knew this I met the case in such a way as to enable him to persevere, and before December he was well.

Writing on December 10th, he says: "I wish to add my testimony to the many you have received. As this cure has been effected in so short a time, I hope you will publish it for the benefit of others, though (for certain reasons) please not print my name. I thank God that I saw the notice of your success in the papers. From the first week that I commenced I gained flesh, and continue to do so to the present. I thank you for all your kindness. I hope that your time on earth may be long, and that God may prosper you still more in your good work."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

CHRISTIANITY AND POVERTY.

The problem of poverty is apparently an insoluble one, though we have now arrived at a late stage in the history of the Christian era, which is supposed to be the era of true brotherhood and the reign of the royal law of love. The Christian Socialist Society carries within its name its special purpose, but its aims may be described as follow in the words of its promoters :—

> The union of men in a real, universal brotherhood, free from all artificial distinctions founded merely upon class.
> Education, liberal, free, compulsory, industrial, for all.
>
> Substitution of a system of production for use for the present system of production for profit.
>
> The organisation of society on a basis of industry and moral worth, rather than of wealth, privilege, and monopoly as at present; industry being understood to comprise both mental and manual work.
>
> Public control of land, capital, and all means of production, distribution, and exchange, involving the abolition of all interest.
>
> The ennobling of domestic, public, and national life; the development of free and independent nationalities; the union of labour; and the promotion of peace and goodwill all over the world.

A meeting called by the Society was held in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on Monday evening, to consider the question, "Does Christianity involve the abolition of poverty?" The chairman of the meeting, Rev. T. S. Sherlock, of Smethwick, was strongly of opinion that it does. He cited numerous examples of social arrangement in the history of the world in which the problem of poverty had been virtually solved. Christianity has not yet been allowed to work out its principles to their ultimate extent.

The discussion proper was opened in an earnest speech, by Rev. G. Waller, who said that the principles of Christ have not had a fair chance in the world; if he thought they had, and had failed, he should conclude that Christianity was played out. Christianity does not involve the equality of man—an impossible and undesirable thing—but it does involve unity of feeling and desire in the race. Such a thing ought not to be impossible in a Christian society. Those who aim at a Christian brotherhood where the wealthy shall only consider himself a steward, and not an absolute possessor, are met with objections on the one hand from the political economist, who complacently leaves the question to the action of assumed law, and on the other from the religious professor, who says the poor will always be with us, and there is nothing to be done. Both are wrong. While we preach contentment to the poor, we cannot forget that many of their complaints are just, and we must press it on the consciences of the rich that, if they are Christians, they are not to live to themselves; but, like their Master, for the sake of others. Rev. C. E. Escreet said that the stern doctrine of the Apostle must ever be true, "He that will not work, neither shall he eat." Poverty must follow idleness, lust, or avarice. But, assuming that there is a desire for honest labour, the circumstances ought to be moulded to make it possible and remunerative. The speaker paid a high tribute of admiration to the labours of the late Lord Shaftesbury in the cause of the poor, and urged that law should go to protect the weak from the oppression and the grasping avarice of the strong. Rev. F. M. Garrett said that as Christianity has come into the world as a scheme of salvation from evil, it must involve the abolition of the evils of poverty. He, for one, could not agree to defer the working of that scheme of salvation to a future world; he generally found that those who urge "other-worldliness" are those who are very comfortable in this life. Speaking from his experience as a country clergyman, he said that those living in London can hardly have any idea of the squalid misery in which many of our cottagers are permitted to live. Rev. S. D. Headlam pointed out that no one could be more indignant than Christ was with those who for a pretence made long prayers, while they devoured widows' houses. He therefore thought we should encourage a divine discontent among the poor. He believed that Jesus Christ was exactly the sort of man who would be a Church Socialist to-day. It is abundantly plain that Christ came to form a kingdom of heaven on earth; He was a great secular worker, and did miracles to preserve in life and health those who were afflicted. The Christian has been left on earth to carry out the establishment of that kingdom. Paul and James spoke strongly in defending the claim of the labourer primarily to eat of the fruits of his labours. By all means let us conserve the Eighth Commandment, but let it be applied all round, and let not the rich filch away from the poor that which belongs to them. As to the land, God has created it for his creatures, and He must be jealous of the monopolising of his great gift for the benefit of a few. He for one would not yield to any in seeking to care for the spiritual condition of the people, but their sad and unhappy material conditions are too often the greatest barrier to that spiritual prosperity and welfare.

Mr. Costelloe recalled a thesis he met with in his boyhood, to the effect that whatever a man has that is of superfluity, belongs of right to those who are in want. That proposition is a simple but a far-reaching, and, from the Christian point of view, incontrovertible one. He believed that these problems could only be solved on the basis of Christianity, because, if we abjure our duty to God and to our neighbour, we are landed in a selfish individualism which will only issue in a war of all against all others, that can never come to an end. At the bottom of the whole difficulty is the pernicious and un-Christian idea that a man may do what he likes with his own. If we could introduce the true sense of stewardship into our legislation and our society, all luxury, properly so called, would disappear. If to some men ampler conditions of life above others are given, it is that they may be the better fitted to use them, and for that reason only. What noble opportunities there are for this kind of service on the part of our wealthy people in the rural districts; they might create little Utopias in every English village. The massing of the poor in large cities is a great evil, and we ought to try as far as possible to remove people to happier, healthier, and more ennobling conditions.

Mr. Campbell, as representing the Christian Socialist Society, said that if we are to abolish poverty, we must go to the root of the matter, and discover the causes of it. He contended that these causes lie in material considerations, and the cure will necessitate the relinquishment of privileges that involve wrong or disability for great masses of the people. You may renew a man's nature, but if you do not alter his conditions for the better, you leave him to a great extent helpless. Even a godly woman earning 3s. 6d. a week at the forge in the Midlands can only live a joyless life. Miss Helen Taylor said the teaching of Christ, if listened to and acted out, must do away with poverty. After a warm tribute to the virtues of the poor generally as compared with the wealthier classes, she said there was still much vice among the poor, because there is yet an aristocracy among them—the fathers of the families will spend vast sums on tobacco and drink, while their children are starving. Justice involves equality of chance, and of treatment; if some have more talent than others, let them use it to help those less favoured. Mr. W. Saunders, in a very thorough-going little speech, inveighed on the iniquity of the over payment of favoured Government officials to the detriment of those who are far more deserving. Mr. Durrant eloquently contended that it would only be through suffering and sacrifice that the great end would be attained.

The only resolution submitted to the meeting was the following, which was carried without any dissentient voice :—

> That Christians should aim at nothing short of the ultimate abolition of poverty, and that, if Christianity were understood and carried out in the fulness of its essential spirit, the present sad extremes of conditions would be speedily brought to an end.

[We have reported this meeting at some length, not as endorsing all the utterances, but as affording the opportunity to our readers of knowing the sentiments which are working for as well as against Christianity as it now exists.]

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

ANNUAL BREAKFAST.

A very large and influential company gathered in Cannon-street Hotel, on Tuesday morning, for breakfast, at the invitation of this Society, and to hear reports from different parts of the world as to the work in which it takes an active part. After breakfast, Sir John Kennaway, Bart., M.P., who presided, spoke cordially of the operations of the Society in helping on missionary effort throughout the world. In furnishing some details of the spread of Christian literature in Italy, Signor Turino referred to a rumoured rapprochement between the King of Italy and the Papal See. He was apprehensive that if such a friendly compact took place it would not be favourable to the cause of religious freedom in the Peninsula.

Rev. Edward S. Summers, from Serampore, India, told how the tracts published there from time to time, dealing with important passing events, had done much in the dissemination of Gospel truth. He highly commended the educational system encouraged by the Government in India, as paving the way for the preaching of the Gospel, and helping those who relinquish the idolatrous systems of the country.

Rev. E. S. Schneider, from Berlin, bore warm testimony to the help received through the publications of the Society in Germany and Switzerland. During the Franco-German war, thel iterature provided was found to be of great service among the soldiers. In numberless ways the religious life of the people has been stimulated, and spiritual revival brought about through this agency. Infidelity, Socialistic theories, and Sabbath-breaking have been combated with considerable success.

Rev. Dr. Elliot, medical missionary, Gaza, said there were great hindrances in Christian work in Syria, because of the political stagnation and the lack of religious freedom. The Government are really hostile to Protestant missions. It is also beyond doubt that the working of the Eastern systems of Christianity is not such as to attract the people to the standard of Christ. Still there are many encouragements. The work of the American press at Beyrout, which is aided by the Tract Society, is a very valuable one, especially in a land where Christian literature is almost unknown.

Rev. John Jameson, of Madrid, said the tracts of the Society distributed through the country are blessed in opening the hearts of the people and enlightening their minds as to the truths of the reformed faith. The little printed messenger is often the valued forerunner of the personal messenger. The work in Spain is slow, but the tide is rising, and ere long may be expected to overspread the land. In educational work, also, the literature is of great importance. Spanish is the prevailing language of South America, and there much good is done through Christian tracts. There are difficulties in Spain at present from the judicial authorities, but we hope that is only a passing cloud.

Rev. Geo. Owen, of Pekin, said it is nothing new to the Chinaman when he sees tract distribution in his land, as they have been long accustomed to the circulation of literature. Many of the writings of the early Romish missionaries, expounding the Christian faith, are still found helpful. There is now an ample stock of religious books and tracts to select from. Having in view the vastness of the field, these silent, unobtrusive bearers of the truth are doing splendid service in remote places; and in deepening impressions made by personal testimony. There are now over 32,000

Christian converts, and we may say that, in the process of turning of these to Christ, the tract societies have borne a large share. Much is also done through good expository and spiritual works in fostering the Christian life of the converts. China has made wonderful strides during recent years, and is still moving on in opening up the heart of the country to the influences of the West; it is for us to take advantage of the opportunity.

Mr. John Sutcliffe, from Halifax, Nova Scotia, spoke briefly of the interesting work sustained there in connection with book depôts and missionary colportage. The literature published by the Society is supplied on very liberal terms, and forms the bulk of the material used by the workers in Nova Scotia. The work is very wide in its scope, embracing a large district of country, and varied classes of people. The work of colportage in Canada is very economically done, as the books are for the most part sold. There are 3000 miles of coast line of Labrador and Newfoundland, and a poor fishing population. The absence of ministerial agency and other personal effort is largely made up by the dissemination of those Christian and healthful publications.

Such a body of unanimous testimony as the meeting afforded must be very encouraging to the Society and its many supporters.

OBITUARY.

MR. H. HILTON, EVANGELIST.

Mr. Harry Hilton, of the Evangelisation Society, entered into rest a few days ago. He was a faithful ambassador of Christ, and wherever he was known he was respected. His tent services in various parts were greatly blessed, and many to-day rejoice in a peace which they found through his preaching Death ensued from a fortnight's illness, at a time when it was fondly hoped that he was recovering his wasted health.

MRS. C. H. SPURGEON, being utterly prostrate from severe illness, is unable to reply to letters, and will be glad if none are sent to her till further notice. Those who have applied for books must kindly wait. Prayer is asked for her speedy recovery.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a tent mission, to be held in Tamworth, commencing June 3, conducted by Mr. William Smith, of the Evangelisation Society.——For blessing on open-air preaching during the ensuing season, in the neighbourhood of Notting Hill.——For blessing on Christian work in Hawick, N.B.

HOME OF REST, WALTON-ON-NAZE.—During last year two hundred women, besides children, were received into this Home for change of air; there were also many free cases, respectable people requiring rest, but unable to secure it except through this charity. With very few exceptions, all returned home benefited by the bracing sea air and comfortable life and surroundings. Copies of the report and further information may be had on application to Mrs. R. H. Moore, 102, Regent's Park-road, N.W.

THE LATE MR. F. W. CHESSON.—A committee is being formed for the purpose of raising a considerable fund as a memorial of the great and disinterested public services of the late F. W. Chesson, and it is earnestly hoped that everyone who was acquainted with the character and value of these services will co-operate in making the fund as large as possible. Much of Mr. Chesson's philanthropic work, extending through every quarter of the globe, was carried on without any remuneration; and it seems desirable that the sum to be raised shall be applied for the benefit of his widow and family.

THE STEPNEY CRECHE.—The crowded state of Mrs. Hilton's Homes in Stepney Causeway has made it necessary, for the health and proper education of the children, to re-open the country branch at Feltham, which had to be closed for want of funds. Mrs. Hilton has taken this step in faith, believing that He who has laid the necessity upon her will move the hearts of friends to send the requisite help. We sincerely trust that her faith and her Christ-like care of the little ones will be rewarded by a generous response from our readers. The Crèche and Home, as our friends know, are at 12, Stepney Causeway, E.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. John McAuliffe has concluded a special mission at Wonersh, near Guildford, which has resulted in much blessing.

The Mendip Villages.—A good work is being accomplished in these Somersetshire villages. At Cheddar, Churchill, and Shipham, under the evangelistic labours of Mr. Woodhouse, many have professed conversion, and numbers have taken the pledge. Mr. Woodhouse is highly spoken of as a capable and earnest worker. His address is Shipham, near Bristol.

Mangotsfield, Bristol.—Mr. G. C. Norrish, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a fortnight's services in this neighbourhood, which has been attended with gratifying results. The services were largely attended by members of the local Nonconformist bodies, as well as by members of the Established Church. The farewell meeting was crowded, and there are evident signs of much blessing having resulted from the labours of Mr. Norrish.

Stornoway, N.B.—There has been started here lately a "Bag Mission" to supply the vessels and fishing boats in the harbour with bags of tracts, and Gospel books and periodicals. There is also an interesting work carried on amongst the women employed about the herring industry. The workers in this Mission are much in need of tracts, booklets, &c., for distribution. Any parcel of such will be gladly received by Mrs. Martin, Free English Manse, Stornoway.

Ventnor, Isle of Wight.—The new Albert Hall at Ventnor was opened as a branch of the "Cow Cross Mission" for special Sunday evening services on Sunday, May 6. Through the liberality of a visitor the hall has been secured for at least a twelvemonth to be supplied by working-men evangelists. Bible-readings are held by Mr. W. Catlin, at Pelham Villa, Tulse Hill, Ventnor, every Wednesday evening at 7 p.m. Tent services are being arranged for little villages in the interior of the Island.

Weston-super-Mare.—A week's Gospel mission has been held in the Assembly Rooms here, by Mr. W. R. Lane, and has been blessed in bringing many from darkness into light. Day by day, and especially towards the close, many letters were received, bearing testimony from those attending the meetings as to the great blessing received. This is the second or third time Mr. Lane has visited Weston, and each time he leaves behind him an increasing number of friends, who thank God for sending him in their midst.

Mr. Spencer Walton, who has been doing excellent work as an evangelist during the last few years in England, is contemplating a brief pioneer visit in Cape Colony, with a view of opening it up to future evangelistic work, as God may lead. We know the pressing claims of the colony, and are sure that a wide field awaits all such workers, and especially one who has succeeded in uniting Christian people on a common platform, and of reaching the unsaved. He purposes sailing in the Athenian, June 14, and we commend him to the prayers of God's people in England, and trust that he may receive a warm welcome from all denominations in the colony.

Romford.—Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has concluded a fortnight's mission to the young at Salem Baptist Chapel, Romford. From the first a real and hearty interest was taken in the meetings, which deepened as the days went on. Night after night the chapel was filled with youthful listeners, and Mr. Sayer's earnest and persuasive appeals went home to many hearts with telling effect. An inquiry meeting was held at the close of each service, and in this way nearly 150 young people were personally dealt with. A large proportion of these gave decided evidence of a real change of heart.

Mr. J. W. Moodie in Cairo.—For the last sixteen days we have had Mr. J. W. Moodie, the soldier evangelist, with us. We have been greatly refreshed by his visit, and the meetings have been well attended, the word has been with power, the men were held in earnest attention, and during his stay several have professed to have decided for Jesus, and backsliders have been restored. Mr. Moodie leaves Cairo to-day for Port Said, where he hopes to find a vessel to take him to Malta. Would the readers of The Christian pray for the soldiers in Cairo, and also for Mr. Moodie's work in Malta and Gibraltar. J. Ewing.

Citadel, Cairo, Egypt, May 5.

Messrs. Thompson and Nesbitt, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, are conducting a series of tent meetings at Magherafelt, co. Derry. The results have been very encouraging so far.

Gaelic Services.—Rev. Thos. Grant, Free Church minister of Tain, Ross-shire, preached a Gaelic sermon in the Whitefield Presbyterian Church, Drury-lane, on Sunday week. There was a large congregation of Highlanders. The mother tongue has a strange charm to the Celt; when the veteran preacher besought his hearers to be reconciled to God, many old associations of the Highlands were tenderly revived, and it is believed much blessing accompanied the word. Should any friend desire to help in providing these monthly services, they may apply to Mr. Arthur Robertson, Caledonian Christian Club, 5, Southampton-street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

Bristol.—A week's mission has been held by the Union of Evangelistic Mission Workers, at Salmon-street City Mission Chapel, and in the open air, in the surrounding districts. The services were characterised by solid earnest work, though the effort did not result in many manifest conversions. One feature of the mission was the open-air work. While the service was going on in the chapel open-air meetings were being held in courts, streets, &c., of ten of the surrounding districts. The whole neighbourhood was saturated with Gospel truth, and the message of salvation was carried into the very homes of the people. About 250 workers took part in 60 open-air and 14 indoor services, and the mission altogether has been most encouraging.

Cullen, Banffshire.—Mr. Samuel McKenzie has concluded a two weeks' mission here. From the beginning much interest was shown in the work, and there were cases of decision for Christ at almost every meeting. The movement, while not confined to the Seatown, has been mainly among the fishermen and their families. A large number of young men have given themselves in glad surrender to the Lord Jesus, and the writer knows a number of homes where both husband and wife have been led to put their trust in Christ. Mr. McKenzie seems especially qualified for work among fishermen, and many of these, who are now leaving for the early fishing, will be glad to hear that he is likely to go to Stornoway for June. A. S.

Greenock, N.B.—There has been quite an awakening in this place. In March and April Mr. Somerset Gardner conducted music-hall services, and was followed by Miss McMinn. The Gospel was preached with much acceptance and power, and many experienced assurance of salvation on the exercise of faith in a living Christ. Christians were cheered and confirmed, and among other results of Mr. Gardner's mission is the fact that several young men have decided to go forth as missionaries to the dark countries of the earth. Miss McMinn sings the Gospel as well as preaches it, and though busy in Glasgow for the present, she might be induced to visit England in the autumn. Particulars of the whereabouts of these evangelists may be obtained from Mr. Walter Fisher, hon. supt., Christian Mission, Greenock.

Falmouth.—Mr. John Lomas, of the Falmouth Town Mission, requests prayer for blessing on open-air Gospel work in the squares, courts, and alleys of Falmouth, also tent services on the beaches. Christian workers of all denominations who may be visiting the locality will be heartily welcome.

MR. D. C. JOSEPH, who is on a visit to this country, addressed a well-attended and sympathetic meeting in Bootle, on Thursday last week. His narrative of how the Lord had blessed his mission to the Jews at Jerusalem was most interesting, and the success of the past year indicates that, under God, Mr. Joseph is eminently fitted to carry the good news of salvation to his brethren in the East.

ALBERT YOUTHS' CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE.—The third annual meeting of this Institute at Jenkins' Yard, Eagle-street, High Holborn, was lately held. Mr. J. E. K. Studd in the chair. The report showed steady progress in the work of the Institute. There is an average attendance of about eighty members, for whom are provided prayer-meetings, Bible-classes, athletic club, temperance society, library, &c.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.—The committee of the Homes for Little Boys, at Farningham and Swanley, having invited Mr. Benjamin Clarke, general editor of the Sunday-School Union publications, to succeed the late Rev. A. O. Charles as secretary of the Homes, Mr. Clarke has accepted the appointment; but he will retain his connection with the Sunday-school Union by continuing to edit The Sunday-school Chronicle.

Y.M.C.A. Bible Lessons.

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, May 27.

Prov. x. 18—21, 31, 32.

By examining the tongue of a patient," says one f the ancients, "physicians find out the diseases f the body, and philosophers the diseases of the nind." An evil tongue reveals a corrupt heart, for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth peaketh." Our lesson relates to some of the right ises and to some terrible abuses of the tongue. Note what is said of

(1) The Sins of the Tongue.—Leighton observes hat of the Ten Commandments two are devoted to ins of the tongue. "One in the first table and one n the second, as though it were ready to fly out against God and man." The sins of the tongue named in our lesson are:—(a) Insincerity (ver. 18). Bad feelings hidden under cover of good words. Compare Saul's attempt to conceal his hatred of David (1 Sam. xviii. 22—30), and the sin of Judas Matt. xxvi. 25). God hates what is false. Comp. 'false lips" (Ps. xxxv. 11), "false witness" Prov. xxi. 28), "false balance" (Prov. xi. 1), and false report (Exodus xxiii. 1). The R.V. reads, 'He that hideth hatred is of lying lips." Note the place prepared for liars (Rev. xxi. 8).

(b) Slander.—A slander is a statement of a malicious (2 Sam. xix. 27), calumnious (Numb. xiv. 36), false (Matt. v. 11), and usually of a clandestine character—("privily," Ps. ci. 5). To listen to a slanderer is to be a partaker of his sin (Prov. xvii.). "Leave off," Bishop Wordsworth is reported o have said, "slandering me with thine ears." There must be a good market for slander, or there would not be so many dealers in it (comp. "the slander of many," Ps. xxxi. 13). There is no respect of persons with the confirmed slanderer comp. "Thine own mother's son," Ps. l. 20). God Himself is not without the evil word of such Mal. iii. 13; Matt. xii. 32), and therefore his people will not be without it (Matt. x. 25). It is said of the Malays that "they are the most reacherous people on the face of the globe, and yet hey speak the softest language of Asia."

(c) Loquacity (ver. 19).—"The multitude of words." It has been noticed that Peter, who was the Apostle who said the most, was also the one who, mitting Judas, sinned the most. The tongue is like he wheel of a carriage; if it has too quick a motion t is likely to catch fire. This, Burder tells us, is the hought of James iii. 6 ("on fire of hell"). Profuse talkers often transgress the laws of reverence Eccles. v. 2), of courtesy (a monopolist in conversation is a social bore), of integrity (the tongue that ravels too quickly often outstrips truth), and of prudence (John xvi. 12).

(d) Impurity ("mouth of the wicked," ver. 32). Froward here is in the plural. From the unclean ve get that which is unclean. Impurity of speech s a sin in which many young men indulge. "If God is not in thee," says Gurnall, "the devil is, for nan's heart is a house that cannot stand empty." Among the special forms of speech named in the Bible which may be described as "frowardnesses" here are blasphemies (Exodus xx. 7), idle words Matt. xii. 36: Idle here signifies unprofitable), hasty words (Prov. xxix. 20), and impure speech James iii. 6).

(2) The Control of the Tongue (ver. 19).—'Refraineth." To refrain is to keep back. Note he Psalmist's reference to the horse being "held in vith bit and bridle" (Ps. xxxii. 9), and the use nade of the same figure by James (James iii. 3—5). To restrain the tongue we should: (a) Seek the aid of God (Ps. cxli. 3). (b) Order our speech by the Word of God (1 Peter iv. 11). (c) Watch for the right time to peak (Eccles. iii. 7). "Elihu," says Nicholls, though competent to speak best, spoke last." Never speak," says Bishop Butler, "but when you ave something to say.

(3) The Right Use of the Tongue (vv. 20, 21).—Two figures are used here, "Choice silver" and food." The tongue is well employed when it utters vords that have value, and that will feed the soul Note (a) God's people have something to say.—When," says Robert Hall, "a man can keep his eligion to himself, that man has very little eligion to keep." Comp. "We cannot but speak" Acts iv. 20). (b) God's people speak precious words.—Chrysostom was called "the silver tongued," and o, in one sense, is every man who speaks for God. His words are precious because of their origin Ps. cxix. 72), and because of their influence Eccles. x. 12, xii. 10, 11; Job vi. 25). The words f the true man of God are food for the soul (John 9).

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, May 27.

Peter's Denial.

Matt. xxvi. 67—75. Golden Text: 1 Cor. x. 12.

Then did they spit in His face, &c.—We must suppose the mock trial before High Priest and Sanhedrim to be over. The Council has adjourned till day-break, for, according to Roman law, a sentence given before dawn was not legal. Meanwhile Jesus is detained in the High Priest's palace, to be made the sport of cruel, lawless enemies. This sport probably lasted a long time. Spit, &c. —Always a dreadful insult, but specially so among Jews, to whom it meant the deepest contempt and abhorrence. Teachers should not fail to point out how this scene was vividly described 700 years before. See Isa. l. 5—7. And buffeted Him, i.e., struck with clenched fists. Smote Him with the palms of their hands, i.e., struck the side of his head with their open hands—a deep insult. "No blow more disgraceful can be inflicted."—Chrysostom.

Prophesy unto us, Thou Christ, &c.—Luke xxii. 64 says, "And when they had blindfolded Him, they struck Him on the face, and asked Him, saying, Prophesy, who is it that smote Thee? And many other things blasphemously spake they against Him." Teachers will do well to warn against the mean and detestable sin of mocking the religion of others, whom, perhaps, we do not understand.

Now Peter sat without in the palace.—This palace would be, like most Oriental houses, built around a quadrangle open to the sky, and into which all the rooms would look, some of them being actually open to it. Entrance to this quadrangle, or "hall" (see Luke xxii. 55), was made by a passage which (sometimes arched) ran beneath the house from the street inward to the open court. At the street end of this passage—here called "the porch"—a heavy folding-door, with a smaller wicket for single persons, was set, and was guarded by a porter. The room where Jesus was was on the ground floor, and was, no doubt, open to the court, otherwise Peter would not have caught the Saviour's glance (Luke xx. 61). It is very difficult to piece together the statements of the four Evangelists so as to get one simple story. "The four accounts agree that Peter was recognised on three occasions during the night; that he was on all three a denier of his Lord; but they mention different recognisers, especially in the second and third case; they record different replies and different circumstances. It follows that not one of the four consulted the narrative of the others."—Rev. Com. When our Lord was being led away captive, a sudden panic overtook the disciples (ver. 56), but both John and Peter soon recovered from it. John in time, probably, to enter the hall along with the train that followed Jesus and his captors, while Peter followed more timidly (ver. 58). He is stopped at the gate; but John, seeing him, uses his influence with the porteress, and brings him in (John xviii. 15, 16). After this the story is silent about John. Perhaps the two stood together for awhile. Then Peter, either on account of the chilly cold, or to avoid notice and suspicion, proposes that they should join the crowd round a fire which the soldiers and others have lit in the courtyard. John has no taste for such company, and Peter, self-willed and rash, must go his own way. He assumes a careless air, and joins the servants around the fire as though he were as indifferent to Jesus as they. Teachers should dwell here on this taking up a false position; this acting a part, as the "first easy and fatal step; this taking on a character not his own. He is false to himself before he proves false to his Master. The acted lie precedes the spoken one; prepares for it, almost necessitates it.

Thou wast also with Jesus of Nazareth.—John (xviii. 17) tells us the speaker was "the damsel that kept the door"; while Mark, and especially Luke, suggest that she took a good long look at Peter to be quite sure before she spoke. Picture her holding up a piece of blazing wood like a torch, and Peter shrinking from her bold, peering gaze. I know not what thou sayest. —"I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest" (Mark xiv. 68). A stammering evasion, a "put-off," in the hope he may not be pressed to tell the lie he was already acting. But he is so pressed; she is not to be put off so. Then he says plainly (Luke xxii. 57), "Woman, I know Him not."

And when he had gone into the porch.—He has told his shameful lie, but feels he is not believed. He can stand no longer the bright firelight, and especially those many questioning eyes that now watch him; so he retires to the dark shadow of the porch. Just then the cock crew (Mark xiv. 68), and directly after Another maid saw him, and said unto them that were there. —It is likely that a number were now watching him. He denied with an oath.—Mark the swift progress of sin. Pride makes Peter deaf to warning, and rash. Then comes sudden fear and cowardice. Then the acted lie followed swiftly by the evasion, the prevarication. Then the lie direct, and now that lie repeated and sealed by oath.

And after awhile.—I.e., an hour (Luke xxii. 59). Peter, grown desperate, as men do when wilfully sinning, joins some group, talking boldly and carelessly, trying to brave it out. Many challenge him. Surely thou also art one of them: "Of a truth this fellow was with Him" (Luke xxii. 59). "Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?" (John xviii. 26). Thy speech bewrayeth thee.—To a Judean ear the Galilean dialect was very uncouth and barbarous. Galileans failed to pronounce their gututrals—e.g., they pronounced sh as though it were th. They lisped their sh.

Then began he to curse and to swear.—Better to anathematise and to swear. To anathematise—to invoke Divine judgment upon him if he did not speak the truth—the most desperate form of swearing known. And immediately the cock crew.—When the foul words were still pouring from his mouth. And Peter remembered, &c.—Show it was not happy accident that thus stopped Peter—that Jesus had purposely spoken at the supper table in such a way that the second cock-crowing should awake Peter to his sin. He had also prayed specially for Peter in view of this (see Luke xxii. 32 and 34). Thus, before the sin was committed, Jesus laid up help (1) on earth, and (2) in heaven. And now, just when Peter, suddenly awakened to his awful sin, is about to despair, "the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter" (Luke xxii. 61). That look melted his heart, so he went out and wept bitterly.—"If the angel of innocence had left him, the angel of repentance took him gently by the hand."—Farrar. How marvellous that look of Christ's! so kind and forgiving in its gentle reproach, so soon after the terrible sin—not a moment too soon, when Peter was unrepentant, nor a moment too late, when he might have been out of sight, lost in despair. All this, too, when Jesus Himself was being despised and tortured. Has He such looks to-day for repentant sinners? Yes, to the vision of faith.

SPEKE HALL, BATTERSEA.

The anniversary meetings of the Speke Hall Mission, Speke-road, Battersea, were held on Tuesday, May 1, followed by a nine days' special mission, which closed with signs of much blessing on Thursday, May 10. The anniversary meetings were well attended; a large number being present in the afternoon, when addresses, having as their subject the deepening of the spiritual life, were given by Revs. E. W. Moore, C. G. Moore, and F. D. Sanford. The very large and enthusiastic meeting in the evening was addressed by Mr. T. A. Denny, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Watson, Dr. Montague Miller, and Mr. Noble.

Speke Hall, close to Clapham Junction Station, is under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Reader Harris, who have been carrying on mission work in the vicinity for six years, and it was very evident from the character of these gatherings that they have been enabled by God successfully to reach the masses, and to lead many hundreds to turn from sin, and trust the Lord Jesus as a Saviour, able and willing to save to the uttermost all who come unto God by Him. Meetings are held every night all the year round, to which the poorest are made most welcome. Speke Hall, seating 1500 persons, was procured for the mission a year ago. £1900 is still required to complete the purchase and alterations, besides the general expenses of the mission, amounting to about £800 a year.

A report of the work and balance-sheet will be forwarded to anyone on application to Mr. Reader Harris, 9, The Cedars, Clapham Common, S.W.

The annual sale of work in behalf of mission and parochial work in the poor district of St. John the Evangelist, Islington, will be held on Thursday and Friday, June 19 and 20, at "Worthing House," Montfort-terrace, Barnsbury, Islington. Gifts of any kind—clothing, fancy articles, flowers, or fruit, will be most gratefully received by Mrs. Charles Ouch, addressed as above.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A Mohammedan was lately baptized at Amritsar, Punjaub, who heard the truth first in his village from the lips of Rev. Rowland Bateman, some sixteen years ago. He never forgot what he heard, and now, after many days, the seed sown has yielded fruit.

The Merchant Taylors' Company and the Skinners' Company have each given twenty guineas to the fund for the purchase of John Wesley's Chapel in West-street, Seven Dials, which was re-opened on Easter Sunday in connection with the London Diocesan Home Mission.

On Sunday, April 29, a special sermon to Jews and Christians was preached in Manchester Cathedral by Rev. M. Wolkenberg, missionary to the Jews in Manchester, on the subject of "The Messianic Expectation and its Realisation." He said that the craving which had existed for so many years for a strong and glorious deliverer was still felt by the majority of the Jewish people all over the world, with far deeper intensity of feeling and a stronger tenacity than ever. It was this hope for a Messiah which sustained them in a most prolonged calamity. On the same day in the Cathedral an adult Jew was baptized by Mr. Wolkenberg.

In the little village of Cleasby, Yorks, there was lately manifested a pleasing spirit of Christian friendship. A special service was to be held in the Methodist Chapel on Sunday evening, and on the Sunday previous the recently appointed vicar (Rev. R. H. Taylor) invited his congregation to accompany him to the service of his Nonconformist brethren, saying that there never was a time when it was more necessary to let the world see that Christian people are one, by whatever name they may be known. In response to this appeal nearly the whole of the church-going portion of the community, including the vicar and churchwardens, were present at the Methodist service.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The representative meeting in London has adopted a strong memorial to Government against the liquor licensing system of India.

The new meeting-house lately erected at Brumana, Mount Lebanon, is hardly large enough to accommodate the numbers of people who attend. The Sunday-school and mothers' meeting are prospering.

The Dublin Yearly Meeting have received the Richmond (Ind.) Declaration of Faith "as a valuable outcome of the Conference," and whilst they do not see their way to adopt it, they commend it to Friends in all their meetings.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. [illegible]. G. Marshall, of Hackney College, has been appointed by the London Missionary Society to labour in Tripatoor, Madras. He will sail for India in October.

After the May Day morning service in Redland Park Church, Bristol, about 800 bouquets, with texts attached, were sent to the Children's Hospital, the Infirmary, and General Hospital.

Trowbridge Tabernacle Sunday-school has 500 scholars, and forty-four teachers. The school, which was established 104 years ago, contributed £105 for missions last year.

At Victoria Park Church, Approach-road (Rev. Thomas Evans, pastor), 112 persons were received into fellowship on Sunday week; a number of the new members were converted during a recent mission, conducted by Rev. R. Balgarnie.

PRESBYTERIAN.

At the Assembly of the English Synod at Newcastle it was resolved to petition Parliament against the State regulation of vice in India. It was also decided to divide the London Presbytery into two Metropolitan Presbyteries, north and south, the dividing line being that of the river Thames.

The London Presbytery has accepted Dr. Adolph Saphir's resignation of the charge of Belgrave Church with expressions of deep regret. Rev. J. T. Middlemiss, of Sunderland, is spoken of for the vacancy at Belgrave, where he is well known, he having formerly been assistant to Dr. Saphir.

Three young Free Church missionaries were ordained in Edinburgh last week—Revs. W. R. W. Gardner, for the Keith-Falconer Mission in South Arabia; James F. Gardner, for the Wilson Missionary College in Bombay; and Alex. P. Telfer, for the Duff Missionary College in Calcutta. A collection was taken for the Keith-Falconer Mission.

BAPTIST.

A writer in The Baptist Magazine says that there is not a single Baptist church in the whole of Western Australia.

A tablet to the memory of the late Rev. T. J. Comber, the Congo missionary, has been erected in Denmark-place Chapel, Camberwell, S.E.

The year-book of Brown-street Church, Salisbury, records that during the past year many additions were made to the membership from amongst the young.

A spiritual revival has been passing over the General Baptist Church at Mansfield, of which Rev. A. Firth is the pastor. A number have professed a change of heart recently.

Rev. G. T. Gillingham, at the celebration of the first anniversary of the Church at Barking, presented an encouraging report of the year's work. Many efforts have been made for the spiritual and temporal benefit of the people in the district, and the faithful preaching of the Gospel has been blessed by God to the conversion of not a few.

METHODIST.

Over three hundred persons professed to have decided for Christ at special services at Hinckley conducted by Rev. T. Waugh.

Sergeant Laverack, of Leeds, has held a fortnight's mission at Worthing, which has been the means of greatly stirring up the zeal of the Lord's people and leading sinners to the Saviour.

Christians have been revived and quickened and a number of persons have received salvation in connection with special services at Brunswick Chapel, St. John's Wood, conducted by Mr. William Sampson. The good work still goes on.

Rev. M. Miller, in an article in the current number of The Methodist Free Churches Connexional Magazine, earnestly pleads for a Union of the Free Churches with the New Connexional. Mr. Miller is convinced that immense advantage would accrue from such union, and holds that "there is no difference between the two denominations which justifies their separate existence."

SALVATION ARMY.

Work is to be commenced in Rotterdam, a meeting-house having been secured.

More officers are needed for the work in Jamaica which is steadily progressing.

In a village in South India, a native convert has sold all his cattle and property and given it to the support of the work, himself becoming an officer.

An actress, in despair, was about to commit suicide in Holland last week, when Colonel Nicol and Pastor Carey appeared on the scene, and prevented her, and led her to confess her sins and seek her Saviour.

The meetings in Bombay are attended by Europeans, Parsees, Hindoos, Afghans, Arabs and persons of other nationalities. On a recent Sunday night seventeen representatives of these different nations went forward to the penitent form.

At a recent single meeting in a large town in Holland twelve persons professed conversion. Of these one was a great drunkard, another a German dancing-saloon keeper, a third, a Jewess teacher, besides other good cases. The next morning the German and Jewess volunteered for the field. Reinforcements are wanted for Germany and Jerusalem, and these comrades are heartily welcomed.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The directors of the Belfast and Northern Counties Railway Company have decided not to run special excursion trains on Sunday during the summer.

The Women's Temperance Association and Christian Workers' Union is doing excellent service in Belfast. The annual meeting has been held, and the report was a very encouraging one.

The great event of the past week was the Centenary commemoration of the birth of the late Rev. Henry Cooke, D.D., which was observed on Friday, with immense enthusiasm, in Belfast, Dublin, and various other parts of Ireland.

The old Methodist Church at Tandragee has been turned into a commodious temperance hall. For some time largely-attended Saturday night entertainments have been held in it, and already over five hundred persons have signed the temperance pledge.

During the past week Dr. H. Grattan Guinness has been conducting a Gospel mission in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin. The addresses have been listened to with marked attention by large congregations night after night, and many have remained for the after-meetings.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Mr. Hugh Roberts, of Clonaudra, Newtownbutter, for many years a faithful servant of the Lord Jesus, aged 90 years.—Mr. James Abraham, of Maryborough, an earnest Methodist, and a zealous Sunday-school worker.—Professor Leone Levi, for some thirty-six years a member of the English Presbyterian Church, and for many years a devoted elder of Regent-square congregation. Dr. Levi came to England from Italy in 1841 as a Jew, and whilst in Liverpool was converted to Christianity, and disowned by his family. He carried on a successful work amongst young men, and a mission to poor Italians in Hatton-garden, and, with all his genius and learning, was ever humble and self-denying in his labours for God.—Rev. Thomas Thomas, Wesleyan minister of Ulverston.—Rev. Richard Bennett Burges, for twenty years vicar of St. Paul's, Birmingham.—Mr. John Maden, brother of the pastor of the Baptist Church, Ramsbottom, and for nearly fifty years a devoted and useful servant of Christ.—Rev. Joshua Brooke, for fifty-three years vicar of Colston-Bassett, Notts.—Rev. E. W. Makinson, vicar of Holy Trinity, Armley Hall, Leeds.—Miss Henderson, zenana missionary of the Irish Presbyterian Church at Ahmedabad, India.

NEW YORK.—One of the most liberal Jewish congregations in New York has decided that henceforth, in addition to the ordinary Saturday worship, a service shall be held every Sunday morning in the Synagogue. The innovation meets with the liveliest approval of the congregation, which is formed for the most part of Jews of high position in the city.

THE DROME VALLEY, FRANCE.—Miss S. R. Geldard writes from Chatillon en Diois: "God has put it into the hearts of the committee of the Society of Geneva to place here one of their evangelists, who is full of zeal and energy, and goes to Catholics and Protestants alike with the message of salvation. A retired Methodist minister has come back to his old homestead in another village, and there are other encouraging signs. In the lower part of the valley there are some devoted pastors, but the upper part has still much need of workers."

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The leading Scotch temperance organisations are preparing for a campaign of open-air meetings during the summer.

The recent anniversary meetings of the Scottish Temperance League held at Glasgow were enthusiastic and successful.

Much gratification has been expressed at the conduct of the magistrates in refusing a drink licence to the New Gallery in Regent-street, London.

At the recent annual Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England it was stated that church temperance work in connection with the Church is carried on with vigour.

Mr. John Corbett, Stoke Prior Saltworks, has notified his workpeople that those among them who go into debt for food and spend their wages on drink need not expect to remain in his employment. A copy of the notice has been sent to the local shopkeepers.

FOREIGN.

Though seven Canadian counties have repealed the Scott Act, there are fifty-seven in which it is still in force.

A hard fight is going on in many places for local option. Good work in the cause is being done in New Zealand and in Victoria.

The Chamber of Representatives, Belgium, has agreed to the convention for preventing the liquor traffic with fishermen in the North Sea.

Mr. Matthew Burnett has been enthusiastically welcomed in Victoria, and is now starting on a temperance mission in New South Wales and Queensland.

In a report presented to the French Academy of Medicine it is stated that of 3,000 criminals examined 79 per cent. of the "vagabonds and beggars" had been found drunkards.

During disturbances in Roumania recently the authorities caused all the wine and spirit casks at the drink shops to be smashed to prevent the rioters being incited to further mischief.

An Assam tea planter told Mr. Caine, M.P., that, through drinking at the village still on Sunday, of 3000 of his coolies two-thirds of these were often unable to go to work on Monday morning, to his very serious loss.

At Yokohama formerly during a visit of the squadron there would be 300 to 400 cases of drunken blue-jackets. Now the number is almost nil—a fine sample of navy temperance work. Sometimes between 2000 and 3000 are on shore from the fleet.

A campaign in the local option war in Victoria is just over, and though all that the most ardent friends of temperance desired has not been accomplished, still something has been gained. Out of eleven polls the local optionists have won five, and have closed 105 hotels.

An ordinance is now under consideration by the city council of Chicago which provides that before a licence shall be granted for a saloon the written consent of a majority of the property owners in the block shall be obtained, and that fines shall be imposed for selling liquor to minors.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

PROFESSOR GODET has so far regained strength as to be able to devote some time every week to the study of the Pastoral Epistles with some theological students.

MRS. MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT has closed her work in India, and goes to Ceylon to continue her labours. She leaves as the result of her efforts in the former country sixteen working unions.

A MISSIONARY TRAINING SCHOOL has been opened at 4045, Ogden-street, Philadelphia, U.S., by Mrs. Osborn, wife of Rev. William B. Osborn, formerly a missionary in India. It aims to put a course of preparatory study within the reach of the humblest and poorest who are seeking to go abroad as missionaries of the Gospel.

A NEW CHINESE Y.M.C.A.—Rev. F. P. Joseland, of the London Missionary Society, has been appointed first president of a Y.M.C.A. just established at Amoy, China, for the young men of the native Christian churches. The missionaries of various church have united in this good work, and everything is to be done on strictly Chinese lines as much as possible.

PALESTINE.—Referring to the Society's work among the Mohammedans in Palestine, the Rev. C. T. Wilson, of Jerusalem, writes:—"The almost unanimous testimony of workers out here is, that never were the Moslems of Palestine so willing to listen to the Gospel as now, and it is therefore our duty to avail ourselves of every opening for telling them of God's message of love in Christ.

BERNE.—The Government of Berne, in response to a weighty petition presented to it a few weeks ago, has energetically decided to suppress certain houses of ill-report, and to expel those persons who cannot show they live by some honest calling. The Police is ordered to exercise the strictest vigilance. All honour to magistrates who call evil evil and treat it accordingly.—Journal Religieux.

LOVEDALE, SOUTH AFRICA.—In a book entitled "Lovedale, past and present," Rev. James Stewart, M.D., Free Church of Scotland missionary, describes the work of one of the greatest native institutions in the world, namely, the Missionary Training Institution at Lovedale, Alice, Cape Colony. It provides accommodation for about four hundred students, male and female, and since it was established seventeen years ago, no fewer than two thousand have passed through it, the native payments during that period have averaged a thousand pounds per annum.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,

NOW CONTAINING 2,500 HOMELESS BOYS AND GIRLS.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

Of the Institutions will (D.V.) be held in

EXETER HALL, ON WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 23.

The Right Honourable the EARL OF MEATH, P.C.,

Will take the Chair at 6 o'clock.

And will be supported, among others, by the Lord Kinnaird, Rev. E. A. Stuart, M.A., of Holloway, General Maclagan, R.E., Samuel Gurney Sheppard, Esq., Rev. Dr. Tyler, William Fowler, Esq., Rev. Appeals.

The Home for Girls, Wanstead, Epping, is in need of funds, the building being out of repair. The Committee have also been obliged to send away several of the rescued girls owing to the want of means. The Home has done good service, and the girls are trained as domestic servants, laundry maids, &c.

Jersey Sailors' Evangelistic Mission.—This branch of the Sailors' Rest Aid Society was established last year, and is the centre of some very promising agencies. The hon. secretary, Mr. Edward Voisin, 13, Royal-square, Jersey, will be glad of useful tracts or money contributions towards helping on the work.

Woodford, Gloucestershire.—For some time there has been great need of a place of worship in this village, where successful cottage meetings have been held for several years. The villagers have given money and labour, but unfortunately the building, which is to accommodate about sixty people, cannot be opened free of debt. Miss Dove, of Talfield House, near Talfield, R.S.O., Gloucestershire, appeals for 1000 shillings to cover the sum still owing to the builder.

Latymer-road Mission.—Funds are urgently needed with which to send sick children to the seaside. The Homes as Ramsgate (boys) and Bexhill-on-Sea (girls) receive poor children from any part of London or the country; and besides actual cases of convalescence, there are many patients who have suffered from the effects of over-crowding and underfeeding. Contributions will be gratefully received by Miss E. A. Gladstone, hon. sec. Latymer-road Mission, Blechynden-street, Notting-hill, W.

Missionary Christian Church for Belgium.—The Belgian Evangelical Society has during the past fifty years done much good work, and has now 27 churches and stations, 61 annexes, and 59 Sunday-schools, with 19 ministers, 4 evangelists, and 14 colporteurs and Bible-readers. While the workers desire to establish more stations, it seems probable that, owing to lack of funds, some of the present stations will soon have to be given up. The Society has many friends in England, but it sadly needs more. Contributions may be sent to the secretary general, Rev. Kennedy Anet, 32, Rue Tasson-Snel, Brussels.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, May 14, 1888.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

Dover Soldiers' Home.—Since this Home was established, in 1879, there has been abundant proof that God's blessing has rested upon it; but all who know anything of the working of Soldiers' Homes will understand that for the furtherance of the work a Christian man to visit the barracks and follow up the soldiers who are attending the meetings and Bible-classes, as well as to induce others to attend, becomes a necessity. During the last five weeks one has been employed whose earnest efforts towards this end have tended materially to increase the numbers in the Home, but to retain his services £50 per annum are required.—Miss Wright, Lady Superintendent Soldiers' Home, 118, Snargate-street, Dover.

REV. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE,

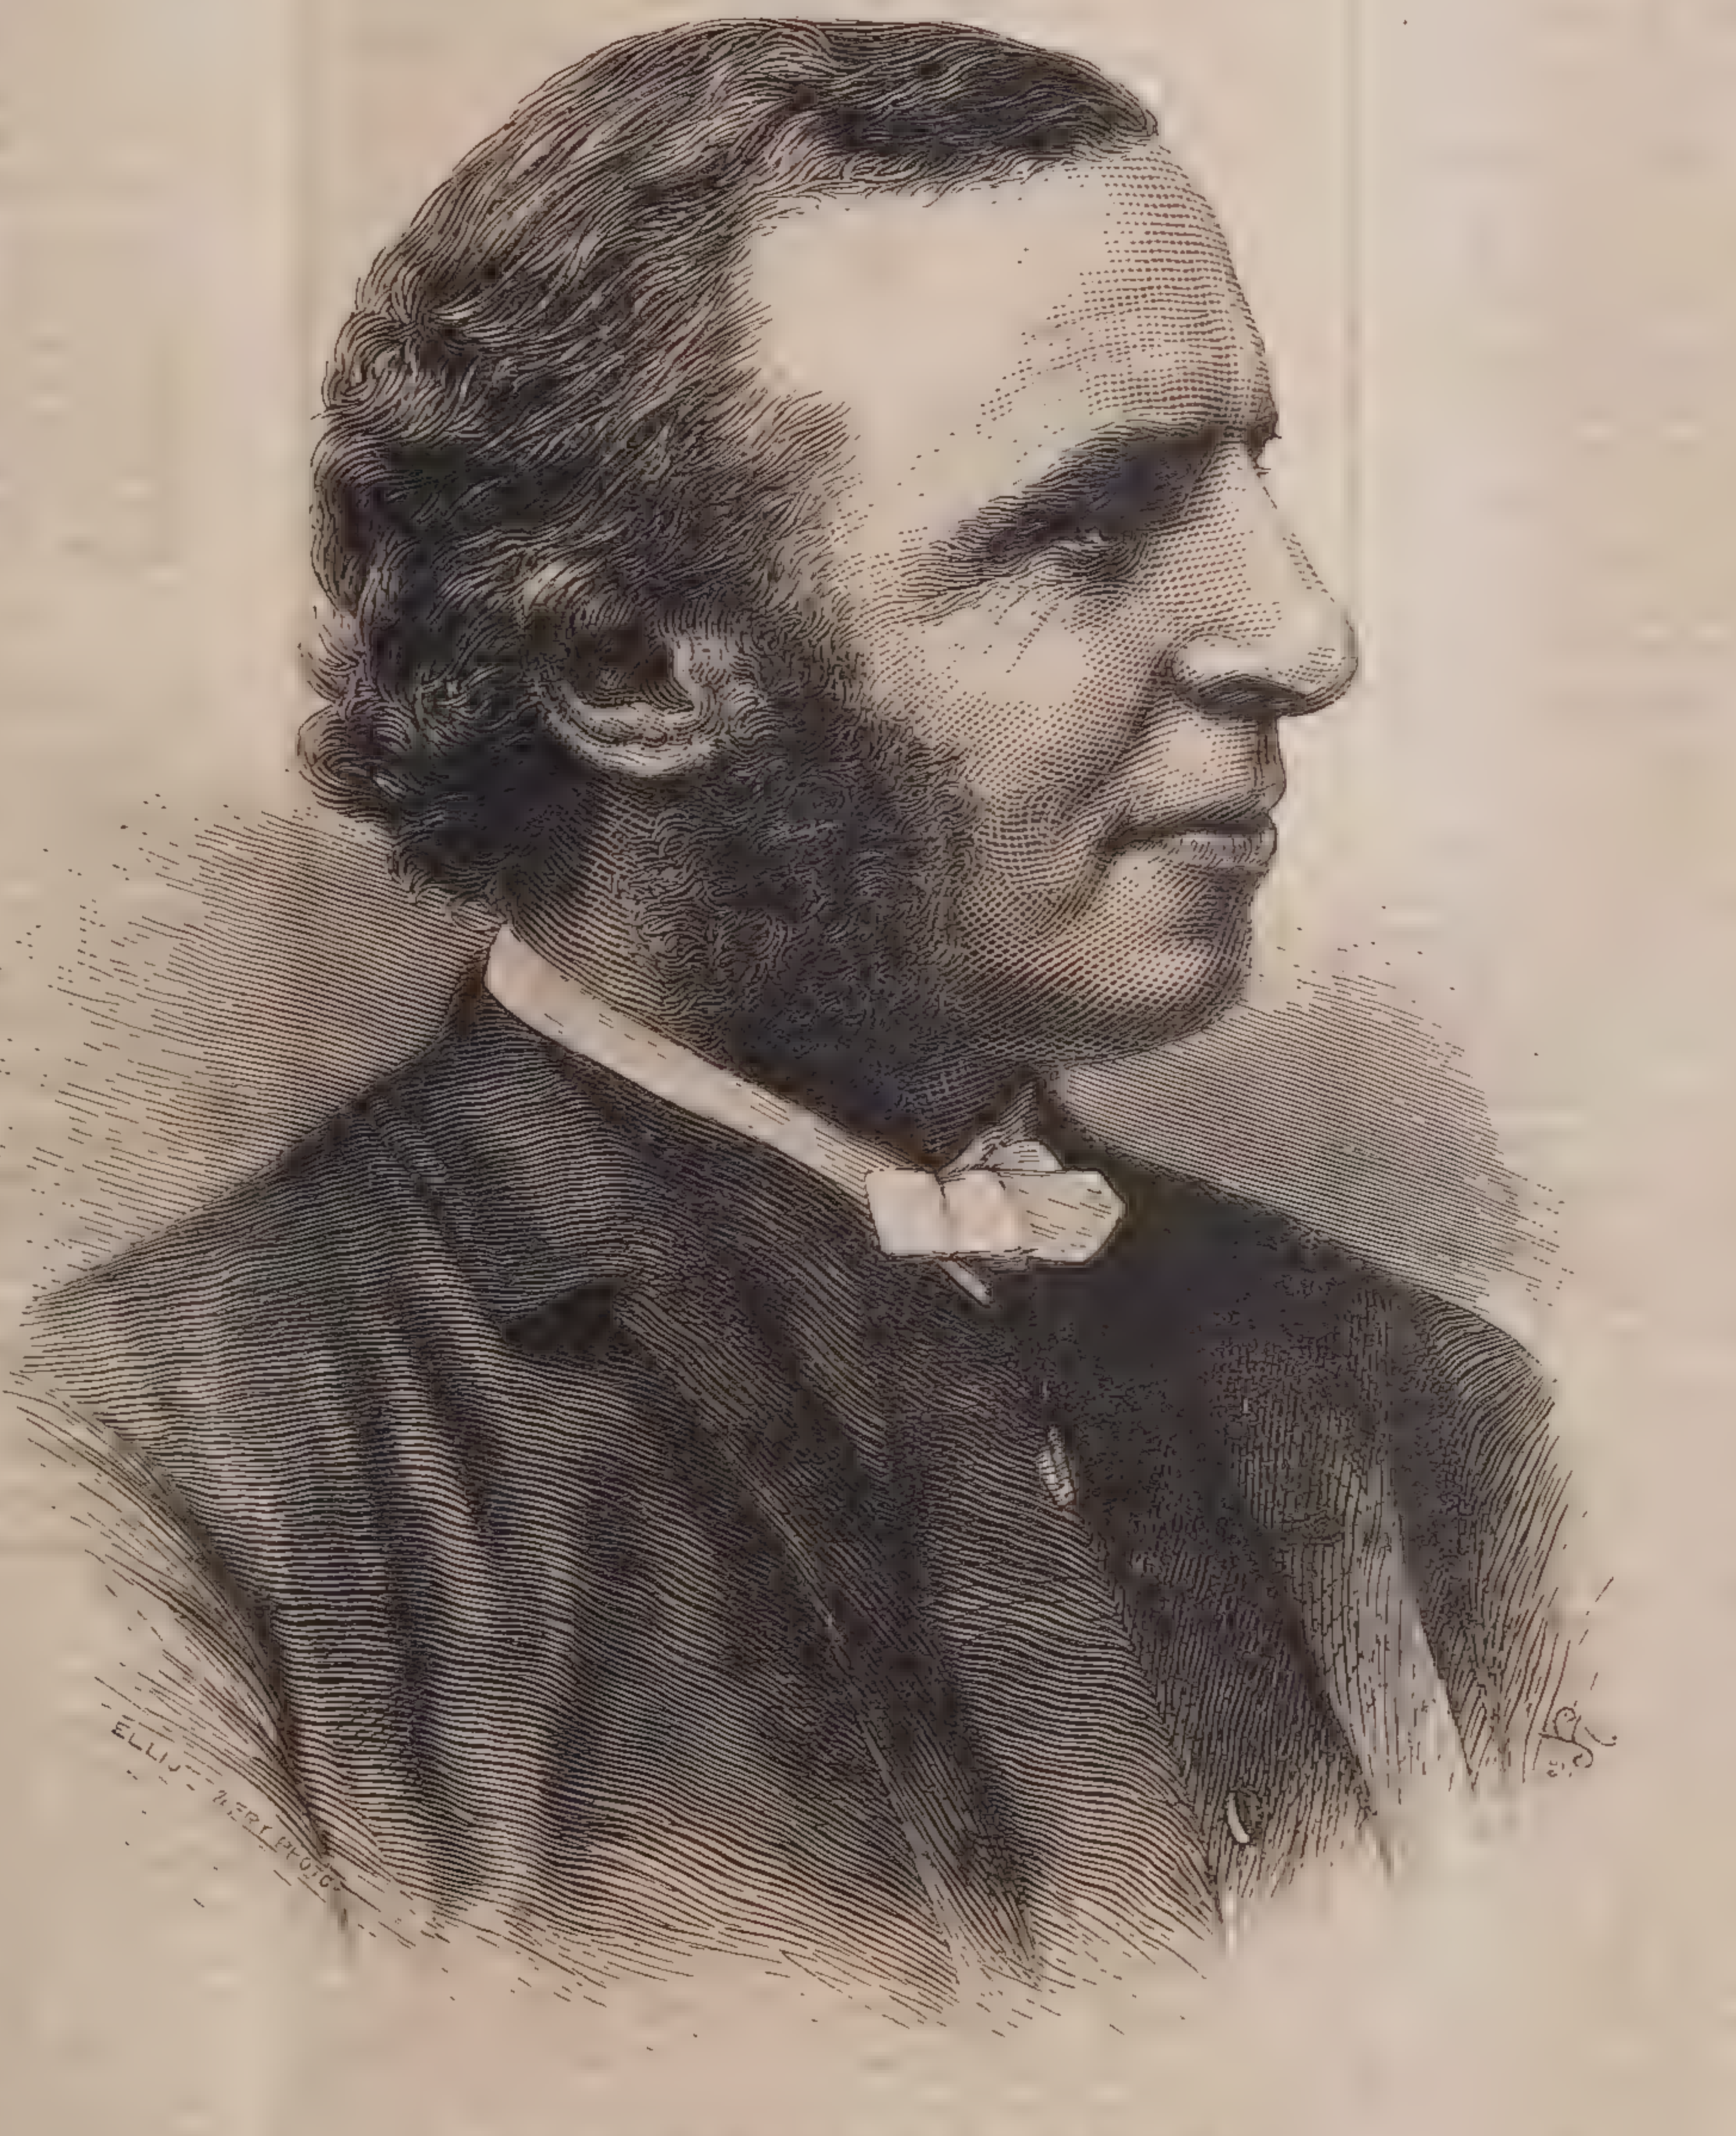
Ridley Hall, Cambridge.

THE subject of this sketch, HANDLEY CARR GLYN MOULE, was born in 1841, at Fordington Vicarage, Dorchester. His father, Rev. Henry Moule, was for fifty-one years vicar of Fordington, and proved himself to the last a devoted worker for the eternal and temporal welfare of those under his charge; his name is remembered with love, and his teachings are treasured by many who have wandered far from the old parish. Mr. Moule's mother, whose maiden name was Evans, was a descendant of a long line of preachers of the Gospel in Wales and Bristol.

The memory of those parents is cherished by their sons with the deepest and most reverent love, and though thousands of miles of sea and land now divide the members of that family, their hearts are as united by the sacred influence of that power as they were in the happy days of childhood. Of this gifted family we may mention, as well known to some of our readers, Bishop Moule, and Archdeacon Moule of Mid-China, both C.M.S. missionaries, and Mr. Charles W. Moule, tutor of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

Handley Moule was taught at home. His father at one time educated other pupils with his sons. Handley's education was continued at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he did justice to the home teaching which nowadays is too often considered a very poor substitute for the training of the public schools. In 1862 he won the Carus Prize for accurate study of the Greek Testament, and in 1863 he obtained Sir William Browne's gold medals for Greek and Latin poems. He graduated in 1864 as second classic; and since then he has on six occasions obtained the annual Seatonian Prize, awarded for the best sacred poem by a Master of Arts.

The year 1865 was an eventful one in his life, for he added a Theological First Class to his honours, was elected a Fellow of Trinity, which dignity he maintained for sixteen years, and commenced work as an assistant master in Marlborough College; at that time the present Dean of Westminster was head master. While at Marlborough, in 1866, that great change took place in him which has been the spring of his life-work ever since. He passed through a time of deep conviction of sin, though he had never been what the world calls a sinner. From this he was led, by no human agency, but by the living Lord Himself, into the joyful realisation of the grace of God. This experience has coloured all his teaching, and imparted to it much of that solemn personal element which is so characteristic of it. Every reader of his sermons and student of his condensed and careful works must have noticed the directness of his appeals, and the solemnity of those passages in which he speaks of sin.



(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.)

In 1867 Mr. Moule was ordained at Ely, by Dr. Harold Browne, now Bishop of Winchester. He then served for some few years as his father's curate. In 1873 he was summoned back to Trinity to be Dean of his old College, and at the same time undertook to be evening preacher at the Round Church; he held the former office for four years. During this time his definitely religious work consisted chiefly in holding Greek Testament readings in his rooms on Sunday evenings after church, besides general intercourse with undergraduates, and taking part in short services of a mission kind for College servants. This last was a new thing in those days, but out of those early efforts many branches of good work have grown, productive of encouraging results.

In 1877 he returned to Fordington, to nurse his aged parents, and act as his father's curate till his death. This work was doubtless very different from that which had occupied him in Cambridge, and more so from that to which he was about to be called in the old University, the growth of whose religious life is one of the wonders of the century. God prepares his servants in many ways, and doubtless this time of quiet country work, brightened by the loving welcome of old friends, and surrounded by the halo of dear memories, was well suited to prepare Mr. Moule for the work in connection with which his name is best known. He took up no duties lightly, nor laid them down without thought and prayer.

In 1879 the foundation stone of Ridley Hall was laid. This, as most people know, is a theological college for the reception and training of graduates who are desirous of preparing for ordination to the ministry of the Church of England. In 1880, on his father's death, Mr. Moule was appointed principal of the new Hall. He began residence and work in January of the next year. In that year also he married Mary Elliott, niece of the authoress of the well-known hymn, "Just as I am," and of the author of "Horæ Apocalypticæ," Rev. E. B. Elliott, of Brighton. Mrs. Moule, through her hospitality and ready sympathy, is almost as well known to old Ridley men as is Mr. Moule himself.

The Hall opened with eight students. It was soon enlarged to hold twenty; but those few who were brought into that first small circle will never forget the calm Christian happiness, the earnest work of that almost family life into which they were privileged to enter. But of course the work of so good an institution could not long be carried on within such narrow limits, and the extension of the Hall is but one of many proofs that the work and the workman are appreciated as indeed they ought to be. Up to this time 170 young men have passed through the Hall, all of whom, with very few exceptions, have been ordained. Three have departed to be with Christ, and eighteen are in the mission field, working in Japan, China, India Central Africa, Syria, and New Zealand. Other Ridley Hall men are on the point of going out as missionaries.

It is difficult to speak in few words of Mr. Moule's work in Ridley Hall; difficult for many reasons; first, because, though the training of young men for the ministry is of the greatest importance, that training is made up of so many little duties, and modes of instruction, that when considered in detail they are apt to appear insignificant; secondly, because the present writer knows full well how distasteful any laudation would be to the subject of this sketch.

The work in Ridley Hall is one of great responsibility, and of the deepest interest to all lovers of the simplicity of the Gospel. Term after term young men enter the Hall, fresh from the University—many of them having obtained excellent degrees. They come full of hope and vigour, life is before them, and the great hope of their life—ordination—is on the verge of realisation; and, as earnest and educated young men, they are exposed, as perhaps they never again will be in all their life, to the intellectual temptations of the specious sophistries of scepticism in its various forms, and on the other hand are in danger of being drawn by reaction to the other extreme, superstition, as manifest in the ritualistic practices of the day. To such young men, Mr. Moule becomes at once a sympathiser, and very soon a personal friend, listening to questions which his own experience helps him to answer, not as from some lofty pedestal of superior intelligence, but as from the sure footing attained by patient perseverance in the way of life. Thus the theological lectures which Mr. Moule gives, morning by morning, in the Hall library, become helpful to his hearers, as they never could, if they were not received with that personal trust and love which is essentially the element of successful learning.

Mr. Moule is an accurate, painstaking, and widely read scholar, a reverent lover and clear expounder of the Scriptures. Yet he is not by any means "bookish," but enters, as time permits, into the social and domestic interests of those whom he instructs; many are the memories of quiet walks and spiritual talks which his men carry away from Ridley. In his tutorial work he has been ably and devotedly seconded by Rev. P. Ireland Jones, now head of the C.M.S. Divinity School, Calcutta, and by Rev. G. A. Schneider, the successive vice-principals. All the students in the Hall are encouraged to take practical religious work under the clergy of the town. Term after term young men leave Ridley Hall, to carry with them the ballast of the clear Scriptural instruction they have received, the light of the blessed hope in which they have been strengthened, and the patient continuance in well doing of which they have had so bright an example.

It is impossible to gauge the amount of good thus done; but in almost every case those who have enjoyed that training know that it has been of the first importance in preparing them for the work upon which they have since entered. They are glad, also, to testify to this, as the popularity of the Triennial Reunions abundantly proves. Mr. Moule held the second of these last year, when forty-eight past residents were entertained in the Hall for three days, which were happily and profitably spent in devotional meetings, social gatherings, conferences, &c. Another way in which Mr. Moule holds communion with those who have passed through the Hall, is by an annual letter, consisting of a brief account of the work of the year, and a few powerful sentences of exhortation and encouragement.

Besides all this work, of which the very briefest outline is given, Mr. Moule has other duties in Cambridge. He is President of the C.M.S. Union, and, even more important still, evening preacher at Holy Trinity Church, and conductor of the University Bible-reading held afterwards. These Sunday evening sermons are becoming increasingly powerful for good. It is a real phenomenon to see the gownsmen crowding in; extra seats are placed in every available space, yet often many have to stand—and what for? To hear simple, old Gospel sermons; preached, indeed, with great solemnity and force, but not with any aim at conciliating the vagaries of the day. Afterwards sometimes as many as 100 come to the University Bible-reading, where opportunity is found for more direct instruction, and when any who so desire may become personally acquainted with Mr. Moule. But it is by his rare sympathy and great personal influence that he draws men to the Saviour whom he loves.

To pass from this to another branch of work. Mr. Moule is the author of "Commentaries on the Epistles to the Romans and Ephesians," in the Cambridge Bible for schools; also of some contributions to Smith's "Dictionary of Christian Biography," and of two small volumes of poems, in nearly all of which is seen the author's deep affection for the old home and its familiar ways, and yet more clearly, the hope and longing for the heavenly home. Besides these must be mentioned the "Fordington Sermons," "The Christian's Victory over Sin," and occasional papers and pamphlets on religious subjects; and last, but not least, three small devotional books, entitled respectively, "Thoughts on Christian Sanctity," "Union with Christ," and "Spiritual Life." Of these little volumes it is not necessary to speak, as they have been so widely blessed.

The first of them, "Thoughts on Christian Sanctity," has a peculiar interest, from the fact that it is the outcome of a wonderful blessing given to the author in September, 1884, through a fresh grasp of Christ in us for sanctification and as absolute Master. Such is the brief record of this humble, unselfish, Christian life.

Only one thing more need be added; Mr. Moule is a man of deep sympathies, and, in the midst of his work and with no very robust health, not only needs, but desires our prayers; while we pray, let us ourselves endeavour to follow him, and all others who so "follow Christ," into the joyful family secret of the "faith which worketh by love," that so for us all the following lines may be true:—

Under thy wings, my God, I rest;
Under thy shadow safely lie;
By thine own strength, in peace possessed,
While dreaded evils pass me by!
My place of lowly service, too,
Beneath thy sheltering wings I see;
For all the work I have to do,
Is done through strength'ning rest in thee.

DR. PENTECOST'S MOVEMENTS.

Dr. Pentecost left Schenectady, New York, at the beginning of the month for Atlanta, Georgia. His labours in the New England town were attended by remarkable results. The New York Weekly Witness, speaking of the close of the mission, says:—"The whole town is moved, and a wave of deep spiritual fervour has swept over the people of the locality." In a letter to The Witness Dr. Pentecost writes:—"We are having a great work. Hundreds of souls are being converted and the entire community is stirred to the depths. The Opera-House (2000) capacity is taxed to the utmost nightly, and Sunday night every seat is taken by men only."

The Schenectady Union writes:—"The causes are to be found away back in the hearts, prayers and services of God's people. Dr. Pentecost came here not as a substitute for the churches, to do work which they could not accomplish; not as a convenient make-shift for aggressive Christian work, but to be a tangible centre around which the Church forms could gather, and to force a crisis which would develop latent energy. That the city is deeply moved is evident. All agree that there was never anything like it, and look at each other almost in affright at the magnitude and responsibility of the work."

A PRAISEWORTHY EXAMPLE.—On Friday week (says The Methodist Times) a well-known lady of title, who probably would not wish her name to be published, came to Rev. H. Price Hughes, and volunteered to receive at her castle in the country companies of poor persons from the slums and back streets all through the summer months. The beauty of this Christian act has been enhanced by the fact that her ladyship also undertook to bear the whole cost, including their railway fares. What a Christ-like use for the great historic residences of rural England! There is great need for such Christianity. Multitudes in the hot and gloomy streets of London have never seen the sea, or even a green field, since they were born.

"LET THERE BE LIGHT!"

When the Spirit brooded on the face of the waters, and when God was about to transform Chaos into Kosmos, He uttered his first command, "Let there be light." When the antediluvian and patriarchal and legal dispensations had each fulfilled their course, and the promised Redeemer came, He came as the light shining in darkness; and the Light was the Life of men. And when He commissioned his disciples to carry on his work, He called them the light of the world.

"And God saw the light that it was good." It was like Himself; for He is in the light; He dwells in light unapproachable; yea, "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all." Under the perfect government of the Great King "there is no darkness nor shadow of death where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves."

Therefore, when the Home Secretary said in the House of Commons, that it would be most unwise to direct public attention to certain obscene and blasphemous publications by prosecuting the publishers, and that much more harm than good would be done by dragging them into the light of day, he laid down a principle contrary to the Word of God, and subversive of all good government. Iniquity, transgression, and sin, increase and multiply in the dark. Light stays the hand of the evil-doer. The enforcement of righteous law educates and enlightens the public conscience, and does much to arrest the course of evil.

The disciples of Christ in England are the light of England; but if the light that is in England be darkness, how great is England's darkness! No grander words were ever spoken by an Englishman than those of Latimer to his companion at the stake: "Be of good comfort, brother Ridley, and play the man; we shall this day light such a candle, by God's grace, in England, as I trust never shall be put out."

But we are face to face to-day with evils which characteristically seek the twilight, the evening, the black and dark night. A few Christians are letting the light in upon the darkness, and their chief hinderers are some of those whose only reason for being in the world is that they may shine as lights of the world. We ask them to consider whether they are acting in accordance with the Word of God.

A missionary who has been twenty years in Burmah tells us that Mr. Dyer's letters have rather understated than overstated the condition of India, and that the existing legalised encouragement of vice is not only ruinous to the native population, but debauches the conscience of Englishmen in our great dependency. General officers and others will not allow their daughters to read Mr. Dyer's letters. But these in many cases marry officers or civil servants in India. What do they find when they get there? Our missionary says that Burmah is rotten to the core. Corruption and bribery are rife, and entanglements with native women destroy domestic peace, and prevent the administration of justice. One English wife said, "My husband would never do such things." But she found her husband was like others, and "My husband" became a byword and a jest. Another wife went mad, and was sent home a lunatic. A woman who has a case coming before a commissioner or judge bribes his unmarried native "wife," or one of them; or the "wife" herself goes to each of the litigants, and offers for 100 rupees to influence the judge in his favour, and to return the 100 rupees if it goes against him; so that in either case she wins her 100 rupees. Of course we do not imply that all judges are thus entangled.

An old Indian officer writes us that "Military life is going down, and its contagious influence, necessarily extending to their native comrades, is preparing material for another Mutiny. Another not less deadly effect of these immoral ordinances and principles in high quarters is their influence on society, whereby such indifference to it prevails that nunc nemo obsistit, nemo reclamat (now no one resists, no one cries out). Public opinion itself is debauched, and the first remonstrance heard from the pulpit in India was through the outcry caused by the public at home."

But public men are showing that curses come home to roost, and during the present month two such different men as Cardinal Manning and Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., have spoken in almost identical terms. The latter gentleman, presiding over the fiftieth anniversary of the Monthly Tract Society, said:—

> In London we are sometimes inclined to say that the heathenism of the upper classes is more conspicuous than the Christianity. It seems as if a large portion were losing even the faintest regard for religion. We find a very widespread disposition to throw overboard every trace of supernatural religion.

> The luxury of the West of London in its wealth has produced a rankness and audacity of vice, hardly veiled, or open and barefaced, such as was found hardly in Rome of old, or in any city that I know of in the civilised world....The condition of the streets of the East-end no imagination can conceive, except those who have looked upon it; and few of you have ever seen it. These streets are full of every kind of temptation—active temptation and tempters who ply the trade.

Yet a very large number of Christians are ignorant of the condition of their country at home, and of their fellow-countrymen abroad, or, if they know it, are determined not to consider the consequences. They are like Hezekiah, King of Judah, who, when told by the prophet that his treasures should be carried to Babylon, and his sons be eunuchs in the palace of its king, replied, "Good is the word of the Lord: for there shall be peace and truth in my days." There is no peace at any price so unreasonable as this. They are in deadly peril of drifting into the spirit of Jehoiakim, King of Israel, who, when Jehudi had read three or four leaves of Jeremiah's roll, "cut it with the penknife, and cast it into the fire until it was all consumed. Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, neither the king nor any of his servants that heard all these words." We do not wonder that an invalid lady with a heart writes concerning the letters quoted in our last:—

> I have been expecting such letters from those who care not who may perish if only sin can be hidden. May God change the hearts of these selfish people. I laid down the paper, and opened John's Gospel at xviii. 28: "Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas unto the hall of judgment...and they themselves went not...lest they should be defiled; but that they might eat the passover."

"Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these, ye did it not to Me." Truly history repeats itself!

The gatherings in Exeter Hall last Friday, which we report at some length, were an endeavour to enlighten the public mind, and to arouse the public conscience. We believe they were not in vain.

COMPENSATION—TO WHOM?

The infatuated proposal to compensate disestablished publicans has happily brought into prominence the counter claim of the public to be compensated for the serious damage they suffer through the liquor trade. We learn that Mr. Caine, M.P., is to propose amendments to the Local Government Bill in this direction; and if right were to prevail he would unquestionably succeed. It is a reproach to common sense as well as to administrative equity, that drink-sellers should be permitted to prime their unwary or foolish patrons till reason and self-control are gone, and the drinker is ready for all sorts of wrong-doing. Looked at from the point of even-handed justice, surely the vendor of the deadly drink is equally responsible with the drinker for the murders and other terrible crimes that are committed under its spell. Can it be right that the unhappy and bemuddled victim of the liquor should bear the whole penalty, while the person who has, in cold blood, supplied him with the poison, goes scot free?

Mr. Joseph Malins, of Birmingham, forwards to us a statement of how compensation to the aggrieved and injured public is managed in the United States and Canada. In the Dominion the law enacts that the representatives of any person who dies through drink may sue the publican for compensatory damages ranging from 100 to 1000 dollars. Those who are injured in person or property by one so intoxicated can claim compensation from either or both the inebriate and the person who supplies the drink. A wife or dependent relative of an inebriate can give notice to drink-sellers not to serve such with intoxicants, and can recover damages if drink is served to him within one year after notice. There are similar or even more comprehensive and stringent laws in force in many of the United States, in some cases the liquor-sellers being required to give heavy bonds from which any damages they may incur shall be paid. As, for instance, in Nebraska it is required that "the licensed drink-seller shall provide a bond of 5000 dollars, and the person so licensed shall pay all damage that the community or individual may sustain in consequence of such traffic; he shall support all paupers, widows, and orphans, and pay the expenses of all civil and criminal prosecution growing out of, or justly attributable to, his traffic in intoxicating drinks."

These will be deemed pretty stringent enactments, but they do not appear to us to overstep the equity of the case, and we could only wish they were in force and enforced in this country. If Mr. Caine and other friends of temperance in Parliament will boldly uphold the claims of a long-suffering community, we should think short work will be made of the monstrous proposition to reimburse the publicans for the deprivation of their licences.

SPECIAL PRAYER is asked that the motion to be brought forward in the House of Commons on June 5, by Mr. W. B. Maclaren, may be signally prospered by God, and the C. D. Acts swept away from India, as they have been from Great Britain.

TENBY, SOUTH WALES.—Mr. A. Peerless, hon. sec. of the Y.M.C.A., writes that a very successful Gospel mission has been held in this town by Rev. E. Davidson. The effort was unsectarian, and had the hearty co-operation of the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. The power of God was manifest not only in the Gospel meetings, but in the Bible-readings, which were times of heart-searching The converts have been commended to the care of the different sections of Christ's Church in the town.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XII.—HAGAR, THE SLAVE GIRL.—GEN. xvi.

WE none of us know all that is involved when we tear ourselves from the familiar scenes of our Harans to follow God into the lands of separation which lie beyond the river. The separated life cannot be an easy one. We may dimly guess this as we step out into the untried and unknown; but God graciously veils from our eyes that which would needlessly startle and daunt us; unfolding to us his requirements, only as we are able to bear them.

The difficulties of the separated life arise, not from any arbitrary appointments of Divine Providence, but from the persistent manifestation of the self-life in its many Protean forms. It is absurd to say that it dies once for all in some early stage of the Christian life; and it is perilous to lead men to think so. When men think or boast it is dead, it peeps out in their very assertions, and laughs at the success of its efforts to blind them to its presence. This is the masterpiece of its art: to cajole its dupes into thinking that it is dead. Gangs of thieves always like to secure the insertion of a paragraph in the newspapers, announcing that they have left the neighbourhood, because, in the false security which is induced by the announcement, they are more able to carry out their plans of pillage.

We say, in the first moments of consecration, that we are eager, not only to be reckoned dead in the sight of God, so far as our self-life is concerned, but to be dead. And if we really mean what we say, God undertakes the work, first of revealing the insidious presence of the self-life, where we had least expected it, and then in nailing it in bitter suffering to the cross of a painful death. Oh ye who know something of the analysis of your inner life, do not your hearts bear witness that, as the light of heaven breaks with glowing glory on your souls, it reveals unexpected glimpses into the insidious workings of self; so much so that you are driven to claim, with no bated breath, first, Divine forgiveness for harbouring such a traitor, and then the interposition of Divine grace to mete out that death which is the alone condition of growth and blessedness.

There is here a very startling manifestation of the tenacity with which Abraham's self-life still survived. We might have expected that by this time it had been extinguished. The long waiting of ten slow-moving years. The repeated promises of God. The habit of contact with God Himself. All this had surely been enough to eradicate and burn out all confidence in the flesh, all trust in the activities of the self-life, all desire to help himself to the realisation of the promises of God. Surely, now, this much-tried man will wait until, in his own time and way, God shall do as He has said. He would not take a shoe-lachet, or a thread, from the King of Sodom, because He was so sure that God would give him all the land. Nor was he disappointed, when God said, "I am thy exceeding great reward." And similarly we might have expected that he would have strenuously resisted every endeavour to induce him to realise for himself God's promise about his seed. Surely he will wait meekly and quietly for God to fulfil his own word, by means best known to Himself.

Instead of this he listened to the reasoning of expediency, which happened to chime in with his own thoughts, and to gratify the promptings of his spirit to do something to secure the result of which God had spoken. Simple-hearted faith waits for God to unfold his purpose, sure that He will not fail. But mistrust, reacting on the self-life, leads us to take matters into our own hands, and to offer the sacrifice before Samuel comes.

I.—THE QUARTER WHENCE THESE REASONINGS CAME.—"Sarah said unto Abraham." Poor Sarah! She had not had her husband's advantages. When he had been standing in fellowship with God, she had been quietly pursuing the routine of household duty, pondering many things.

It was clear that Abraham should have a son, but it was not definitely said by God that the child would be hers. Abraham was a strict monogamist, but the laxer notions of those days warranted the filling of the harem with others, who occupied an inferior rank to that of the principal wife, and whose children, according to common practice, were reckoned as if they were her own. Why should not her husband fall in with those laxer notions of the marriage vow? Why should he not marry the slave-girl, whom they had either purchased in an Egyptian slave market, or acquired, amongst the other gifts with which Pharaoh had sent them away?

It was an heroic sacrifice for her to make. She was willing to forego a woman's dearest prerogative, to put another in her own place, and to surrender a position to which she had a perfect right to cling, even though it seemed to clash with the direct promise of God. But her love to Abraham, and her despair of having a child of her own, and her inability to conceive of God fulfilling his word by other than natural means: all these things combined to lead her to make the proposal from which, in another aspect, her wifely nature must have shrunk. Love in Sarah did violence to love.

No one else could have approached Abraham with such a proposition, with the slightest hope of success. But when Sarah made it, the case was altered. The suggestion might have flitted across his own mind, in his weaker moments, only to be instantly resisted and put aside, as doing a grievous wrong to his faithful wife. But, as now it emanated from her, there seemed less fear of it. It was supported by the susceptibilities of natural instinct. It was consistent with the whisperings of doubt. It seemed to be a likely expedient for realising God's promise. And, without demur or reference to God, he fell in with the proposal. "Abram hearkened to the voice of Sarai."

It is ever hard to resist temptation when it appeals to natural instinct or to distrusting fear. At such an hour, if the Saviour be not our Keeper, there is small hope of our being able to resist the double assault. But the temptation is still more perilous when it is presented, not by some repellent fiend, but by some object of our love, who, like Sarah, has been the partner of our pilgrimage, and who is willing to sacrifice all in order to obtain a blessing which God has promised, but has not yet bestowed.

We should be exceedingly careful before acting on the suggestions of any who are not as advanced as we are in the Divine life. What may seem right to them may be terribly wrong for us. And we should be especially careful to criticise and weigh any proposals which harmonise completely with the tendencies of our self-life. "If the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, thou shall not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him, neither shall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare." But does not the response of the soul to such suggestions indicate how far the self-life is from being dead?

II. THE SORROWS TO WHICH THEY LED.—As soon as the end was obtained, the results, like a crop of nettles, began to appear in that home, which had been the abode of purity and bliss, but which was now destined to be the scene of discord. Raised into a position of rivalry with Sarah, and expectant of giving the long-desired son to Abraham, and a young master to the camp, Hagar despised her childless mistress, and took no pains to conceal her contempt.

This was more than Sarah could endure. It was easier to make one heroic act of self-sacrifice, than to bear each day the insolent carriage of the maid whom she had herself exalted to this position. Nor was she reasonable in her irritation; instead of assuming the responsibility of having brought about the untoward event, so fraught with misery to herself, she passionately upbraided her husband, saying: "My wrong be upon thee; the Lord judge between me and thee."

How true this is to human nature! We take one false step, unsanctioned by God. And when we begin to discover our mistake, we give way to outbursts of wounded pride. But instead of chiding ourselves, we turn upon others, whom we may have instigated to take the wrong course, and we bitterly reproach them for wrongs of which they at most were only instruments, whilst we were the final cause.

Out of this fleshly expedient sprang many sorrows. Sorrow to Sarah, who on this occasion, as afterwards, must have drunk to the dregs the cup of bitter gall; of jealousy and wounded pride; of hate and malice, which always destroy peace and joy in the nature, from which they stream as the fiery lava torrents from a volcanic crater. Sorrow to Hagar, driven forth as an exile from the home of which she had dreamt to become the mistress, and to which she had thought herself essential. Ah, bitter disappointment! Sorrow to Abraham, loath to part with the mother of the only child that had blessed his life, and stung by the unwonted bitterness of his wife's reproaches.

If any should read these words who are tempted to use any expedients of human devising for the attainment of ends, which in themselves may be quite legitimate, let them stand still, and take to heart the teachings of this narrative. For, as surely as God reigns, shall every selfish expedient involve us in unutterable and heartrending sorrow. "From this time shalt thou have wars."

III. THE VICTIM WHOSE LIFE-COURSE WAS SO LARGELY INVOLVED.—We cannot be surprised at the insolent bearing of the untutored slave-girl. It was only what might have been expected. But we are grieved to see in her only one of myriads that have been sacrificed to the whim or passion, to the expediency or selfishness, of men. Innocent and light-hearted, she might have been the happy wife of some man in her own station of life, and the mother of a happy family. But, taken as she was from her true station, and put into a position in which she was a mother without being a lawful wife, what could her lot be but misery in the home in which she had no proper status, and at last in the exiled and homeless wanderings to which Sarah's bitter jealousy twice drove her; once for a time—afterwards for ever?

Abraham, for the sake of the peace of his home, dared not interpose between his wife and her slave. "Behold," said he, "thy maid is in thy hand; do to her as it pleaseth thee." Not slow to act upon this implied consent, the irate mistress dealt so bitterly with the girl that she fled from her face, and took the road, trodden by the caravans, towards her native land.

"The angel of the Lord" (and here, for the first time, that significant expression is used, which is held by many to express some evident manifestation of the Son of God, in angel-guise) "found her by a well of water," which was well known in the days of Moses. There, worn, and weary, and lonely, she sat down to rest. How often does the angel of the Lord still find us in our extremity; when we are running away from the post which was assigned to us; when we are evading the cross. And what questions could be more pertinent, whether to Hagar or to us: "Whence comest thou? and whither wilt thou go?" Reader, answer those two questions, ere thou readest further. What is thine origin? and what thy destiny?

Then there followed the distinct command, which applies to us evermore, "Return, and submit." The day would come when God Himself would open the door, and send Hagar out of that house (chap. xxi. 12). But until that happened, after thirteen years had rolled away, she must remain where she was, bearing the burden and fulfilling the duty as best she might. "Return and submit."

We are all prone to act as Hagar did. If our lot is hard, and our cross is heavy, we start off in a fit of impatience and wounded pride. We shirk the discipline, we evade the yoke, we make our own way out of the difficulty. Ah! we shall never get right thus. Never! We must retrace our steps, we must meekly bend our necks under the yoke. We must accept the lot which God has ordained for us, even though it be the result of the cruelty and sin of others. We shall conquer by yielding. We shall escape by returning. We shall become free by offering ourselves to be bound. "Return and submit." By and by, when the lesson is perfectly learnt, the prison-door will open of its own accord.

Meanwhile the heart of the prodigal is cheered by promise (ver. 10). The angel of the Lord unfolds all the blessed results of obedience, like the progeny of a fruitful mother. And as the spirit considers these, it finds the homeward way no longer lined by flints, but soft with flowers.

Nor is this all, but in addition to promise, there breaks on the soul the conception of One who lives and sees, who sees each tear and pang, and who lives to avenge the wronged, and to defend the helpless.

SOUTHSEA MISSION, PORTSMOUTH. — Mr. Jno. Denning, Ebenezer Cottage, Inglis-road, Southsea, Portsmouth, writes:—During the past seven years we have had the privilege of pitching a tent on Southsea Common during the summer months for the preaching of the Gospel; many thousands have heard, and not a few have believed to the salvation of their souls. We will be delighted to commence on Saturday, June 3, if our friends supply the needed means; £10 is needed to pay for repairing the tent that was much damaged last autumn by the gales, and to work it successfully we need about £5 per week. Several able evangelists have promised us their help.

Leaves from my Note-Book.

By Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life."

VIII.—SAVED TO SAVE.

A lady came to me in much trouble one day, having heard me say that we were saved to save others. Not saved to go to heaven when we die; but to live for the glory of God.

"How can I live for the glory of God?" she asked. "I have as much as I can do to work out my own salvation."

I said, "Sit down, that we may talk a little about this matter. First, let me ask you, are you working for your salvation—that is, in order to attain it?"

"Oh, no," she answered; "I know better than that, thank God. I am saved not by my works but by the finished work of Christ—I believe in Him."

"Praise God," I said; "but please tell me what you mean."

"I mean," she replied, "that as a saved one, I have to work out, and secure, my final salvation."

After a few more questions, I elicited that this lady did not really believe in salvation here upon earth; but probation. She believed that she was saved, as she called it, but only conditionally; her final salvation into heaven was dependent upon her faithfulness to grace.

"You are mistaken at starting," I said. "The salvation which God has provided for us is full and complete, and must be altogether accomplished by Himself, not partly by Him and partly by you. It is a salvation from the penalty, power, and presence of sin. Here we have three words each beginning with the letter P, which fully describe this salvation. Christ died to save us from the past, He rose and lives to keep us in the present, and He is coming again in the future to take us to Himself in a glorified state. He is our salvation from beginning to end."

"Surely that is Calvinistic teaching, is it not?" said the lady, as if she was afraid of me, or took me for a heretic.

I repeated, "Christ died, rose from the dead, and He is coming again. He redeemed us, spirit, soul, and body, and, believing in Him, we have this threefold salvation."

"What, do we have all this at once, and may we live as we like?"

"Oh, dear no," I answered; "we should give ourselves up as lost sinners to be saved—as saved sinners to be kept—and as saved and kept believers, we should be looking for the Lord's coming to change our bodies, and take us to Himself. The Apostle Paul says: 'I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him until that day.'"

The lady remarked, "It will take me a long time to learn all that; I have been brought up in a very different school."

I said, "It is a pity you were not in the school of Christ, where only the Scriptures are taught."

"Then, according to you," she said, "I have nothing to do, but to sit down."

"No, friend," I replied, "do not mistake me. You did not obtain your salvation that way; you believed in Jesus, and were saved. In the same manner, believe in a living Christ, and you will be kept. Keep on trusting in Him, and then you will find that you have a work to do for Him."

"Do you really think," she asked, "that I could ever do anything for the Lord?"

"Most certainly," I replied, "your salvation was freely given to you for this very object. The Garden of Eden was given to Adam, and then he was told to dress and to keep it—that is, make it profitable. You are put into salvation, that you may live and walk in such a manner as to recommend it to others.

"Suppose," I said, "you have an estate given to you with a silver mine in it; what good would that mine be to you or anyone else if you did not work it out? You have a rich treasure given with your salvation, in the privilege of making other people as happy as you are. This is the way to work out your own salvation; it will then prove to be a mine of endless treasure to you, and to others besides."

"Oh, dear, no," said the lady, shaking her head; "that joy is not for such a poor weak creature as myself. I may as well try to climb into heaven!"

"Shall I tell you something?" I said. "I have more hope of you in your utter inability than if you said, 'Very well, I will do it.'"

"But how can I possibly do any such work as this?" she asked.

I replied, "There is only one way to do it—that is, to give yourself to Christ, as one who desires to do his will, and ask Him, 'Lord, what wouldst Thou have me to do?' Then leave yourself in his hands, and be sure you will receive an answer."

She went away, and in a few weeks' time came again to see me with a very different appearance.

I said, "You are looking happier to-day?"

"Indeed," she replied, "I have reason to do so. I can see now the threefold character of salvation, and long to tell others about deliverance from the penalty, power, and presence of sin. But how can I begin? What shall I do?"

"My dear friend," I said, "I am not your master; ask this same question before the Lord, for Scripture tells us that 'it is God that worketh in us to will and to do of his good pleasure.' It is for this reason that I urge you to give yourself to Him, that He may come and dwell in you by the Holy Spirit. Then He will work in you, and by you. Your work is not yours, but the Lord's.

"You should fear and tremble, lest you take it out of his hands, or go before you are sent. Follow his will, and be his servant, and He will then use you for the work He has for you to do. All who are converted are created anew in Christ Jesus unto good works. Every tree has its own fruit, and so each believer has his own separate work. When you have found your life-work, you will have liberty, and be in your proper element, like a bird in the air, or a fish in the water."

She looked amazed, so I went on to say, "Fear not; God can make you willing to do your life-work, and He also can make you able to accomplish it. Remember, your weakness is no barrier to that, but rather the other way. The strong must be made weak before God can use them; but you are weak to begin with."

This lady was enabled to give herself entirely to the Lord's work; and, to her great joy, found Him true to his promise. She was surprised one day by a visit from a lady who used to criticise and laugh at her devotions. Now she had come with tears to ask, "What shall I do to be saved?"

Our friend was for the moment at a loss for an answer; but, after a short pause, she said, "I remember what I was told to do when I was anxious like you; it was to believe that Jesus took my place on the cross to give me his place before God." She was enabled to bring this inquirer to pardon and peace, and afterwards induced her to be a helper in the work in which she was engaged.

In this and such ways this lady and her friend were led to go forward in saving others, as they themselves had been saved.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE IN INDIA. — The twentieth annual report of the Punjab Auxiliary Bible Society states with regret that no progress has yet been made in printing anything of the Punjab Old Testament, although something has been done by way of revising the work achieved by Mr. Harvey, whose labours have extended over many years. Last year was one of increased activity in the publication and reprinting of books and tracts by the Punjab Religious Book Society, the twentieth report of which has also just been issued.

REPEAL, NOT SUSPENSION.

LADIES IN COUNCIL.

No wonder Mr. Wm. Fowler should ask how things that are so clear to the ordinary understanding can with such great difficulty be brought home to the official mind. This question he put at the close of a large and enthusiastic meeting in the Lower Exeter Hall, on Friday afternoon, at the annual meeting of the Ladies' National Association for the Abolition of State Regulated Vice. Such abolition was decreed by the British Parliament two years ago, and one would naturally think that if the system is too bad for England it must be equally bad for India. Officialdom, however, thinks otherwise, and Mr. Fowler very charitably supposes that this peculiar density of the official mind arises more from ignorance than from indifference. We think he is too charitable, because it is the business of officials to know things at which outsiders can only guess. One might fairly suggest some other cause, such as a perverted moral sense, or the lack of any moral sense at all. However, if it be true that the officials at the India Office are suffering from ignorance they are now in a fair way of being enlightened. If they could have been in Exeter Hall on Friday afternoon, they would have learned a good many things, one of them being that the public agitation for the total and unconditional repeal of these Acts and regulations in India will go on till it has the same satisfactory issue as it had in England. It will be well for the official mind to endeavour to take in at least that much.

The biggest speech of the afternoon was that of Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., who described the existing situation in Parliament as to Indian repeal. After paying a warm tribute of admiration to Mr. and Mrs. Dyer for their courage and pertinacity in unearthing the horrors of the regulation system in India, the right hon. gentleman said he felt sure the friends of the movement in this country would not shrink from the duty that is now imposed upon them. He recited his own question, and Sir John Gorst's answer in the House of Commons, as reported in our last issue. But more important still, he said, is the dispatch which Lord Cross has just sent out to the Indian Government. It has not yet been printed or distributed, but Mr. Stansfeld had seen a copy, and was able to furnish the meeting with a reliable abstract of the contents. In this dispatch Lord Cross expresses the opinion that though the C. D. Acts in India may have done good from a sanitary point of view, the Government have concluded that it is no longer desirable to maintain them within their present limited area; and as the Government are not prepared to extend their application, they have decided to—— repeal them? nay, but suspend their application. The virtual effect of this decision is that while the authorities deem it undesirable to maintain the Acts, they yet do maintain them. Lord Cross goes on to say that the suspension must be carefully watched, and the results communicated to him from time to time. As to the Cantonment regulations in force in a very large number of places throughout India, while the Secretary of State for India deprecates the compulsory examination of those affected by them, he suggests a revision of the rules, in the direction, not of repressing the evil, but of regulating it. He refers to the notorious "Memorandum," issued by Major-General Chapman to commanding officers, and expresses his deep regret that it should have been issued, and cannot reconcile its contents with previous reports. Practically little has been gained from this despatch of Lord Cross's. When he was Indian Viceroy, Lord Ripon wished entirely to repeal these Acts, but the then Secretary for India, Lord Hartington, objected, because the home question had not then been settled. Lord Dufferin, the present Viceroy, notwithstanding the great victory for purity and right in the House of Commons two years ago, seeks to defeat the repealers by the ruse of simply suspending the Acts, retaining the power to reimpose them at any favourable moment; the Cantonment regulations he does not even propose temporarily to suspend, but only to revise. After a reference to the hollowness of the contention that these regulations have any hygienic value, Mr. Stansfeld controverted the remark of Lord Cross that this matter was within the discretion of the Indian Government, and therefore nothing more can be done by the central authorities at home. If, said the speaker, Lord Hartington could prevent Lord Ripon from repealing the Acts, showing that the discretion of the Indian Government was not absolute, the Secretary of State is surely in the same position now. What must be done now, in Parliament and out of it, is to show the Government that public opinion in England is determined that these enactments and regulations

SHALL BE ABSOLUTELY REPEALED.

The friends of repeal in Parliament had no alternative but to take up the gauntlet thrown down by the Government, and hence the motion which will come on for discussion in the House of Commons on June 5. If this motion fails, then the appeal will be transferred to the nation at large, and the work that was done before may have to be done over again. As for himself, Mr. Stansfeld declared, amid approving cheers, that whatever seemed to him and his friends necessary in advancing the cause of freedom, purity, and justice, while he had life, he would do.

Excellent and telling speeches followed from various ladies and gentlemen. Mrs. Fawcett said this movement was closely allied to the whole question of uplifting the social life of India. Mrs. Eva Maclaren, the secretary of the Association in London, spoke of having sent a memorial for signature to a high dignitary in the Episcopal Church, who declined to sign it on the ground that he was not "master of the circumstances." Surely it was his duty to make himself master of the circumstances in such a case. She made an eloquent appeal to ladies to join in this crusade. An Indian gentleman, resident in this country, pressed home the responsibility of England with respect to India, and said that these enactments were working a sad deterioration in the Anglo-Indian character.

Professor Stuart gave a suggestive account of the Parliamentary tactics of the authorities, and also exposed the double dealing of the officials in India in withholding certain documents from the authorities at home, and in falsifying the statistics. He also quoted from documents implicating the officials as professional and systematic procurers of young and attractive women in India to gratify the passions of the soldiers.

Mr. W. B. Maclaren (who is to move the resolution in the House of Commons on June 5), and Mr. William Fowler, late M.P. for Cambridge, and one of the earliest friends of repeal, having briefly spoken, Dr. Clifford said that for over half a century the Christian churches of this country had been at work in India, and it is a shameful thing that we should only now be learning of such enormities as are done in the name of England.

A MISSIONARY'S TESTIMONY.

The closing words by Mrs. Clark, a lady missionary from India, were perhaps the most important of all. Astonishment has been expressed, she said, that missionaries have not done more in India with reference to this subject. The fact is they are not very much in touch with military life. No soldier would bring these things to the notice of the missionary. At the same time, the missionaries hear a good deal about them from the natives. No Christian instruction can be given to them on the subject of purity without these abominable Acts being cast up in our faces. Those who are medical missionaries, as I have been for many years, constantly come into contact with this question. The people have been told that the system is absolutely necessary, and no one dares to go against the Government. But they often ask us if it is really the order of the Government that their women should be taken to supply Government brothels. In such cases we have no answer to give, because unhappily it is too true. I have had these women come to my dispensary, entreating me to find some excuse for them, or to take them into my employ, so that they might in some way escape this life. Of course there are a few of the profligate class, but many of them are coerced into that life, and I have known cases in which great violence has been used by the military police in order to compel submission. For it must be admitted that the Anglo-Indian official is too often a rather brutal individual. Despotism creeps into the English character out there, and many who would be ashamed to do such things at home, give way to violent passion in India, where their rule is absolute. These Acts ought to be entirely repealed, not only on account of the bad influence on the natives, but for their deteriorating effects on the English soldiers. Many an English lad who has been in my Bible-class, when he has been spoken with about drunkenness, had said, "Well, but look at that other temptation;" and he has drifted away into the evil system, beyond reclamation. The demoralisation caused by these Government regulations has been very great. Many of the godly men have earnestly prayed in our meetings that these things might be put an end to. I have no hesitation in saying that they are a great hindrance to missionary work. The natives constantly bring it before us. If it were not for our British troops in India, missionary work would have grown far more than it has. Our troops, alas! are not models of innocence. You may hear a native Hindoo mother saying to her child, "If you are passionate and lustful, you will be born again an Englishman!" That is not very flattering to our English pride. I do pray that these things may come to an end. Many poor Indian widows, of whom we have heard so much lately, are drafted into the Government brothels. That is not generally known, but it is a fact. A petition, signed by 1300 missionaries in India, has lately been sent home to the various Missionary Societies in England, and we trust such a feeling will be aroused as will cause the repeal of these Acts.

Early in the meeting an interesting report was submitted by the secretary, Miss Whitehead. Mrs. Josephine Butler, who presided, did not deliver any address, as she was suffering from bronchitis, but she briefly expressed her satisfaction that there is now a strong branch of the Ladies' National Association in London.

MEETING IN EXETER HALL.

There was an excellent attendance at the great evening meeting in Exeter Hall, convened for the special purpose of demanding instant repeal throughout India. Earnest prayer having been offered by Mrs. Baxter, Mr. J. B. Wookey said that letters of sympathy had been received from 477 ministers, representing all sections of the Church of Christ.

Mr. F. W. Crossley, chairman, in the course of a strongly-worded address, said the thing that struck him most painfully was the fact that the atrocities described in Mr. Dyer's letters were not done by heathens to Christians, but by professed Christians to so-called heathen. He quoted the recent testimony of a native Indian about the boasted professions of England and her inconsistent practice. Let us have done with such hypocrisy. It is now demonstrated scientifically that what is morally wrong is not even in any degree physically right. Mr. Crossley expatiated indignantly on the heartlessness of the officials towards the poor diseased and dying victims of their lust. It makes one loathe the very name of Englishman. In the replies of our officials in Parliament we look in vain for any expression of sympathy with these unhappy women. The terms on which Sir John Gorst has replied have been too callous to satisfy us if he were dealing with some question of cruelty to animals instead of our fellow-subjects. If our rulers do not publicly disown these practices by a proclamation, and make all amends to the enforced sufferers still within their power, is it possible that we can be content? Let the natives know of our repentance, and let our young soldiers be taught and helped to live purely, instead of being lured by lies about health into the nethermost hell.

Rev. H. P. Hughes moved a resolution expressing indignation at the state of things lately laid bare, and pledging the meeting to continued agitation till repeal is gained. He said he agreed with Thomas Carlyle, while there is plenty of mercy for penitent sinners there must be no whitewashing of scoundrels. The primary fact he should like to see widely circulated was the notorious and atrocious Circular Memorandum from the Quartermaster General, sent by order of Sir Frederick Roberts, Commander-in-Chief in India. Sir Frederick once received the freedom of the City of London, but it will take a great deal to wipe out the stain that such a circular has cast upon his name. Mr. Hughes proceeded to read extracts from official papers revealing in all its naked horror the system of procuring "young and attractive" women, by military command, and of treating them worse than beasts of the field. Can it be possible that Englishmen will permit such things to go on? The question was responded to by the deeply-stirred audience with shouts of "No," and cries of "Shame!" A Parsee from Bombay, who visited him lately, bitterly complained that Great Britain had imposed this system on his fellow-countrymen. Could anything be more humiliating to a Christian Englishman? We must not be deceived any longer by Government reticence and chicanery. These officials are not the masters, but the servants of the English people. If this atrocious thing is wrong for England, it is doubly wrong for India. Let us bring pressure to bear on our representatives, and make them to understand that every one member who votes against the motion on June 5 will be denounced on every platform and from every pulpit in the land.

The resolution was seconded by Mrs. Richardson, of York, who said the hearts of the women of England, after securing release for themselves, must surely go out towards their poor downtrodden, helpless sisters in India. English women will not cease their efforts till victory is gained. Let the Christian public of India know that it is not the Christian public of England which imposes this terrible burden on their land.

Mrs. Baxter said only the previous day an appeal came from a hospital in India asking for two Christian workers, and telling of a poor young Russian Jewess who had been sold into that infamous slavery; happily, she was delivered and sent back to her own land. How is it that England is governed so much by Pagan law instead of Christian law? Our Government is not Christian, and its doings are in direct opposition to the commands of God. Even the Mohammedan and the Buddhist regulate their lives according to the dictates of their religion. Alas, that those who call themselves Christians should belie the teaching of their Master. The resolution was adopted by acclamation.

Mr. J. B. Wookey, in a strong appeal for funds towards sustaining this agitation, said that all the workers were honorary, and everything subscribed would go to the payment of inevitable expense, justly made special reference to the devoted and most unwearied service of Mr. Maurice Gregory, the acting hon. secretary of the Gospel Purity Association, who had prepared the monster map, forty-eight feet by twenty-four, that hung across the hall, and contained the diagrams which have at various times appeared in our pages.

Sir Erasmus Phillips, vicar of Warminster, said the last time he spoke in Exeter Hall he lost a gold watch, but he would rather lose twenty gold watches, if he had them, than be silent on this great question. He had fondly believed that the system, when it was repealed in England, had been abolished all over the British Empire, but he had been sadly deceived. National sins must be expiated by national judgments, and we want to remember, that whatever may be the state of our military defences, it is righteousness alone which is the true defence of a nation.

On rising to second the resolution, Prof. Stuart received from the assembly a very hearty greeting. He hoped such a gathering would convince the India Office that the Christian people of this country will not accept any shuffle or any sham settlement. The permanent officials in the India Office are the really responsible persons, as they supply erroneous information to the Parliamentary spokesmen. In further commenting on the strange action of the authorities, Prof. Stuart quoted from official documents, proving that Lord Hartington, when he was Secretary of State for India, interfered to prevent the repeal proposed by Lord Ripon: therefore it is quite competent for the present Secretary of State to interfere in favour of repeal. The Acts, he went on to say, on the authority of the Army Sanitary Commission, are a gigantic hygienic failure. Indeed, under the regulations, the ratio of disease has grown instead of being diminished. The Professor stirred the meeting to its depths by unfolding the duplicity of the Indian officials who have withheld the most incriminating documents, and who have cooked the figures. Surely we may well say "Woe unto you who have made iniquity into a law."

Dr. Clifford said we had heard enough, not only to enlighten us as to the facts, but to stiffen our resolution that agitation must go on till the evil thing is swept away. The plain English of the matter is that our Government is occupied in a huge brothel-keeping business. Are we not imperilling our very existence as a governing power in India? Looking at the past history of the world we cannot forecast anything else than national shame, decay, and ultimate extinction, unless we mend our ways. This is a distinctly Christian movement, in favour of the lost ones who are actually thrust by the authorities into evil ways. The God-given Deborah in our holy agitation (Mrs. Butler) is still with us, and there are many tokens of encouragement on every hand. Let every Christian man and woman become a centre of influence; let us as individuals and as churches apply our religion to our politics, and make our legislators to feel the weight of our power.

A most touching ovation awaited Mrs. Josephine Butler. She pathetically protested against these Indian women being spoken of as prostitutes. They are taken by force from innocent homes. The name of "prostitute" ought to be transferred to the Governor-General, the Quartermaster-General, and such officials who prostitute the laws of our country. She appealed to her sister women to demand that the Imperial Government shall wash its hands of the blood of its subjects. We must work, not only for India, but for our sisters everywhere. We must root the system out of the whole earth. Mrs. Butler, owing to loss of voice, was obliged at this point to conclude her address, and sat down amid the sympathetic cheers of the audience. The resolution, which desired that a full report of the meeting be sent to every minister of the Gospel in the country, was seconded, in a brief speech, by Mr. R. C. Morgan, and heartily adopted.

The Bishop of Waipau, in moving a resolution of thanks to Mr. Dyer and the conductors of the Christian journals who had published his letters, said he could tell from personal observation of the working of this system under the very shadow of the residence of the Indian Viceroy, in Calcutta. He hoped the sense of Christian England, being now awakened, would proceed to abolish the system without further delay. Rev. Harry Jones said much surprise had often been expressed at the failure of Christianity throughout the world. He thought he could now to some extent understand the reason. The resolution of thanks being carried, Mr. Crossley terminated the proceedings with the benediction.

A full report of this meeting will immediately be published in separate form; particulars in our next.

We have received the following letter:—

My Dear Sir,—I felt at the meeting to-night that some medical man should have spoken after the able speech of Professor Stuart. The majority of my profession are in favour of the Acts, and the argument used against us, the minority, is, "Why should you allow a disease to spread when you can prevent it?" and, "Are you not criminal in not doing your utmost to prevent future generations of children to be born containing the seeds of diseases which are the consequence of unprotected vice?" After the convincing evidence that Professor Stuart brought forward to-night, we can now say that it has been proved (by statistics that are not cooked) that the disease spread almost unhindered during the years that the Acts were in force, and, therefore, it appears to me that the only possible reason for their maintenance is cut away.

We are a practical people, and our main question with regard to any measure is, "Does it pay?" As this measure is proved not to pay, and moreover its administration costs money, the practical Briton (to say nothing of the professing Christian) should urge on our Government the total repeal throughout the Empire of so unpractical a measure, and one so destructive of body and soul.—Yours faithfully,

London, May 18. H. S. (M.D.)

NOTES FROM THE NORTH.

SALVATION ARMY.

On Wednesday and Thursday last week General Booth conducted all-day conferences in Glasgow. The topic for discussion was, "The Christianity of Christ."

MR. QUARRIER'S HOMES.

On Thursday afternoon a largely attended meeting was held in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, to bid farewell to 120 boys and girls from Mr. Quarrier's Homes on their departure from Canada. Mr. Quarrier stated that during the past year he had rescued nearly 500 children. He never had less money than he needed, and never more. At the conclusion of the meeting a large company went with the children to see them embark, Mr. and Mrs. Quarrier accompanying the band to Canada.

THE DIFFICULTIES AT LIVINGSTONIA.

A letter has been received from Dr. Kerr Cross, of Lake Nyassa, containing further particulars as to the Arab disturbances. Dr. Cross says that on arriving at Mweni-Wandă, he found the mission property intact, and has been informed that all the natives from Nyassa to Tanganyika are on the side of the missionaries. He also adds that up to the time of writing he had been entirely free from fighting, and was much concerned as to what action he should take in the matter. He remained at Chirenji for fully two months entirely alone during the war, and cut off from all communication with his fellow-countrymen. He only left the mission station when his life was in imminent peril.

FOREIGN LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

A discussion took place in the United Presbyterian Synod, in connection with the Liquor Traffic on the West Coast of Africa and in India. In presenting a report on the subject, Rev. J. Aitken, referring to Africa, said the difficulty was that the British Government had not universal control on the coast. Mr. Muir said he had lately called upon all the Glasgow merchants who were engaged in the African traffic, and one of them had written out a statement declaring that a strong desire existed that this traffic in strong drink should be regulated. The Synod unanimously agreed to memorialise the Government to call an International Congress with a view to united action in prohibiting and suppressing the traffic on the Western Coast of Africa, and in the islands of the Western Pacific.

MR. JOHN BARNABAS BAIN, who for about twenty years has been engaged in evangelistic work, has been appointed superintendent of the Liverpool Town Mission.

DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.

Exeter Hall seldom wears such a gala dress for a May meeting as it did on Wednesday afternoon last week, when the claims of the Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen brought together a splendid audience, notwithstanding the fact that a charge was made for admission. The façade of the gallery was adorned with groups of bright bunting. About the platform were models of ships and other symbols of seafaring business, while along the roof of the hall hung a row of triangular flags, each bearing the name of a Mission vessel.

"The Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad," was a verse of the lesson read by Rev. W. A. Bathurst, and the words formed an excellent keynote for the entire proceedings, which largely took the form of praise and thanksgiving to God for the blessing He has bestowed on this young but beneficent society.

Sir James Ferguson, Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, who presided, said he had a spontaneous message from Her Majesty the Queen to deliver to the meeting. She had requested Sir Henry Ponsonby, her Private Secretary, to write and say how deeply she was interested in the success of the work. Of course the audience could do nothing less than give three rousing cheers for Her Majesty, and afterwards sing a verse of the National Anthem. The Chairman, resuming his speech, said that was the best possible answer to the Royal message. Among the many objects advocated in Exeter Hall, none could be more worthy of support than the cause of the fishermen, whose lives are passed on the stormy and perilous deep. The Mission is now well established, and has borne abundant fruit. The right hon. gentleman drew a pathetic picture of the hardships these men have to undergo from stress of heavy weather, the risk of accidents, and the lack of spiritual privileges. Surely there is ample room here for Christian and philanthropic effort, and he was delighted to see present so many sons of the sea, who had come to testify to the reality of the work. As a humble member of the Government, he was glad to be there to say how much the country owes to the Mission. He was further glad that the conscience of the Powers of Europe had been awakened, and they had combined to prevent the liquor traffic in the North Sea. The Chairman referred very cordially to Mr. Mather's book, "Nor'ard of the Dogger," and strongly advised any who had not read it to do so without delay. He understood there was some attempt on foot to destroy the religious character of the Mission. He could only regard such an attempt as the devil's work. Sir James spoke of the importance of the Christian faith, and its consolations, especially to those who run the risk of being suddenly swept into eternity.

Mr. E. J. Mather, the founder and director of the Mission, said the Queen's message was to him especially gratifying. This led him to allude to the recent donation of £50 from Her Majesty, and her desire that the first hospital ship should bear her name. Mr. Mather extolled the bravery of the smacksmen in the North Sea, and proceeded briefly to sketch the origin and the wonderful progress of the work. It can no longer be said, as was said to him seven years since, that "the folks ashore care nothing about the fishermen." To-day there are eight Mission ships, well fitted and found, ministering to the temporal, mental, and spiritual wants of the men. The Government have given them special facilities as to the supply of tobacco, so that the reign of the baleful coper, it may be hoped, is past and gone. The Mission vessels were two years ago burdened with a mortgage debt of £10,000; now, thank God, every penny of the debt is paid. This was part of the answer of "the people ashore" to the appeal of the fishermen. As to the Mission being a charity, he thought we could not say much about that in reference to those to whom we as a community owe a deep debt for the sacrifices they make on our behalf. One of the debts we still owe them is better medical provision, and he looked forward to the time when every fishing fleet will have its floating hospital and its regular medical attendant. The first of these hospital ships, the Queen Victoria, is now building at Great Yarmouth, and, of course, she must be maintained. A reserve fund is wanted for this purpose. The ship will cost £1200 a year, which means an endowment fund of £30,000. Mr. Mather appealed specially to those who had themselves passed through severe illness or suffering to give a thankoffering towards this good object. Others who had lost dear ones might perpetuate the memory of those friends by helping to succour the men so sorely beset and so far removed from the help that is at the beck of those on shore.

A little surprise awaited the meeting at this point. Mr. Miller, chairman of the Council, announced that the men of the Short Blue Fleet had put their heads together and had got a large crayon portrait of Mr. Mather for presentation to him, as a token of esteem and gratitude for the services he had rendered to them, the "Short Blue" being the first fleet to which a Mission ship was sent. The presentation was made in very appropriate terms by the admiral of this fleet; the portrait, which was an excellent one, was accompanied by a framed illuminated address. Mr. Mather, in accepting the gift, feelingly replied, and said that, above all, thanks ought to be rendered to God for his abounding goodness in connection with the Mission.

A very delightful part of the programme was the exquisite singing by Miss Lena Law of the hymn, "When I survey the wondrous cross." The audience was requested not to cheer, but we could not blame them for being so far carried away on the soaring wings of such glorious song as to break out in hearty applause.

The only resolution proposed to the meeting was the following:—

> That this meeting of subscribers recognises, with devout thankfulness to Almighty God, the splendid results achieved through the spiritual and philanthropic efforts carried on by the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen in a unique and dangerous sphere, and pledges itself to an earnest and increased support of the Mission in the future.

It was moved by Mr. Thomas B. Miller, who said the words of the inspired exclamation, "What hath God wrought!" was the only language that could be used by those who had watched the development of the work. From its very conception the history of the Mission had been one long answer to prayer. He had seen its work on the spot, and had gone from fleet to fleet in the North Sea, and heard the unsolicited testimonies of the men themselves as to the value of the operations sustained by the Mission. In seconding the resolution, Mr. F. Treves, chairman of the Hospital Committee, said a Mission such as this needed no other advocacy than the mere statement of the facts. He commented on the singular circumstance that up to the present time these large colonies of men isolated on the dreary waste of waters had remained without that medical help which we look upon as the elementary want of any community.

A fine, young, fresh-coloured, rollicking sort of fellow, Dr. W. T. Grenfell, medical officer on board the Mission ships Thomas Gray and Clulow, supported the resolution. In doing so, he gave some particulars as to the condition of the smacks last March, owing to the severe weather. Many parts of the vessels were lumps of solid ice, and nearly every ship was "crippled;" that is, they had lost some material part of their gear. He furnished interesting details of a number of cases of illness, and wounds from accident, which he himself had treated and relieved. The obvious deduction from the facts he submitted was the necessity of having qualified medical help near at hand. In many cases, where life itself is not in danger, the smacksmen lose much time through having to proceed ashore for treatment, and frequently a long period elapses before they get occupation again. Dr. Grenfell told a very interesting story indeed of his surgical experiences in the wild North Sea, and we can but hope that before another anniversary, not one, but half a dozen sons of Æsculapius will be practising in the North Sea.

The audience sang "The Smackmen's Hymn," a very fine and appropriate production by Mr. Bathurst, and set to stately music by Mr. Churchill Sibley. An opportunity was then afforded of listening to personal testimonies from the fishermen themselves. Skipper Jones, of the Mission smack Clulow, said the men in the fleet which he had left would be praying while the meeting was being held, not only that the Mission might be well supported, but that Jesus might be glorified. He told of the great good that had been done in connection with the medical work of Dr. Grenfell; the need is great, and he earnestly hoped many other doctors would find their way to the fleets. An ex-skipper, without a leg, having told the story of its loss, Skipper White, of the Ashton, said that since last year his ship had been the birthplace of many souls. He could not describe the privations and dangers that attend a smacksman's life, and he trusted in God they would soon have a hospital ship with every fleet. The skipper of the Sophia Wheatley said there was no surgeon in the Grimsby Fleet, and he had to do the best he could for the many who meet with accidents. Skipper Budd, of the smack Temple Tate, said the Mission was doing a grand and glorious work. The next to speak was ex-Skipper John Mann, the veteran salt who told Mr. Mather seven years ago, when he went out to the North Sea, how he had been praying for thirty years that something might be done for the smacksmen. He recited some of his personal experiences and those of others to show the sufferings caused by the absence of medical help, and every case related he wound up with the formula, "If our good doctor had been there, all that pain would have been saved."

Dr. Schofield, the hon. instructor of the Mission skippers, presented certificates from the National Society of Health, and also from the St. John's Ambulance Association, to several skippers, and a hearty vote of thanks to the Chairman concluded the interesting proceedings.

Another crowded and enthusiastic meeting was held in the evening, and presided over by Mr. Thomas Gray, of the Board of Trade. In speeches by Mr. Gray and Mr. Miller much information was given about the work of the Mission, similar in its purport to that supplied in the afternoon. The leading feature, however, in the proceedings was an exhibition of very fine dissolving views, illustrating the daily life of smacksmen in the North Sea. The explanatory descriptions were given by Mr. Mather, who took occasion to make a strong appeal for the support of the Mission. Characteristic testimonies were given by various smacksmen, whose hearty and stirring recitals were greatly cheered. Rev. Dr. Moore told how on a visit to the North Sea he had met with a skipper, then leading a careless life. Great was his joy to meet that skipper again in the meeting, now testifying that he had become a soldier of the Cross. The meeting throughout was thoroughly enthusiastic and enjoyable, and the proceedings of the day must have done much to inform the Christian public of the splendid work this Mission is doing among a class too long forgotten and neglected.

The Christian.

BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOLS & BIBLE MISSION.

Founded by Mrs. Bowen Thompson, 1860.

THE call up higher of supporters of the Mission, and other causes, have greatly reduced our Yearly Income, so that we closed with a Deficit of £900 last year. Unless, therefore, we can raise an extra Annual Sum of £1,000 (besides clearing the Deficit), we shall be compelled to close the following Mission Stations, viz.:—

I. The Girls' School and Bible Mission at Ainzahalteh.
II. The Girls' School and Bible Mission at Beckfaya, Mount Lebanon.
III. Boys' and Girls' School and Bible Mission at Mokhtara, Mount Lebanon.
IV. The Night School at Beyrout.
V. The Blind School at Damascus.

Also to dismiss 6 Teachers and 2 Bible Women; thus shutting open doors, taking away Gospel light from many a home, and scattering the numerous children who are attending our Day and Sunday Schools.

Several friends have already responded, and we trust others will be led to assist in increasing our Regular Income; and we would call upon all to unite with us in fervent supplications to our Heavenly Treasurer that He will incline the hearts of His faithful stewards to give a prompt and generous response to this URGENT REQUEST.

I am remain yours faithfully,
May, 1888. AUGUSTA MENTOR MOTT, Hon. Directress.

THE ANNUAL MEETING will be held in EXETER (LOWER) HALL, on THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 31, 1888, at SEVEN O'CLOCK. The Chaplain-General, Rev. Dr. EDGHILL, will preside. The following gentlemen will take part in the meeting:—General Sir A. Lawrence; General Copland Crawford; Major T. A. Freeman; Rev. W. F. R. Buckle; Rev. T. F. Falkner; Rev. R. M. Spoor.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

THE anniversary of the Railway Mission was celebrated last week, and from first to last the celebration was both hearty and promising. There was good reason for heartiness, as during the past year God has greatly blessed the organisation and prospered its agencies. Auguries of future success were found alike in the many encouragements of the past and the enthusiasm of the leaders and friends of the movement.

Throughout Wednesday and Thursday conferences were held in the Lecture Hall, at 186, Aldersgate-street, at which the delegates told of the work which had been done during the year. Most of them had cheering things to communicate, and with few exceptions it was shown that ladies had been instrumental in starting, maintaining, and developing the missions. The delegate of one large town reported with great pleasure: "Our mission does not cost us a single penny; the good ladies bear all the expense." This statement was not heard with unmixed satisfaction, as it was felt that a self-supporting basis is much to be preferred. Several delegates said that whereas years ago they did not know a single Christian railway worker, now they can count them by hundreds. From Dublin there was a very encouraging report, and progress was the key-note of what was said from Glasgow and other places in Scotland. The Mission agencies have had a beneficial effect in more directions than one; many railway men have confessed Christ, and their wives and children have also been brought under Gospel influences. The principles of total abstinence have been largely accepted, and not a few have laid aside their pipes, on grounds which were thus expressed by a Scottish brother: "We do not think it is Christlike to carry pipes in our mouths." Reporting the death of a member in a Midland town, a delegate told of a remarkable conversion. While the man was ill, a young man expressed a wish to "see a dying Christian." He went to the death-bed of the expiring saint, and what he saw and heard touched his heart, and with the thought, "Let my end be like his," the young man gave his heart to God. In many places the mission branches conduct open-air preaching, and it was pleasing to hear that at some stations railway-men always have their eyes open for opportunities to help young girls and others who, while travelling, are in need of Christian care and caution.

The EARL OF ABERDEEN presided over the PUBLIC MEETING IN EXETER HALL.

There was a large audience, and while the Mission was fully worthy of the demonstration, there was good ground for the conviction that the cordiality of the proceedings would considerably help in the further development of the work. It must have been specially cheering to Mr. Daniel Spencer, the general secretary, to see so much that could fairly be regarded as the promise of continued blessing from God upon his earnest and unremitting labours.

In a brief statement, the Secretary set forth the objects and explained the work of the Mission. During last year there was increase in every direction. In evangelistic and temperance work, in the circulation of pure and suitable literature, and in organising care for injured railway servants, a great deal was done. No fewer than 74 new branches were opened, bringing the list up to 250 in the United Kingdom, and during the year over 30,000 meetings were held. The principal evil besetting the railway servants is the drink, and the statement that ninety per cent. of the members of the Mission are total abstainers was received with loud cheers. Steps are in progress for establishing the work in India, Australia, South Africa, and Switzerland. The balance sheet, presented by Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, showed that £2400 were subscribed by the public on behalf of the Mission, and an urgent appeal was made for further help.

Lord ABERDEEN warmly commended the Mission to the travelling public. As a railway director, he addressed the audience as "fellow railway men," and emphasised the importance, from an economical point of view, of all workmen on the line being steady Christian men.

Canon WILBERFORCE made a speech characterised by great fervour and power. He spoke in terms of appreciation of the Mission, as dealing with a vast number of men on strictly Gospel principles. The fact that ninety per cent. of the members are total abstainers is, he said, just such a one as helps a weary warrior. I know nothing myself of that queer, unnameable hermaphrodite compromise called moderate drinking, and would no more speak disrespectfully of it than I would of a hollow turnip on the top of a post, with a candle inside. (Laughter.) Moderate drinking is a non-existent, amorphous bogey; there is no standard of moderate drinking, and we do not believe in it.

Proceeding to speak on the manifold evils of the drink traffic, the Canon pointed to the desolation, the broken hearts, that follow it, and styled it a great cancer pushing out its foul septic matter to the destruction of souls everywhere. He would have no dealings with it, and he said to every man and woman present: "If you want to be safe, to have a clearer brain, a sharper eye, a better temper, and a nicer complexion—women to make their husbands love and stick to them, men to make their wives care for them more, and parents to make their children stand by them in an affectionate manner—then sign the pledge, and stick to it afterwards."

Speaking of the Railway servants as a body, the Canon said: If we could but make the public realise how much they are indebted to the Railway Mission, they would put their hands down deep into their pockets to help it. I find there are about 600,000,000 passengers carried by the railways in the United Kingdom in the year, and 300,000 Railway servants. The extreme fewness of the accidents, and the rarity of anybody sustaining injury, show with what confidence we, as travellers, may place our lives in the hands of the magnificent body of men represented by this meeting. While thus serving the public, Railway servants are more exposed to injury than an army in the field, and there are, I find, some 400 violent deaths every year on our lines. Asking to which of our great industries we are most indebted for the commercial prosperity enjoyed by the nation during the past fifty years, the speaker said that he was not at all sure that it was not to the Railway interest; and those who fail to support the Mission in its endeavours on behalf of the men, must either be ignorant of their own interest or unpatriotic with regard to the welfare of the nation at large.

I would like, continued the Canon, to ask whether it is imagined that the railway-men are made better or worse by being made Christians. I contend that the power of Christianity seizes hold of, sanctifies, purifies, and invigorates every faculty that a man possesses. It does not emasculate him of his intellectual virility, and turn him out a religious simpleton; but he is a better engine-driver, a better railway-guard, a better porter, and a better platelayer, if he knows the Lord Jesus Christ than if he does not. There are men who have yet to learn that Christianity is not creed but conduct, not orthodoxy but activity, and shows its power by turning a man out conscientious in every undertaking and relation of life. It is to the interest of everybody to do all they can to support this excellent Mission, because it is based upon the principles of the Gospel of Christ.

The Canon went on to dwell upon the political aspect of the temperance question, maintaining, in some preliminary remarks, that in a work of purifying the nation, neither Liberal nor Tory, neither Home Ruler nor Unionist, neither male nor female should be accounted anything, but all should be one in the solidarity of the race and in Christ Jesus. I am not, he said, speaking party politics when I say that I trust that every man in this room who has a vote will use all his might, and protest with all his force, against the licensing clauses of the Local Government Bill. (Loud cheers.) The days are past, I imagine, when the free and enlightened electors of England will tolerate the creation of a new monopoly. Rather they would endow the disease of small pox, the cholera, or cancer, than the liquor traffic, which has done more evil than war and pestilence put together. Drink stops not at one sin; but, entailing the breach of all the Ten Commandments in one, it is now defying the kingdom of heaven more than all the other sins of the body combined.

There is no enemy of the working man, no foe of the railway interest, like the licensed liquor traffic of England. When those engaged in the trade talk about their right to receive compensation, I ask them, first of all, whether they base the claim upon law, and they say they cannot. They then state that they have a claim on the ground of equity, and I reply: Supposing I were fool enough to invest my money in a scatter-brain loan for thirteen or fourteen per cent., and I were to lose my money, could I then go about asking for compensation? I say, I took the risk when I invested my money, and did it with my eyes open. Every man who has been investing his money in the liquor trade knew that he was defying the Church of Christ, and standing in the way of the progress of the enlightened part of the working men. I tell you that the future of the liquor traffic lies in your hands, and the day will come when the working men of England shall rise in their power and swear that they will no longer have this beautiful world turned into a gaol, a lazar house, and a hell, in order that our big brewers may become millionnaires and peers. (Loud cheering.)

I like that Local Government Bill; it is a good Bill, and a progressive Bill. But the licensing clauses will not do. Those who think there should be compensation had better pay it, and not lay a burden upon the backs of those who are already overburdened with taxes. Let it be given out in the hearing of the comfortable worshippers in St. Paul's Cathedral: "Brethren, the offertory to-day will be for Messrs. Truman, Hanbury, Buxton & Co.," and we shall see how much will be given that day! (Laughter.) Compensation is really due on the other side, for broken hearts and ruined homes. But we can never be compensated for those things. The cries for compensation are ever ascending to the Lord Chief Justice of Heaven, and only by the Court of Heaven will the matter be settled.

Though a wrong may be done in regard to legislation, I am sure that our hair will not be much greyer before that wrong shall be undone. I say Mr. Ritchie has done more for the temperance movement than any man of his age. He has united us—he has got all our fists doubled. He has deliberately told the nation that he means to implant the liquor traffic more firmly than ever before. We are passing through a great crisis in that movement for which we feel we have some right to speak—for which we have laboured night and day, for which we have nearly laid down our lives, and are prepared to lay down our lives if necessary.

Several delegates spoke of the work of the Mission, and a few closing words of kindness were addressed to the meeting by Mr. T. A. Denny.

SLAVERY IN BRAZIL.—The Brazilian Chamber of Deputies has voted the immediate and unconditional abolition of slavery in Brazil.

LONDON RAILWAY MEN.—The ladies interested in the men working on the "Metropolitan" invited them to tea a few days ago. Over 600 were present. A Gospel meeting was afterwards held, and addresses given by several men testified to their having found the Lord at previous meetings. Miss Jackson, 21, Stanley-gardens, London, W., will be glad to supply the names of men to whom monthly packets may be sent.

For the Young.

"TO HIM THAT OVERCOMETH."

Rev. ii., iii.

Some years ago a regiment of our soldiers in India had their colours taken away for insubordination. They were disgraced now in the eyes of all the army, and longed to get their flag back. War was then going on, and an important fortress held by the enemy must be captured; it was situated on a hill, and its guns swept the ground before it.

The disgraced regiment was ordered to the attack, but before they advanced the commanding officer rode forward and said to them, "Men, your colours are on the top of that hill. Charge!" He meant to say that if they captured the fort from the enemy, their shame would be wiped out and the flag restored to them. They did not need another word. They charged and carried all before them. Though many of them fell, the rest pushed on until the enemy was driven out, and the fort was conquered and won, for they were strengthened by the promise held out to them.

Now, in Rev. ii. and iii. seven times over, the Lord Jesus, in stirring words, offers a grand reward "to him that overcometh." Have you made up your mind to be amongst those who conquer?

(1) The first enemy He points out is Loss of Love to Himself, coldness, and backsliding in heart. Jesus says, "I have against thee, that thou hast left thy first love."

One summer I was holding a mission at the seaside, and a lady told me that one of our Scripture Union members had something troubling her very much, and that she wanted to have a talk with me alone about it. Before long the young lady had the opportunity to tell me her trouble, and this is what she said, "I don't feel as if I loved Jesus." I was glad to hear her say that, for it is a very good sign indeed when anyone is troubled about not loving Jesus. The terrible state of many young people is that they feel no concern at all about the matter. I told that young lady that Jesus loved her, and she agreed to it. Then I told her to think most about his love to her, and not so much about hers to Him, as I was sure she would not be able to help loving Him back if she believed in and thought about his great love to her. So to conquer this enemy, think much of Jesus, think of his taking your place, think of his suffering and shame, and cruel death; and, then, if it is nothing to you, there will be good cause for fear that you are not going to be one of those who overcome.

Now, what weapons shall we use, in order to overcome? The Word of God and Prayer. If you get into a boat, and row with only one oar, it will just turn round and round; but, if you row with both oars, you make progress. So you must read your Bible, and turn what you read into prayer. The Bible is the best Prayer-book you could use, and with these weapons you may overcome.

I have found it a great help myself to get at least half an hour all alone before breakfast every morning for reading and prayer. So I hear the voice of Jesus before anyone else speaks to me, and I talk to Him before I see anyone else. If you have never done it, just try once or twice this little quiet time, alone with God. It is the secret of victory. Things go differently all day, if you begin the day with Jesus, for you find He goes with you all through it. When you come to a rough place or difficulty, He goes before, and makes it smooth. Let nothing interfere with this "quiet time." Sooner lose your breakfast for once than go without your "morning watch."

But perhaps you have never yet begun to love Christ; if so, you won't love to pray, nor to read your Bible. The first word of Jesus for you is "Come." First come, and then overcome. First get life, and then live for Jesus.

(2) Cowardice, or the fear of being persecuted for Christ's sake. "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." It will cost something to be a Christian, but it will cost more not to be one.

Many years ago a French army had invaded Germany, and one night they sent out scouts to reconnoitre round their camp. One of these, a young officer, got separated a little distance from his men, he was going through a small wood in the dark when he suddenly came upon the enemy who were stealthily advancing. Their bayonets touched his breast, and a voice whispered in his ear, "Make but the slightest noise and you are a dead man."

At once he saw that the German army must be coming up so as to take the French by surprise, and that if he did not warn them his countrymen would probably be overwhelmed. He was not a coward, but instantly shouted at the top of his voice, "Here are the enemy." The next moment he fell dead, pierced to the heart, but his devotion saved his friends from surprise and defeat. The German attack failed. You must show equal courage in serving Christ, and it may keep many of those you meet from falling a prey to the enemy of our souls.

(3) Friendship of the World. — By "the world" is meant everything that helps people to shut God out of their thoughts and out of their hearts. Sinners need to be saved, not amused, but the pleasures of the world prevent them from thinking in earnest about salvation, about Christ and eternity.

(4) Lukewarmness.—Rev. iii. 15., "Thou art neither cold nor hot." This is the state of a half-hearted Christian. See that you overcome this temptation. Be out and out for Christ; let Him have the first place, and if you are ever in doubt as to a matter being right or wrong, give Him the benefit of the doubt.

Perhaps some reader feels that he or she has been overcome by some of the seven foes here alluded to. You may yet be a conqueror. How? Listen to the words of Jesus, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if anyone hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in" (Rev. iii. 20). The Son of God, who has Himself overcome all the foes we have to fight, will come into your heart. He says, "If anyone hear my voice"—that is, any one of the lukewarm, half-hearted, or worldly Christians; any one of those who are Christians only in name, but not in reality; anyone who has been backsliding, or afraid of suffering reproach for his sake; anyone who has been trying to save himself, and get to heaven by his own efforts, whoever you are, the promise is for you.

I had been speaking on this text one day at an open-air service on the beach at the seaside, and a little Roman Catholic girl heard me, and ran home and said, "Mother, the gentleman who preaches down on the rocks says that if you open the door of your heart, the Lord Jesus will come in." The poor lady replied, "Never mind, dear; I've got my own opinions about these things."

Whose opinions have you taken, those of God or those of man? The one leads to victory, the other ends in defeat and death. You must either overcome sin, or it will overcome you. Make up your mind now, if never before. Open the door now. Receive the Lord Jesus into your heart, and then you will win the victory over sin in your everyday life, and at last you will receive the reward promised "to him that overcometh."

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, on Continent for two months; Lausanne, May 26 to June 3. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Assembly Rooms, Malvern, June 3–15; Skating Rink, Croydon, July 2—13. Mr. Martin J. Hall, Southsea May 20—26; Dundalk, May 29 to June 8. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Tooting, June 3—10. Mr. J. W. Jordan, Stroud, May 23—27. The twenty-first anniversary of the central services for South London will be held in Hawkstone Hall, Kennington-road, Tuesday, May 29, at 7 p.m.

WHAT CAN I DO TO-DAY?

What can I do to-day?
Not praise to win or glory to attain;
Not gold, or ease, or power, or love to gain,
Or pleasure gay;
But to impart
Joy to some stricken heart;
To send a heaven-born ray
Of hope, some sad, despairing
Soul to cheer;
To lift some weighing doubt;
Make truth more clear;
Dispel some dwarfing fear;
To lull some pain;
Bring to the fold again
Some lamb astray;
To brighten life for some one,
Now and here:
This let me do to-day.

IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

During last year this Society's agents found many open doors throughout Ireland, and proclaimed the Gospel with much acceptance and cheering results. Altogether 118 places were visited, and 2137 meetings held. Roman Catholics as well as Protestants, rich as well as poor, heard the word of love and life, and not a few decided to become disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The annual report is full of testimonies of the good which has lately been done. In several districts large tents were crowded with a thousand or more persons. Writing in November from Strabane Rev. M. Neill says:—

"It is generally believed that no services hitherto held by your Society have been so productive of good; and I am thankful to find so much good following. From the beginning there was much interest felt, and it gradually increased till the close. The average attendance on week nights would be, at least, 400; and I would judge that almost 800 were present at the last meeting. I cannot speak too highly of the men in charge—they proved themselves noble workmen, and were both greatly liked. Since the memorable 1859, no such awakening has been felt here."

Mr. J. Barton, of Farndrey, Dundalk, the hon. secretary, will supply information, and arrange for evangelistic meetings.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, May 27, Acts vii. 30—43; Monday, May 28, Acts vii. 44—60; Tuesday, May 29, Acts viii. 1—13; Wednesday, May 30, Acts viii. 14—25; Thursday, May 31, Acts viii. 26—40; Friday, June 1, Acts ix. 1—16; Saturday, June 2, Acts ix. 17—31.

UNEMPLOYED IN THE WEST. — There is nothing that distresses the Sisters of the West-end Wesleyan Mission so much as to be compelled to visit multitudes of men and women who are out of work and who are in great distress for want of work. If employers of all sorts would inform the Sisters at Katherine House, Montague-street, Russell-square, of vacancies, that information might prove a great mutual advantage. What the poor want above everything else is work, work, work!—Methodist Times.

METHODISM IN LONDON.—With respect to our recent remarks on this Mission, The Methodist Times of last week says:—"We assure our contemporary that we are much more interested in Christianity than in Methodism, and that if we frequently speak of Methodism, it is only because in our position we are naturally anxious to make Methodism as intensely Christian as possible. We deem it a great, although unforeseen, advantage that the West-end Mission is conducted mainly on neutral ground. That in itself is an antidote to sectarianism and bigotry. This Mission combines unsectarian and really catholic evangelism with a due provision of all the divinely-appointed ordinances of religion. The results of the attack on sin are not dissipated or lost, but carefully nurtured and sheltered, either in our own communion or in some other organised fellowship of Christians."

ZENANA MISSION IN INDIA.

Twenty-five miles from Calcutta, on the banks of the river Hooghly, there is a densely populated district, comprising the towns of Hooghly, Chinsurah, Tilinapara, and British Chandernagore. About fourteen years ago Miss Raikes commenced a Zenana Mission there, with one Hindoo school of twenty-eight pupils, and a few wealthy and high caste zenanas. It is impossible to trace in a short space the history of years. Suffice it to say that now there are five schools, with an attendance of over three hundred children, belonging to the upper classes of the native community, and about fifty zenanas are being visited. Difficulties have been removed, and doors opened in a wonderful way.

The progress of the children in Bible knowledge has been very remarkable. Quoting a few sentences from a letter, written by some influential Baboos to Miss Raikes, and given in one of her reports:—"You have changed the tone of the Hindoo zenana, by creating a taste for knowledge and truth. We trust that, with the growth and progress of this feeling, the prejudices and superstitions which are a crying shame to our zenana inmates will become things of the past, and thus their emancipation from the thraldom of ages will become complete. Allow us to thank you again for your truly Christian services in connection with the enlightenment of Indian females."

As to direct spiritual results. Some little ones have gone home to tell their parents of Jesus, and his love for them. Some of those poor women, in the seclusion of their homes, have had their lives brightened and their hearts opened to receive the truths of the Gospel, though unable, from the difficulties in the way, to make a public confession. We have further to tell of God's owning and blessing the seed sown in a wonderful manner. There are several Government schools for boys in the district, without, of course, any Bible instruction. Miss Raikes received a grant of money from a lady, for the free distribution of Bibles. Those lads from the schools flocked to her house, each anxious to possess a Bible. Some of them returned with the request to have passages explained to them; this, Miss Raikes very gladly consented to do, and ultimately a class was formed, and five decided for Christ. One of them, a high-caste Kulin Brahmin, was baptized, and endured much persecution. He is a youth of great promise, and Miss Raikes is desirous to educate him in India, as a medical missionary to his own benighted people. Should any Christian friends feel inclined to help her in this matter or in the general good work of the Zenana Mission, they may communicate with Colonel John Orr, 15, Hartington-place, Edinburgh.

PORTSMOUTH Y.M.C.A.—Last year's work began with the formal opening of the new building. since which time there has been important spiritual development. A public mid-day prayer-meeting, in which several ministers of religion have rendered assistance, has recently been established. The thirty-first report gives many details of the healthy operations of the excellent agencies of the Association.

FREEDMEN IN THE STATES.—I am home from the Southern States, over a week ago. I had a most successful winter's work among the negroes, and have been privileged to see many of them led to Christ. What a great influence for good they will be among their dusky brethren and sisters in the different parts of the States. Whilst I had scores of open doors, my experience is that there is not the same desire to come to meetings now that there was thirteen years ago. Indifference reigns supreme in many, and sectarianism is far from being vanquished. I wish something could be done among them that would bring them together. The pastors like to work single-handed in their own little circle, which they do every fall of the year. James Wharton.

LIGHT IN ASIA MINOR.

On the south-eastern shores of the Black Sea lies the town of Ordu, which in February last was visited by Rev. George Constantine, of Smyrna. The town consists of about 1500 houses, and the larger proportion of the inhabitants are Greeks. A boys' school has been for some time in existence, and a female teacher was recently sent from Smyrna by the Greek Evangelical Alliance there to open one for girls.

Arriving unexpectedly, late one night, Dr. Constantine received a most hearty welcome, and arrangements were soon made for his holding a meeting each week-night, and three times on Sunday, so that during a stay of thirteen days he preached eighteen times to full audiences of from two to five hundred people. The interest displayed was intense, accompanied by conviction and conversion, and some backsliders were induced to return to God. Many stayed to the after-meetings, and one morning from thirty to forty inquirers visited Dr. Constantine in his room, and the leader of the party was so impressed that on leaving he shouted through the streets, "We are all undone."

Three years ago only one woman dared to attend the meetings, but now numbers came, and one meeting was held for women only. Ten married women carry spelling-books about with them, so anxious are they to learn to read the Word of Life.

The whole town soon became interested. Groups of two or three might be seen in the market-place talking things over; one man said it reminded him of the time of the Russo-Turkish war, when they used to discuss the approach of the Russians.

Five members of the Greek Orthodox Church signed a petition inviting Dr. Constantine to preach in their school-house, from the neighbourhood of which they had some time ago tried to stone away a Protestant family. Here a large crowd collected both inside and out, reminding one of the scene in Mark ii. 2.

The town of Ordu is connected with ten or twelve villages, where there is a great deal of awakening; in fact, all along the coast the people are hungering for the Bread of Life. From one town it is reported that about thirty people meet to study the Bible, led by a man who in a drunken fit some time ago tried to stab a colporteur in a café, because he refused to treat him to drink; next day, feeling repentant, he bought a Bible, and so the interest spread.

Up to this the schoolmaster in Ordu has been the preacher; but, in answer to an appeal to the Greek Alliance, an efficient pastor has just left Smyrna, and it is hoped that the work will extend further.

The next place visited by Dr. Constantine was the inland village of Sardogan, containing about 300 houses. This place is not easily reached, some of the journey having to be made in springless waggons, part of the time drawn by buffaloes, going over ditches and streams, and along the shores of a lake, where at times the water almost comes into the waggon. Sardogan is a very simple place, without even a market, the people being mostly farmers or shepherds. They have no such things as tables and chairs; all sit on mats on the floor, and eat out of one big dish. But here, too, is to be found the same love for God's Word; though reading with difficulty, whole nights are sometimes spent over the Bible, comparing Scripture with Scripture. A farmer is the teacher and a shepherd the preacher, but God has blessed, and there are now fourteen families confessing Christ.

In winter preaching is carried on in a silk-worm shed, which, during the week, serves for a school-house, in summer both are held in the open air.

Although it rained all the time of Dr. Constantine's stay, his meetings were well attended by from 150 to 300 people, he besides visited many families, and had personal talks. On Sunday he had a communion service, for which he examined fourteen candidates, ten women, and four men. One of these men had been the terror of the village, and his wife was sometimes found nearly beaten to death. A very little woman, she, however, won her terrible husband, and now, together, they for the first time partook of the emblems of a Saviour's dying love. Many other instances might be given; but the above are enough to show how deep is the interest for the truth in the hearts of these simple people, whose influence is felt in neighbouring villages. In many parts of Asia Minor the same opening for Christian work is to be found, and, as we lift up our eyes and look on the fields, we see how white they are. But where are the reapers? "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth labourers into his harvest."

PIONEERING IN MADAGASCAR.

Rev. G. A. Shaw, the well-known missionary of the London Missionary Society, has been pioneering in south-eastern Madagascar. Eight or nine years ago, while Mr. Shaw was at Tamatave, a cry went forth for labourers for the beautiful, though fatally malarious, province which extends some hundreds of miles along the coast south of Mananjara, but that cry was not responded to. Now, Mr. Shaw has himself boldly taken the field, and from a communication published in The Christian World, it seems that he has undertaken no easy task.

It was not without difficulty that he reached the benighted region of his labours; shipwreck was escaped as by a miracle, and many perils by sea and land were braved, both by the missionary and his devoted wife. The people of one dark village were "the whole of them more or less drunk." During Mr. Shaw's temporary absence from the village in which he settled, war broke out, and on his return home he found his medical and surgical skill in great demand, and soon become known far and near as a true friend of the people.

In an account of his work in a third village, he tells of the very tardy assemblage of men and women to listen to the Gospel, as he preached under the shadow of some fine spreading trees. "I begin," he says, "in a chatty way, to tell them of the character of the God whose name they know, but only to fear, as the Creator and punisher. It is a grand new view to them that He is a God of love, and that He has sent his Son that those who believe on Him should have eternal life. We finish our impromptu service by my telling them I am going to speak to this great God but loving Father, and ask them to follow me in their thoughts with bowed head. In a few words, asking for light for them and blessing, we joined in the first prayer ever offered in that village. Before leaving them, they had promised to put up a building in which I could more conveniently talk to them than in the open air; and so we may hope that before very long a rough but commodious chapel will be erected there, where God will be praised, and we trust many be born into the true light."

MRS. GRIMKE'S TEXT CARDS.—At one of the May meetings, Rev. I. H. Hacker, of Travancore, told a remarkable story showing how God has blessed Mrs. Grimke's loving work of providing Scripture text-cards in different languages. Some time ago, a missionary in India gave a card to a man who knew nothing of Christianity. He accompanied the little gift with some kindly words, and it was accepted without any special display of interest. The text on the card excited the man's curiosity to read the Bible, and, securing a copy of the sacred Scriptures, he became "wise unto salvation." Then he made known the good news to his friends and neighbours, with the result that nine persons confessed Christ, and became shining lights in that dark land.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. William Ross, of the Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow.

The Bombay Guardian rejoices "with The Christian that the press in general is taking up the great question of licensing sin. It would be hard for thoughtful Christians to disagree with that estimable paper when it says:—'Nothing can be more suicidal than silence concerning evils which are honey-combing the health and character of our young men.'" We wish indeed that the press in general, or even the Christian press were "taking up" this great question.

Last week we expressed our perplexity, in view of Mr. Dyer's letters, at the announcement in Parliament of the suspension of the Act in India which regulates vice. Just as we went to press a telegram was despatched to Mr. Dyer in Bombay on the subject, and next morning a reply came from him to the effect that the Acts were then in full swing in that city. How this fact is to be reconciled with Sir John Gorst's statement in the House of Commons we have not yet discovered. By some singular oversight, Mr. Dyer's telegram was not communicated to the great gathering in Exeter Hall on Friday evening, though Mr. Stansfeld alluded to it in his speech in the afternoon.

Those who can enter into the innocent enjoyments of the young, will know what "A Day in the Country" means. Those, again, who know how few are the pleasures of children who live, or prematurely die, in the crowded courts of big cities, need not be told that a day's abandonment among rural surroundings is a real combination of delights. To the happiest of children such outings are full of pleasure; how much more to those whose enjoyments are few and far between. We sincerely hope that friends will generously enable us to help in providing these glad occasions for thousands of poor children in London, most of whom would otherwise see no green fields from one year to another.

The Echo is doing good service, amongst other things, by its "Touch-and-Go Papers" signed "About Town." It has recently (May 17) described a very serious and alarming condition of things amongst city clerks and others. Between noon and three o'clock in restaurants, above and under ground, hundreds of young men and lads congregate in billiard-rooms, smoke, drink, play, and bet, spending money when they ought to be earning it, and passing the time in a billiard saloon that they ought to have been devoting to the service of their employers. The writer is astonished at the supineness of employers, who could put a stop to such proceedings directly by an occasional inspection.

The statement made by the Bishop of Carlisle at the recent annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society that there is undoubtedly a large increase of scepticism among women deserves very careful consideration. It is open to question, however, whether the cause is accurately described as the culture received in ladies' colleges. That which opens the door to one kind of knowledge opens it to another, and if there is honest inquiry there need be little fear as to the result. Much of the so-called scepticism of to-day is simply a cover for a careless and irreligious life that is not sufficiently in earnest to inquire and pray. We shall look with interest for the conference of thoughtful women on the subject which the Bishop suggested.

The recent London Diocesan Conference by a large majority rejected a resolution, "That in order to increase the number of persons qualified to conduct services in churches, it is expedient that the legislative enactments which now prevent the third order of clergy, called deacons, from engaging in secular occupations, should be repealed or greatly modified." Fortunately, however, there are many laymen engaged in secular occupations who are able to give their time to the Lord's work, and go about evangelising. St. Paul himself on his missionary travels found people of the same craft, and wrought at his occupation of a tent-maker.

It is well that those who are organising the centenary celebrations of the Protestant triumphs of 1588 and 1688 have spoken out. The defeat of the Armada and the accession of the Protestant dynasty were great national deliverances from the intolerable yoke of Popery, and it is from them alone that this country has inherited the civil and religious liberties which she now happily enjoys. With this view the whole attitude of the Plymouth Committee, which recently assembled at the Mansion House under the presidency of the popish Duke of Norfolk, was utterly inconsistent, and the action of the General Council in disavowing it was unavoidable. The celebration must be a solemn and uncompromising protest against the aggressions and encroachments of Rome, or else it becomes a mere empty and meaningless farce. In any case it is not easy to understand the wish on the part of any Papists to take part in what is unquestionably the celebration of a notable defeat of their idolatrous system.

Special attention is directed to the important meetings to be held next week at Exeter Hall, in commemoration of the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588, and the accession of the Protestant Dynasty in 1688. Particulars as to the gatherings are given in our list of forthcoming meetings. The resolutions which will be submitted to the meetings have a thoroughly Protestant ring about them, and we are confident that they will be presented with power by the speakers, among whom are Lord Robert Montagu, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, Rev. Drs. C. H. Wainwright and Hugh Hanna. The leading principles that will be enunciated are as follow:—

(1) The Word of God is the sole, sufficient, and supreme Rule of Faith, Worship, and Life.
(2) Justification is by Faith alone.
(3) The One Offering of Christ was finished upon the Cross.
(4) All human Pretensions to Sacerdotal Power and Authority in the Church of Christ are to be utterly repudiated.

It will not surprise our readers to be informed that Cardinal Manning does not approve of the Reformation. He professes to have discovered, however, what will be new to most students of English history, that "the history of this country for the past three hundred years has been one of the most mournful written in the page of Christendom," but he is comforted in the idea that there is "abundance of hope left," as "the English people never rejected the Holy Catholic faith," faithless sovereigns, courtiers, and mercenaries really being, in his opinion, responsible for the present condition of things.

Seeing that the Cardinal is bound to accept the dogma of the infallibility of the Pope, and to take unquestioned his theology from that source, it is difficult to understand the ground for his rejoicings over the first portion of the statement, made in his recent sermon at Chelsea, that

> Once more there is in the English people an inflexible resolve not to be dictated to in questions of religion by any human teacher. They said, "No man shall control my conscience in what I am to believe; my religion is between me and God." They would trust none but a Divine teacher, and they believed that God Himself was their Teacher, and that God was teaching them through the Bible.

Few, if any, of our readers will be inclined to dissent from this concise summary of the Protestant position, but the Cardinal Archbishop went on to say—

> An error, because God had ordained a living Teacher on earth—the Holy Ghost. But this belief they were robbed of three hundred years ago, and all that had been left to them was the written Word of God, and in the interpretation of that written Word of God they asked God to guide them, and they refused to allow human teachers and human authority to come between God and their conscience. Therefore we ought to do all in our power to show them that there was a Divine Teacher, who came on the day of Pentecost, and had never ceased to teach, although the confusion and babel of tongues for the last three hundred years in England had made it morally impossible for them to know and recognise that Teacher.

This moral impossibility, however, is only of the Cardinal's own creation, and it fades away before 1 John iv. 2; "Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God," and before each of a hundred other passages in that Word of God to which Protestantism has given to the people free and open access.

Rev. W. Crosbie has just published an admirable little address on "Spiritual Revival" (Hodder & Stoughton, 2d.). There is a timely reference to the beauty and wondrous renewal of the earth now witnessed. The change from the dreariness, coldness, and barrenness of a long winter, and the efflorescence of life everywhere appearing, arise from the fact that the earth is in better relations to the sun—not closer relations, but better. The sun's rays have not now to penetrate such long, chilling outlyings of the earth's atmosphere; they come more directly. What we want in the Church is life, not through man-made media, but direct from God Himself. Assuredly this is the urgent matter just now.

At the Victoria Institute a paper was lately read before a crowded audience, from the distinguished Egyptologist, M. Maspero. It remarkably confirmed the exactness of Bible topography in relation to Egypt. In a subsequent discussion M. Le Page Renouf affirmed that recent researches at Karnac establish the fact that Hebrew was the language of Palestine centuries before the Israelites returned thither from Egypt. As a Semitic scholar he characterised the statement of Professor Sayce, in the last Hibbert Lectures, that Joseph was worshipped as a deity by the ancient Canaanites, as wholly incorrect. It is to be noted that, but for a change in the course of the Nile the Karnac records, which so much confirm Scripture, would have been lost for ever.

We much regret to learn that Mr. James Pascoe, of Mexico, has for some time been troubled with an affection of the face, which threatens to issue in cancer, unless he speedily undergoes an operation. To have this done it will be necessary for Mr. Pascoe to visit England, and he writes appealing to his friends in this country to show him sympathy in his affliction. Any who know him, and value his faithful testimony for Jesus Christ, amid many difficulties at his lonely outpost in Mexico, and who wish to give practical expression to this feeling, may communicate with Mr. John Mercer, 29, Queen's-road, Southport.

The recently published "Letters of General Gordon to his Sister" (Macmillan) reveal his characteristic mystical musings, but they reveal also his humbleness, self-depreciation, watchfulness, and fondness for Bible-reading. The following sentences are typical of many others in the book of a like nature:—

> We are all lepers. Some have their leprosy covered with silk, some with tattered rags; take off the silk and the rags, and there are the lepers. Evil has its source in unbelief; this is the unique offence and sin. The whole secret of life is that union with God is rest; disunion is unrest. Give me a ream of foolscap filled with my demerits, and I will sign it; but my doing so is a proof how much I accept the free gift of God. I read the papers to see what God is doing. Nothing shocks me but myself. Remember me to Willie Warren; he is one of Jesus' temples. (This was a Southampton crossing-sweeper.)

The immigration question is exciting attention in Australia and Canada, as well as amongst ourselves. In the former colony the constant influx of Chinese is speedily becoming a serious detriment to colonial interests, and drastic legislation on the subject has been passed. The Canadians are complaining strongly of the worthless character of many recent immigrants, who, it is stated, are ignorant of any trade, and arrive in a destitute condition. The Toronto press asserts that Canada "is made the dumping-ground for the scourings of the London East-end slums, and the diseased offspring of English paupers." While admitting that there may be ground for complaint as to the class of persons sent out from England by some of the irresponsible emigration agencies, the above sweeping indictments cannot with any justice be brought against those properly conducted schemes which are supervised by practical and experienced Christians and philanthropists. We have frequently urged the necessity for careful selection and preparation, and we would here again point out that in Canada the demand is mainly for farmers, farm-labourers, and domestic servants.

The further the famous compensation clauses of the pending Local Government Bill are examined, the more patent does their enormity become. Not content with creating entirely new vested interests, the Government proposals, by making it distinctly the interest of the county councils to maintain and increase the number of public-houses for the sake of the income from the increased licensing duties, are really placing obstacles in the way of reform. Local option is being converted into a farce. We commend to the attention of our readers some startling figures lately compiled by Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., after much careful investigation in various parts of the country, from which it appears that the probable amount payable under these clauses, if the authorities exercise their discretion, would be no less than two hundred million pounds, the great bulk of which would go into the pockets of the big brewers and distillers. Let the Parliamentary recess be utilised by placing before the country the true bearings of this Brewers' Endowment Bill, and in strengthening the hands of the Temperance party in the House of Commons.

The condition of our modern society presents some strange contrasts. One of these was pointed out by a public speaker the other evening when he compared "the fatal facility of recourse to the public-house" with the desperate difficulty of recourse to hospital treatment, and contrasted "the eager enthusiasm which is evoked in defence of the one with the apathy which paralyses us when we attempt to mitigate the other." When we consider the colossal wealth of London it is a matter for humiliation, no less than regret, that whilst the expenditure of the Metropolitan hospitals has during the last ten years increased by nearly £50,000, the income has only risen by a paltry £3,000. It is gratifying, however, to note that the working-classes, not only in some parts of London (e.g. North London, Islington, and East and West Ham), but in many provincial towns, are by their praiseworthy efforts in support of these institutions putting their richer brethren to shame. If every wealthy man, on recovering from some terrible accident or dangerous disease, would testify his thankfulness to God by a gift to some hospital, the problem of shrinking funds and increasing applications would be speedily solved.

THE ITALIAN EXHIBITION IN LONDON is visited regularly by the agent of the Italian Mission, Sala Evangelica, Frith-street, Soho, who distributes gratuitously copies of the New Testament and Gospels, received by grant from the British and Foreign Bible Society.

PRINCESS LOUISE HOME. — In connection with the notice of this Home in our last issue, we are desired to state that the postal address is Woodhouse, Harrow Green, Leytonstone, Essex. The office is at 32, Sackville-street, London, W. There are now fifty-six cots vacant for lack of adequate support.

WALTHAMSTOW HALL, SEVENOAKS.—The annual report of this very useful institution for the education of the daughters of missionaries contains much that is gratifying to those who take an interest in the excellent work done within its walls. Each year, since the establishment of the institution in 1838, there has been much blessing, and 1887 may be included among the most successful periods. The pupils have enjoyed good health, and the examination results are highly creditable.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SAILORS' SOCIETY.—The seventieth anniversary meeting was held recently at the Mansion House. The report presented by Mr. Matthews showed that the Society has sixty-three agents at work, the operations being extended over sixty-six ports. Last year the income amounted to £13,264, and much good was done in many directions. The Lord Mayor and Lord Brassey both spoke in high terms of the Society, which was commended by Canon Wilberforce for advocating temperance among the sailors, the result of the labours in this direction last year being that 3591 pledges were taken.

SUNDAY OBSERVANCE.—The annual meeting of the Lord's Day Observance Society was held last week, at St. James's Hall, under the presidency of Sir Robert Phayre. The report stated that seldom had more scorn been poured on the Sabbath day and those who defended it than in the year under review, and never within recent times had deliberate and unblushing Sabbath-breaking so vaunted itself as of late. Princes and nobles, legislators and magistrates, artists and scientists, have associated to burst asunder the bonds of the Lord's Day. And the poorer classes, aping the vices of Society, have grown more shameless in the conduct of their unions, so that to-day the working men's clubs have become battering-rams to break down the Sabbath. The Chairman said that a spirit of lawlessness was abroad, and the spirit of the age was one of self-willed unbelief. Various resolutions were agreed to, deploring the tendency of the age to indulge in Sunday amusements.

WESLEYAN MISSION BANDS.

UNDER the auspices of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission Band Union, which was formed on Easter Monday at City-road Chapel, great gatherings were held on Monday last in the City Temple. Rev. Mark Guy Pearse gave a Bible-reading at noon. At three o'clock a meeting, presided over by Mr. R. W. Perks, a prominent layman, took place. Short speeches were given by Revs. Hugh Price Hughes, J. H. Hopkins, W. J. Dawson, and a number of mission band workers.

Another gathering was held in the evening, when the church was nearly crowded. There were present representatives from almost every circuit in London, as well as many provincial Methodists. The meeting was of the most enthusiastic character. Mr. Hughes occupied the chair, and Messrs. B. Lamb, Josiah Nix, and Jewsbury gave interesting accounts of successful mission band work. A resolution against the compensation clauses of the Local Government Bill was adopted by acclamation.

ROUND ABOUT THE VILLAGES.

THE gross spiritual darkness of many of the villages of our land is an appalling fact. It is sad, indeed, to think that so many living within the shores of this Gospel-favoured island have never had the realities of the Saviour's cross and love, and of eternity urgently brought before them.

Impressed with the need, I purpose to spend a good deal of time this summer evangelising amongst villages and hamlets on the north and north-west side of London, within about twenty miles, preaching the word for four or five days, or a week, in a place, to as many as can be got together, leaving Gospel books, &c., at the cottages. Thus I hope to pass from one district to another, and to cover as much ground as possible.

Will your readers pray that He who of old "went round about the villages teaching" (Mark vi. 6) may be mightily with us in this effort this summer? Some may know of villages in the radius named above needing the Gospel; if so, I shall be glad if they will communicate with me. We should find an easy-going tricycle of great service. If any friend could give or lend us one for the Master's sake, I shall be most thankful. WM. R. LANE.

UNION HALL MISSION.—For more than twenty-seven years this evangelistic work has been in operation, and now there are six mission halls in use in poor districts of London. Among the many agencies employed to reach the masses is tent preaching during the summer months and the use of Bible carriages. Mr. Robert Bilke, "Abergeldie," Greenhill-road, Harlesden, N.W., is the director of the Mission.

MR. JOHN C. PEARCE, better known from his work in the Brooklyn Y.M.C.A. as "Father" Pearce, died on April 24, in Booklyn. He was seventy-eight years old, and came to this country from England a quarter of a century ago. He was one of the founders of the Y.M.C.A. in England forty years ago, being associated with Mr. George Williams, and has been active in Association works ever since. —New York Evangelist.

ANTI-VIVISECTION.—The Hon. P. Carteret Hill presided over the annual meeting of the London Anti-Vivisection Society, held in St. James's Hall a few days ago. A resolution was adopted to the effect that, as a method of scientific investigation, vivisection is erroneous in theory, dangerous to humanity, and tends to demoralise those who practise or support it; and further, that it is contrary to the instincts of true religion. Canon Wilberforce, in a powerful address, urged that, owing his constant and deep debt of gratitude to the lower animals, man ought not to torture but chivalrously to protect them. Rev. Dr. W. Adamson remarked that of the 3000 ministers of all denominations in Scotland, one-third had signed a petition against vivisection.

MAY MEETINGS.

Evangelical Alliance Conversazione.

This interesting reunion of Christians took place last week at Regent's Park College, where for many years it has been held. At the close of the season of social converse, the venerable Sir Harry Verney took the chair. Despite his old age, yet he is young in spirit. He hoped that one of the chief aims of the Alliance—the relief of the persecuted—would not be overlooked. There is yet much persecution in the world for matters of religious difference, and we ought to do all in our power to show sympathy, and to send relief to our afflicted brethren. As a very old man, recollecting a different state of things, it was to him a source of much joy that Christian efforts are so flourishing in these days, and that so many, called by various names, are banded together, through the Alliance, in unity and love.

General Field, in giving a brief summary of the work of the Alliance, said it was international in its scope and reach. Politics and controversy are avoided. There are now branches scattered throughout Europe, America, Asia, and Africa. Besides cultivating unity among Christians, it seeks the defence of the faith, and the succour of the oppressed. Reference was made to the growth of the Week of Prayer; ten thousand additional notices were issued for the last observance of that season of united petition. During the last ten years 6000 members have been added to the roll of the Alliance. Efforts are made to cope with the advances of Popery and infidelity. Deputations have been sent to many foreign countries to spread the principles of unity among Christian churches, and the international conferences have been productive of much blessing. The efforts of the Alliance on behalf of those who suffer for conscience sake in different parts of Europe have almost invariably been rewarded with success.

Representatives were present from Berlin, Stockholm, Australia, Canada and China, but the time did not allow of more than three addresses.

Rev. J. Jameson, from Madrid, referring to the past history of Spain, spoke of the terrible persecutions that had taken place there. The mere circumstance of Evangelical Christianity being now established in that country is one of the great facts of the century. There are many indications that the truth is permeating the land, though the time of persecution is not yet over. There is not an organised branch of the Alliance in Spain, but virtually it exists, for the different evangelical churches are one in feeling and in all good work. A deputation of the Alliance would be heartily welcomed in Spain. Oppositions from Romanism still exist, but of late trouble has arisen from the importation of some of the new-fangled speculative "isms" of the time. Mr. Jameson, as a pastor in that country, lamented the absence of a sense of sin among the people, and said there is great need for an outpouring of the Spirit of God.

An interesting statement followed from Signor Turino, of Genoa, who spoke of the large prevalence of the spirit of Christian unity among the evangelical churches of Italy. Among the people themselves there is much willingness to receive the truth, but from the priests on the one hand, and from infidels on the other, much opposition arises. The Signor referred to the Papal intrigues in coquetting with the temporal powers of Europe, and said he feared that his holiness would make terms with the Italian king, and that the result would be disastrous to Protestant freedom. He made a strong appeal to Englishmen to keep their eyes open, and to be prepared to resist all Papal advances at home and abroad.

Rev. John Jones, lately of Maré, in the South Seas, gave an interesting epitome of the work done in that island during the last thirty-four years of his residence. When he went to the island cannibalism was rampant, though some good had been previously done through the visits of the John Williams. By dint of persevering patient endeavour, the whole of these savage tribes were nominally brought over to Christianity. There were many true converts, some of whom had gone as Gospel missionaries to all parts of the South Seas. After a time the priests who had been working among one tribe began to plot against the Protestants. Chiefs were deprived of their rights, and others put in their places. When they appealed, they were only cast into prison. Mr. Jones told the story of the continued intrigues which resulted in his own deposition, by the representatives of the French Government, from the oversight of the churches. The native Protestant pastors were also sent to New Caledonia, because they would not submit to a foreign ecclesiastical authority imposed on them. Through the influence of the Alliance, the pastors were restored after a time; but they have not got religious freedom, and are subjected to many cruelties and persecutions, because of their fidelity to their faith. Finally he was expelled on December 9 last. He could not tell what the issue might be. The Directors of the London Missionary Society had asked him to come to this country to defend himself against the charges of the French authorities, and he was prepared to prove that he had always been loyal in necessary matters to the Government of the island. Mr. Jones's narrative of the high-handed action of the French authorities on the island produced a deep impression on the audience, and we trust something may be done to restore to the native Protestant believers the possession of their rights and privileges.

British Women and Temperance.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P., presided over the annual meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association, on Wednesday evening, last week, in the Memorial Hall. There was a large audience—including delegates from all parts, and friends of the movement—and the ladies who delivered addresses were listened to with marked attention. Mrs. Mackenzie, honorary secretary, read a report telling of much united and earnest effort, and affording many reasons for encouragement to those who have at heart the important object of the Association. The balance-sheet showed a small deficit.

In the course of a lively speech, the Chairman deplored that even now, after so much has been done to educate the people, there are many who think it would be a dreadful thing to give up the use of alcoholic drinks. With respect to the proposal of the Government to still more securely establish the liquor traffic in the country, by creating a vested interest in licences, he said that the Local Option now at length offered is simply impracticable, and therefore cannot be of any use. He quoted a sentence from a speech delivered some time ago by Lord Salisbury, to the effect that "the terror of having to provide fair compensation would furnish no inconsiderable motive to induce the local authorities to be very chary of withdrawing licences." This clearly showed the motive of the Government, and that temperance reformers need still to show determined opposition. He maintained that, after all the evil the traffic has wrought, the brewers, beer-house keepers, and gin-shop proprietors, ought to be thankful if they get off without compensating an injured public.

Mrs. Phillips, of Liverpool, moved a resolution condemnatory of the Government proposal. She was very forcible in her expression of indignation at being asked to compensate publicans for having worked havoc in society. She was, she said, unable to think that responsible statesmen could really expect sober, respectable people to sit still and be heavily taxed for putting away an evil and a curse in a manner at once strictly legal and righteous. Miss Balgarnie seconded the resolution. She thought that the intelligence of the country had been insulted, and its sense of justice greatly outraged by the proposal.

Miss Margaret Leitch, American missionary from Ceylon, spoke of the many and serious evils of the drink traffic in that island and in India. Is there not crime, and sorrow, and cruelty enough in those dark countries without the pushing of an infamous trade? Not only do the dealers publicly display their licences, but they actually tell the poor people that they must drink so as to help the revenue. They say "Queen Victoria is poor, and wants money; people must drink to help the Queen." Mrs. Massingberd and Mrs. Southward also addressed the meeting.

Conferences were held on Thursday. Miss E. Docwra read a paper on the legislative aspect of the temperance question. She reminded the conference that in all local elections women ratepayers have the same rights and responsibilities as men. In the election of Poor Law guardians they should make it a sine quâ non that they should be total abstainers. If it were not for the drink, how many of our workhouses, she asked, would be closed for want of inmates? Mr. C. E. Bousfield, L.R.C.P., read a paper on "Inebriety among Women: its Causes and Treatment." He remarked that in women, when the habit of drinking has once been formed, it is more difficult to eradicate than in men. He hoped the time would come when religion and morality would have more power in Parliament than beer and brandy.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.

For eighty-one years this Society has been instrumental in cheering the path of many a weary pilgrim. Its annual meeting was held last week at Exeter Hall. Sir Robert Phayre, who presided, said that the Society appeared to him to be carrying out a good work on distinctly spiritual lines.

Mr. J. E. Hazelton, the secretary, offered an abstract of the report, from which it appeared that the pensioners on the books number 1174, and that since 1807 the Society has aided over 5000 persons by yearly pensions, distributing upwards of £193,000. This is distinct from money expended in the maintenance of asylums and Homes. Last year's income was £2885, the largest amount yet reported. The pensions range from five shillings a month to ten guineas per annum, and the average age of the recipients is 68.

Addresses were delivered by Revs. E. A. Stuart, O. S. Dolby, H. Sinclair Paterson, J. Hawkins, and Mr. H. W. Maynard, all commending the Society to sympathy and support.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

The forty-second annual meeting was held at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday, May 15, under the presidency of Mr. George Williams, and was largely attended by seamen and others. The report was read by Rev. G. J. Hill, who gave a most cheering account of the Society's progress. All the operations have been carried on with energy and success, and new fields of Christian effort have been entered upon. The debt on the Society's premises in Ratcliffe-highway has been cleared off. Several Sailors' Rests and Bethels have been opened, and additional missionaries engaged. At the Society's various stations in London, Liverpool, Fleetwood, Whitehaven, Workington, Maryport, Isle of Man, Ireland, Cornish and North Devon Coasts, &c., a vast amount of useful work has been accomplished. Upwards of one hundred services and meetings have been held weekly all the year round, not only in English, but in Swedish, Danish, and German. The reading-rooms have been well frequented by sailors; the schools have been well attended; a large number of foreign-going vessels have been supplied with libraries and bags of books. Pecuniary help and other relief have been given to destitute seamen. Numbers of seamen have signed the pledge, and many have become earnest and useful Christians. Owing to large donations for special purposes, the income has been considerably in excess of previous years; but in consequence of the extension of the work, the year has closed with an adverse balance of about one hundred pounds.

The adoption of the report was supported by Rev. J. Jackson Wray and Mr. H. W. Maynard (Director of London Docks), and unanimously carried. Other addresses were given in support of the Society's work.

Working-Men and the Sabbath.

On Tuesday last week, in Exeter Hall, the annual meeting of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association was held, Mr. J. C. Stevenson, M.P., presiding. The report of last year's operations stated that protests had been made against the Sunday opening of the People's Palace, and against the Sunday amusements of the wealthy, which cause much extra labour to the poor. During the year, 625,800 publications were issued, and many sermons and lectures delivered.

The Earl of Harrowby, in a sympathetic address, showed that there is great danger in meddling with the great primeval law, whereby we are entitled to rest during one day in seven. Colonel Duncan, M.P., also spoke. He regarded it as of the highest importance that there should be a weekly family re-union. Sunday, he said, should be a day of worship and of happy abandonment; not a day that would be looked upon by the children when they grew up, as the dark day of the week.

On the motion of Rev. Dr. Wainwright, a resolution urging upon the Postmaster-General to put an end to Sunday postal labour was carried. Among the speakers were Messrs. J. Benson, R. Scott, and H. Williams, and Rev, Peter Thompson, each of whom insisted on the right of the masses to preserve the Sunday inviolate as a Day of Rest, while an earnest protest was also made against the continued opening of public-houses on Sunday.

Christian Evidence Society.

While the study of the evidences of the Christian religion should come as a matter of course to all who would be able to give answers to inquirers as to the faith that is in them, the making known on all hands of the sure and certain foundation of the things most surely believed among followers of the Lord Jesus stands out to-day as a duty of undoubted and pressing importance. As, moreover, acquaintance with positive teaching concerning religion is one thing, and a grasp of so-called scientific and literary objections to revealed truth is quite another, so, of course, there is also such a thing as preaching the Gospel in its fulness and power without taking account of the questionings and difficulties of various kinds which may and do arise, and are turned over and over again, in the minds of many thoughtful people.

Not to all teachers and preachers is it given to "stop the mouths of the gainsayers." The Christian Evidence Society comes in here as a very useful agency; it takes up as a special function that which otherwise would be nobody's particular charge, and on the platform and in the Press it sets forth the warrants of faith and the grounds of hope in a manner suited to the minds of those who are sceptical, infidel, or disputatious. It is not within the power of every advocate of Christian truth to follow the ins and outs of an ever-varying intellectual criticism, and continually changing secular assaults; but this Society devotes its attention to this very thing, and it is gratifying to know that the labours of its agents are highly appreciated by those who know their worth.

The annual meeting of the Society was held on Tuesday last week, at Exeter Hall. The chair was occupied by Professor Stokes, M.P., D.C.L., President of the Royal Society. Some of the best living apologists for the Christian religion wrote, regretting their inability to attend; but there was, nevertheless, a strong platform, and the speeches were listened to with lively interest by a goodly audience. In the course of a brief opening address, the Professor urged the necessity of recognising the twofold character of the evidences of Christianity—external evidence, or such as brings into play the same sort of faculties as are exercised in the pursuit of science; and internal evidence, or such as applies to those faculties whereby we are impressed with feelings of right and wrong, of duty and that there must be a Being above ourselves, and also with aspirations connected with those feelings. An important part of the evidence of Christianity depends upon the exercise of this latter class of faculties, and neither sort of evidence is to be taken by itself to the exclusion of the other. In common life we have continually to recognise circumstantial as distinguished from demonstrative evidence. It is not surprising, therefore, that in religion the same thing should meet us. If we had in religion a chain of demonstrative reasoning of the external kind, which would leady inevitably to certain conclusions, the result would be the dwarfing out of those faculties which it is the object of religion to draw out and cultivate—those connected with our feelings of duty and responsibility, and the aspirations connected with those feelings. The Professor referred also to the part which misunderstanding plays in modern infidelity; those who think they are attacking Christianity may often be shown to be merely attacking a caricature of true religion. Again, scientific conjectures are often put forward as if they were ascertained facts. In conclusion, he showed that, in order to meet the objections and arguments of those who would destroy or make void the teaching of the Gospel, some such organisation as the Christian Evidence Society is greatly needed.

The Bishop of Carlisle delivered a vigorous address. Those who say that science stands in the way of Christian profession, may, he said, be answered by mention of the names of Professor Stokes, Sir William Thomson, and others; those who say that Christianity will not stand scrutiny, but must fall before modern criticism, may be referred to the conviction of such men as the Master of Trinity College and the Bishop of Durham; those, again, who suggest that Christianity will not do for hard-headed people, may be told that the Lord Chancellor of England, a practical man knowing how to weigh evidence, is not ashamed to declare his loyalty to the teachings of the Holy Scriptures as the Word of God. In the report, mention was made of need for work among women, and, referring to this, the Bishop pointed out what power for good or evil women have. Incidentally, he said that Strauss's rationalistic "Life of Jesus," and Comte's philosophical works, were translated into English by women, and the writer of Robert Elsmere also is a woman. The object of the Society is, not to make Christians of people, but to clear difficulties from their path, so that they may be able to approach the Saviour and understand Him.

Rev. Edward White maintained that there is little or no ground for the allegation that scepticism is specially prevalent among the artisan class. His own observation led him to believe that nothing is weaker than active infidelity among the common people. Let any one stand forward in a public thoroughfare in support of the Holy Gospel, and, on infidel interruption occurring, it will soon be seen what the public feeling is; the disturber will be silenced, or his discomfiture by the truth will be greeted with delight. The people know that the Lord Jesus Christ is their best friend. Mr. White held that what the working classes want, and what they are powerfully attracted by, is thorough instruction in Holy Scripture; doctrinal, social, and ecclesiastical corruptions should be cleared away from religion, lest they hinder the work. He concluded by urging that those who object to the supernatural should have their attention directed to the fact that in the Scriptures a reason for the incarnation is plainly given, namely, the presence in the world of sin and death, two preternatural things; and also that those who argue for the doctrine of development from an assumed beginning should be invited to likewise reason backwards, and at the outset to account for Christianity on any grounds other than the truth of theat well-established fact of history, the resurrection of Christ from the dead.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe commended the Society to the increased support of Christian people. Dr. J. H. Gladstone, and the Master of Trinity College, Cambridge (Rev. Dr. H. M. Butler), also spoke; among other things the last insisted upon the importance of perfect fairness and good Christian temper in all evidential arguments.

THREE WEEKS IN SAN FRANCISCO.

By Rev. J. MOUNTAIN.

Mrs. Mountain and I arrived at San Francisco from New Zealand on April 14, and took up our abode at Marlborough House, a boarding house which we can highly commend. The Sabbath is but slightly observed in this city by the masses, but great numbers of churches are well attended. It is estimated that in the evening there are 25,000 people in the public-houses, theatres, and gambling saloons.

It was a great delight to us to meet here Rev. E. Payson Hammond and Mrs. Hammond, and to take part in several of their meetings. We also met our old friend, Rev. J. E. Irvine, with whom, thirteen years ago, we conducted a blessed mission in Cardiff. The Y.M.C.A. here is doing a good work, led by its able secretary, Mr. McCoy. The Sunday afternoon meeting for men only is attended by about three hundred. Mr. Hammond and myself were invited to address the Congregational Club on evangelistic work.

Perhaps the most interesting meeting that I attended was that of the Congregational Association, at which five young students in their last year of study were examined prior to their being licensed to preach for one year. The examination was oral, and was most searching. The subjects specially dealt with were: Inspiration, the Atonement, and the Future State of the Impenitent. It came out in the examination that three of the candidates were converted in revivals, and that not one of them believed in a second probation. Each of the students was "approbated" for one year, and at the end of that time will have to undergo a still more searching examination prior to ordination. I could not help thinking that the Congregationalists and Baptists of England might with advantage follow a similar course.

We leave on Friday next for Vancouver's Island, and intend (D.V.) to conduct evangelistic services in different parts of Canada. We would ask the prayers of your readers.

San Francisco, May 1.

KASHMIR MEDICAL MISSION.—The report for 1887 gives a retrospect and prospect full of promise. While they have gone about doing good, the agents of the Mission have preached Jesus to the people, and it is sincerely hoped that much fruit will in due course appear. In England subscriptions on behalf of the Mission are received and forwarded by Mr. H. G. Malaher, secretary of the Missionary Leaves Association, 20, Compton-terrace, Upper-street, Islington, N.

ROYAL HOSPITAL FOR INCURABLES.—The anniversary dinner in aid of this Institution was held a few evenings ago, Mr. John Aird, M.P. presiding. The hospital, which is situated at West-hill, Putney-heath, was established in the year 1854 for the treatment and benefit of a class of patients who were ineligible for general hospitals. Within the last year or so the Institution has had a seaside branch at St. Leonards. The total number of patients at present was said to be 210, of whom about 100 are women, and 50 men. As a general rule, about half of these poor invalids are confined to bed; the rest are able to get about and enjoy fresh air in the grounds, or find recreation of one kind or another in the sitting-rooms. Some of the patients have been in the Institution for thirty years.

THE INDIAN "WINTER MISSION."

Sir John Kennaway presided over an enthusiastic meeting held on Tuesday last week, in Exeter Hall, when friends of the Church Missionary Society assembled to hear, from the lips of the Winter Mission preachers, just returned from India and Ceylon, a brief account of their work and of their impressions regarding the spread of the Gospel in the regions which they had visited. Another object of the meeting (which was reported at length in last week's Record) was to unite in prayer and thanksgiving to God for the safe return of the preachers, and in prayer for the Divine blessing on their labours.

After a few remarks from Archdeacon Richardson, by whom the details of the Mission were arranged, Rev. H. E. Fox and Mr. Swann Hurrell, who had visited Madras and the Telugu country, delivered short addresses. Mr. Fox maintained that the great danger in India is not from Hinduism or Mohammedanism, but rather from the absence of all religion; the danger now is that cultivated India may be content to sit down with something short of Christianity. As an instance of the readiness to receive, although not necessarily to embrace, Christian teaching, he mentioned that a Brahmin offered to hand over his high-class school to the Church Missionary Society, with permissson to teach whatever it liked. Mr. Hurrell mentioned, among other signs of blessing, that many backsliders have been restored, one being specially singled out for notice, a young law student at Madras, who has resolved to enter the ministry. At Jagiapat, a large town, where there were no Christians except the native catechists and their families, and where the Brahmins would not shake hands with a Christian without going to wash immediately afterwards, four young men during the Mission were deeply convicted of sin, and used to meet in a small house to read their Bibles, going to the Mission preachers after dark, like Nicodemus of old. It was there, too, that a high-class Brahmin, an inquirer after truth, begged to be baptized, and when he returned to his village, his wife, seeing his joy, sought the same peace, although she had previously threatened to commit suicide on hearing of her husband's intention to become a Christian.

Rev. Filmer Sulivan having spoken of the needs of Bengal and the north-west provinces, Rev. G. C. Grubb and Colonel Oldham, who had devoted themselves to the Bombay Presidency and the island of Ceylon, made brief statements. During the four months they received over 400 letters, expressing thanksgiving for their work. Mr. Grubb read extracts from four as specimens of the whole. A native pastor wrote that he had been greatly refreshed, and that whereas before he felt the burden of his work, now he realised that the Lord carried the burden. A young sceptic wrote that one of the sermons had been the means of his conversion, as it pointed out the power of Jesus to save from sin, inside as well as outside, a truth he had never heard before. An extreme Ritualist wrote that he was quite another man now that he realised that Jesus was a kind, loving, and personal Saviour. Finally, on the eve of their last service in Colombo, they received a telegram from a "hard-headed business man" as follows:—"Your message from God has saved my soul. Henceforth I live to Jesus. Farewell to you both."

Addresses were also delivered by Revs. B. Baring-Gould and G. S. Karney, who worked Travancore and Tinnevelly. Mr. Baring-Gould said that when he saw as many as 200 and 300 people bowed with an apparent conviction of sin, he realised the truth of the words, "When He, the Spirit of Truth, is come, He will convince the world of sin." Again, when men and women came to their bungalows and tents, he always asked, What led you to come and speak to us? and the answer invariably was "Sin." There is in India a wonderful readiness to hear the Word. One old man travelled seventy miles to invite them to his village, but they could not go. Not to be easily rebuffed, he followed them another thirty miles, accompanied by a man with a wooden leg, and again begged them to go with him, but it was impossible.

Most of the speakers dwelt upon the pressing needs of India, and called for workers to enter the field.

The EMPLOYEES of the EXHIBITIONS.

Dear Sir,—The Young Women's Christian Association are endeavouring to help the young women employed in the three exhibitions at Kensington. There are many of them who would be most thankful for Christian sympathy, and we are anxious to find a Christian lady who would give her time for six months to visit them in their homes or at any of the institutes they may live in. We should be thankful also if any ladies would undertake to visit the exhibitions and give monthly packets.

The Y.W.C.A. hopes very soon to open a small Home for the exhibition employées, and especially for the young people in the refreshment bars. Such a Home has long been needed, and we should be most gratified if friends will help to defray the cost; we only require £200, some of which is already promised.—Yours, Charlotte M. Gough.

"TELL JESUS."[*]

A lady writes from the Continent:—Not long since I heard of another instance of God's blessing on the title words, "Tell Jesus"—words which have so often carried a message of comfort to burdened and discouraged hearts.

A young Russian lady and her husband had been detained to a late hour on a visit to some friends at a distance, and on their way home across the desolate country, darkness overtook them. The snow, already deep, began to fall again in heavy flakes; the night was intensely dark, and the mournful silence of the forest was only broken by the howling of wolves. As a climax to the danger of their situation, the sleigh and horses sank into a snow drift, without any means of extricating themselves.

"In this moment of dire distress," writes the lady, "a ray of light shone on my spirit from these words, 'Tell Jesus,' the title of a little book given to me by a relative in England some time before; but to which I had paid little heed until this hour of danger. I did 'tell Jesus,' beseeching his divine guidance and protection; immediately the thought was suggested to me of unharnessing the horses, of our mounting them and riding off to the nearest village. My husband, whose health was in a critical state, had lost all presence of mind, and was only too glad to follow this council, which indeed seemed our sole way of escape.

"We reached home in perfect safety, our hearts filled with joy and thankfulness to Jesus, who had heard and answered my prayer, and delivered us from such great peril."

EVANGELISATION OF ITALY.—Dear Sir,—May I ask you to allow me to thank, in the columns of The Christian, the many friends who have given me a hearing, and some tangible tokens of their Christian sympathy for the Waldensian work of evangelisation in Italy? In returning home, I bring with me the comfort to know that many Christians of this country are praying for us and for all the other agencies working for the same object. Italy should not be forgotten in the prayers of our Christian friends, as the prosperity of the Gospel in Italy will be the best means to check the progress of Popery in England.

Yours truly, I. David-Turino,
London, May 21. Waldensian Minister in Genoa.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, Director of the Evangelistic Mission, has just published a penny pamphlet, entitled, "Our Summer Campaign," which gives an account of work such as has been done in years gone by, and is, God willing, to be continued during the ensuing season in the towns and villages of the country by means of tents, a Bible-carriage, open-air services, and so forth.

Ever since 1866 there has been much tent work in various parts in connection with the Mission. Thousands of open-air meetings have also been held in the parks, streets, and public grounds of the Metropolis, in fields, on village greens, and by the seashore, attended in the aggregate by a vast multitude, who have thus had the Gospel presented to them earnestly, clearly, and lovingly, by men who have proved its power in their own personal salvation. It is a great pleasure to know that many are now witnessing for Christ who were converted to God on these memorable occasions.

The colporteur has done good work with the Bible-carriage. In one town a gardener had long been under such a deep conviction of sin that he was meditating suicide. His attention, however, was arrested by the text on the carriage, "God is love." Conversation with the colporteur led to the gardener's happy experience of peace with God, and this peace was afterwards communicated to his wife.

In other ways the Mission has been helping in the evangelisation of the masses of the people. The office is at 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

OBITUARY.

MADAME AIMÉ HUMBERT.

This accomplished lady, the foundress and friend of the International Union of the Friends of Young Women, recently entered into rest at Neuchatel after five months' illness. She was confident that the organisation in which she had shown such a lively interest would, in God's providence, still be a blessing, and her last words were inspired by trustful gratitude, as she exclaimed, "Glory to God for all—yes, for all."

DOMESTIC SERVANTS' BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—At the annual meeting of the General Domestic Servants' Benevolent Institution, held last week at Willis's Rooms, St. James's, it was stated that the donations and subscriptions from servants had again been far in excess of those from masters and mistresses, showing that servants themselves fully recognise the value of such an institution. Ninety-five servants are at the present time in receipt of from £15 to £20 per annum, and upwards of £33,000 has been thus distributed to aged and infirm domestic servants.

VIGILANCE AT FINSBURY PARK.—We recently noticed the meeting of the Peckham Branch of the National Vigilance Association, under the lead of its active secretary, Mr. Vincent. We have now the pleasure to record that at the annual meeting of the Finsbury Park Branch, the secretary (Mr. Geller) reported that by the watchfulness and energy of Mr. Fish, a member of the Committee, nine evil houses had been closed. Mr. Fish said that he owed his conversion to the Y.M.C.A. at Finsbury-park Hall, and it was a joy to him to work for the salvation of others in time and in eternity. A Christian policeman was present, in plain clothes, who had been of the greatest use in this work. A wholesale bookseller was mentioned who had noticed an indecent picture in a weekly serial, and not only refused to supply it, but brought it under the notice of the railway booksellers, and thus prevented the circulation of 80,000 copies. There were 300 people present at the meeting; three local ministers took part in it, and several others would have been present but for other engagements. It is of more importance at such meetings to have local witnesses who can speak of work done close by, and local ministers and friends to identify themselves with it, than to have eloquent speakers from a distance, however stirring and useful these may be.

The Irish Evangelization Society has now been at work fourteen years. It has pleased God to use the proclamation of the Gospel by their Evangelists to bring a very large number into the fold of Christ. The Society's work is extending, and the Committee feel it to be right that the Church of God should more widely know of, and be invited to aid more largely in, this work.

EVANGELISTS.

The Evangelists of this Society belong, as individuals, to many Evangelical denominations, but as its Evangelists they represent none. They go out for this Society without in any way taking part, publicly or privately, in questions relating to denominational differences, but only as Evangelists to preach the glorious Gospel of Christ to perishing sinners, in its fulness and freeness, and to seek, under the constraining power of the love of Christ, to win souls to Him.

The Evangelists sent out by the Society are always anxious to co-operate heartily with the godly ministers of any locality in which they are called to labour.

MEETINGS.

The Society is prepared to receive applications for Evangelistic Meetings, in any locality, from Clergymen or laymen.

MEANS.

The work of the Society is maintained by voluntary contributions, and Christians are invited to share the privilege of this work for Christ. Those who are disposed to help are requested to do so at once.

Contributions will be received by this paper; by the Hon. Sec.; or by the Treasurer.

PAST WORK.

The Report of the year 1887 can be had on application to the Hon. Sec., and will repay perusal.

Dundalk, May 16, 1888.

JAMES BARTON, Hon. Sec.

WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING? OR, The Progress of England Rome-wards.

By the Right Hon. LORD ROBERT MONTAGU,

Author of "Recent Events—and a Clue to Their Solution;" "Reasons for Leaving the Romish Church;" &c., &c.

"Some Ritualists know very well whither they are tending; and are, as it were, the agents of Rome to bring over the Church of England. I do not address them; for it would be useless. Some who become Ritualists do so—because it is, alas! the fashion; because the Bishops favour Ritualism and the Government promotes it. I do not speak to them. There are some who become Ritualists from a love of antiquity; but also with a hope of greater spirituality, and with a sincere desire to get nearer to God. I address myself to THEM, and beg to consider with me whither are they tending. I sympathise with them; for I felt a strong desire for more spirituality in religion, and once deemed that it would be found in the Roman Church."

Compiled and Sung by
IRA D. SANKEY.

Consisting of a Choice Assortment of New Pieces, with an approved Selection of Standard Hymns.

309 HYMNS AND TUNES; IN ONE VOLUME.

"This book is beautifully got-up. We casually opened upon what may be called 'a Standard Hymn,' headed with that precious portion, 'The Redeemed of the Lord shall Return,' and 'Come with Singing unto Zion.' In glancing through the work, we find it abounds with well-known hymns; hence it cannot but find a welcome to many a singing family."—Gospel Magazine.

"Three hundred and nine more Songs and Hymns, mostly of the same class as the former ones, with the addition of a few Standard Hymns and Tunes. We also recognize some from the 'Christian Choir.' The collection will, no doubt, be readily welcomed wherever its predecessor is found. And where is it that it is not found? It is almost an omnipresent book."

"We have read this volume with great care, and have been amply repaid by its contents. The varied events in the life of the Prophet are lucidly and graphically portrayed, and his character is admirably delineated. The doctrine is throughout consistently scriptural. Elijah's strong faith and temporary failure are powerfully reproduced. What we like much in the work is not only the happy use of Scriptural language, but likewise the practical lessons deduced from that old-world story and from the experiences of the Prophet for our own times and for ourselves individually. We cordially advise our readers to lose no time in putting themselves in possession of this really valuable little volume."

"We have had considerable pleasure in reading this book on the Life of Jacob. Mr. Meyer has great descriptive power. He can tell a narrative well. The subject in his hand glows with life; and the scenes and events in the history of his hero pass vividly before you, and are ever being used to force home on the readers some great and important principle. The volume is prettily got up, well bound, and embellished with frontispiece and illustrations."

CASE of BRONCHO-PHTHISIS, with CONSUMPTION of the LUNGS.—Mrs. M. E KING, of EAST RUSTON (Norwich).

On the 18th August last year Mrs. King, unable t come to me, wrote me as follows:—

"Having lost my mother and sister with consump tion, and having severe symptoms of the same so myself, I thought I would apply to you at once. Te years ago I had inflammation of the lungs, which le me very weak; now, for the last two years I have su fered from distressing shortness of breath. For twelv months I have been expectorating, and for the last fe weeks the phlegm has been mixed with blood. My leg swell. My body has shrunk, and my strength has de clined more of late. I have a pain in my left side Dear Sir, I feel you will do the best you can for me."

I sent her medicine and advice, which she continue to follow for several months.

Writing me on the 7th December, she says: "I ar pleased to say that, by the blessing of God on you treatment, I am now quite well again. I have lent you books, and shall recommend your treatment to all tha I can."—OLD SCHOOL HOUSE, EAST RUSTON.

TUNIS.

THE city of Tunis presents a type, still intact, f an Arab town of the middle ages (a little modified now, it is true, by the European buildings springing up outside). With its beautiful minarets, its inextricable labyrinths, its bazaars, and mysterious palaces, it carries one back to centuries past, and the Latin inscriptions sometimes seen on a wall and Phœnician capitals of ancient Carthage to centuries still earlier. Though much larger, it cannot be compared to Algiers, as it now is, but as it was in the time of the Deys.

When it was a State tributary to Turkey, and under arbitrary government, absolute though weak, it was obliged to send an armed force to collect the taxes, which sometimes were paid in lead and insolence. What with the tribes fighting among themselves, the towns oppressed by their governors, the peasants by their caïds, the army in arrears of pay resorting to exaction and theft, without roads or bridges, destitute of water supplies, the public debt annually augmenting, excessive taxes, injurious monopolies, and foreign trade impeded, it was a witness of the blight resting on most Mussulman states. All this, happily, is now changed by the social revolution effected by the French Protectorate, and the introduction of a wise and equitable administration. "The Bey reigns, but France governs" ("La Tunisie Française." Par M. de Campou. Paris: Baylé); railways, roads, ports, companies, developing its agricultural and other resources, and this without any charge on the protecting country, is a marvellous and gratifying contrast.

Although many of the tribes took part in the insurrectionary movement at the time of the French occupation, one or two military engagements completely dispersed them. They retreated to Tripolitana; but, after Aman was extended to them, they returned to their own country, and their first act, much to their credit, was to discharge their debts—the whole land is now pacified, the people in general much more submissive than those in Algeria, and travelling safe day and night throughout its whole extent. The Tunisians have learnt to appreciate the peace and security brought to them in God's kind providence by a better administration, which restrains lawlessness and allows everyone to possess his soul and goods in peace.

No wonder this splendid country was a favourite resort of the Romans, as the numerous ruins testify. Tunisie comprises the ancient Zeugitana, or Proconsular Africa, and Byzacena, now the Province of Kairouan. One earnestly longs that its lot may soon be that of the remaining Barbary States, Morocco and Tripoli. With the blessing of God, the "North Africa Mission" has been permitted to occupy this post in considerable strength, the majority of the labourers being French. We must pray for our brethren and sisters, that they may speedily grasp the language, and have a door opened of the Lord for access to hearts, both of men and women.

The population of Tunis, 125,000, is thus distributed: 100,000 Mussulmans, great frequenters of the mosque and assiduous in the observance of Rhamadan; a considerable number of Maltese; of Italians from Sicily, all fervent Roman Catholics; and 20,000 Jews, mostly shopkeepers, merchants, and bankers—they are more highly esteemed than in Morocco, domesticated, following their religion strictly, observing the Sabbath, and attending the synagogues; they speak both Hebrew and Arabic.

One can find in a poor-looking street, without any outward indications, a magnificent dwelling-house; one enters by an unpretentious door into an antechamber occupied by the servants; it opens into a square court, paved with marble, a fountain of water at the end, ornamented with mosaic, beautiful marble columns supporting a light and elegant piazza. On the right are the apartments of the ladies, where ingenuity and loving tact might find zenana work; in front, those of the master of the house, consisting of a long hall, the walls covered with Arabesque, the furniture simple, consisting of divans, old carpets, small looking-glasses, and various clocks. Here will be found the proprietor, who may be approached with the gift of an Arab Gospel, the Book of Light, the inspiration of which is recognised by an intelligent Mussulman. His habits are peculiar; he has his meals here alone, and eats with his fingers, in orthodox fashion. He will always be found well dressed; he is courteous, and never allows himself to be taken by surprise.

But now for the great mass of the people amongst whom our missionary brethren will labour. In the country the fellah keeps to his traditional plough which only scratches the earth, his gourbi is made of sundried brick, or rammed clay, roofed with stubble, and the floor of hard earth, the walls unplastered, no table, no picture, no bed, a mat is all that is required; no looking-glass; he dispenses with soap, and has no change of linen. One large room contains himself, his wife and family, the calves, and the lambs. His wife has only a dress of blue linen, the little girl a chemise, the son a bournous. The fellah is idle, and leaves his wife to grind the corn, prepare the oil and butter, make the couscous, and fetch water and fuel from the fields. At twelve, the girl is sold to another fellah: for money, if she is pretty; for corn, if she is not. His own wife may have cost him fifty piastres, his cow 300, his horse 500.

Labourers abound in the towns; but their earnings are very small. They can live upon a pennyworth of oil and two of bread a day. Many come up from Gabes and the mountains in the south, on the frontiers of Tripoli. They are Mussulmans; but many do not adhere to the orthodox sect. They are honest, sober, frugal, and industrious, and, if in a few years they have acquired a few hundred francs, they gladly turn their steps homewards, and purchase a garden or morsel of land. They are evidently of Berber origin, as well as the tribes located on the eastern coasts. Here are the Ouled Said, on the Enfida and the Gulf of Gabes, who were in conflict for a century with their neighbours the Zlass, the Mahdba, the Neffata, the Souassi, the Trabelsi, besides the more sedentary tribes of Djeradou, Takrouna and Zeriba. These latter live in their villages, like the Kabyles of Jurjura; but generally in well-built houses with terraces, marked with a large blue cross in front, probably denoting a Christian origin. They are noted for their hospitality and generosity, their respect for their word, and honesty. The nomad tribes live in camels'-hair tents, one year moving to a lake, another to a well, but always returning to the cemetery where their ancestors are buried.

The country teems with interesting memorials of early days: Carthage and its naval enterprise; Phœnician Utica, now in ruins; Porto Farina, a flourishing city up to the last century; Bizerta, destined to inherit its former power and to be the finest port on the Mediterranean, a Venice of North Africa; but the sacred city of Kairouan, the metropolis, under Okba-ben-Nefa, exceeds them all in its aureole of Mussulman souvenirs. It is situated in a naked plain, with its brick ramparts, towers, and bastions, and its heavy-looking massive minarets rising in its midst. Okba compelled the Berbers to transport five hundred columns of granite or porphyry, red, green, white, and blue, from their Christian churches in the Sabra to ornament his famous mosque. Once very populous, it has now only 20,000 inhabitants; but the foot of the Kafir has desecrated its high places, and there is nothing but the memory of its former power and prestige left.

A medical missionary could enter in with wondrous advantage, as charlatanism and imposture prevail almost universally, an instance of which is in the native doctor administering a stick of liquorice covered with verses of the Koran as an elixir to insure long life. God grant that our dear brethren and sisters may be empowered from on high to carry the light of truth and the power of love to many dear men and women in Tunisie, now withering under the blighting religion of the False Prophet. GEORGE PEARSE.

AUSTRALIAN NOTES.

VISITORS FROM SCOTLAND.

REV. DR. MARSHALL LANG, who has had charge of the Scots Church, the leading Presbyterian church in Melbourne, for the last three months, has won golden opinions both in Melbourne and Sydney. His congregation regret that he must so soon leave them, but have every confidence that his successor, Rev. A. Marshall, late of Inveresk, will worthily fill his position.

DR. LLEWELLYN BEVAN

is doing splendid work in this city among the business men. He holds mid-day services in the Great Collins-street Independent Church for the benefit of business men, who snatch a quarter of an hour to listen to his eloquent appeals. Dr. Bevan recognises the fact that sin and poverty are not always synonymous terms, and that the wealthy often want a missionary as much as the poor.

MR. VARLEY.

Mr. Henry Varley has received an enthusiastic welcome from his many friends in Melbourne. He has only been in our midst a few weeks, but has been kept hard at work preaching and visiting during the time. He has preached in many of the large suburban churches, and last Sunday he gave two addresses in the Theatre Royal, to which large audiences listened attentively. He also delivered a series of addresses to men only.

METHODIST UNION.

The Methodist New Connexion Church in Adelaide has united with the Bible Christian Conference Church in the same city. Methodist union is decided by the majority of the Wesleyan churches of the colonies to be desirable, but not at present expedient. However, it is cheering to note that, as in the case of the Adelaide churches, Methodists can forget their differences and unite for the purpose of doing good, when the town or district can only support one minister honourably.

THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION.

An International Temperance Congress is to be held in Sydney, N.S.W., in May. Papers on the scientific, social, economic, and other aspects of the drink question will be read and discussed. There never was a time when this question occupied more of the thoughts of colonial politicians. The temperance cause ought to receive a mighty impulse in New South Wales this winter, and the liquor traffic a proportionate stoppage. The well-known temperance reformer, Mr. Matthew Burnett, is opening a crusade against the drink traffic and its evils. Mr. R. T. Booth is also lecturing in New South Wales just now.

A WESLEYAN COLLEGE.

The Methodists of Victoria are naturally jubilant at the fact that they have just opened a Wesleyan college in connection with the Melbourne University, entitled, "Queen's College." The Anglican, Presbyterian, and Methodist denominations are now all three represented by handsome colleges affiliated to our University. The Victoria Independent hopes that the Congregationalists of Victoria will soon have a college of their own also. The managers of Queen's College have ventured upon the progressive step of admitting girl graduates to residence within the college walls. The master of Queen's College expects the happiest results from the arrangement.

AFTER SEVENTY YEARS.

Written for the Seventieth Anniversary of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society.

We have passed the Silver Wedding
Of the work we dearly love;
And we seem to love it better
As the cycles onward move.
No, we are not growing weary
Of the sailors and the sea;
For our hearts are knit and plighted
In affection full and free.

We have passed the Jubilation
Of a golden fifty years:
And the King upon the waters
Ruleth still, above our fears.
Other monarchs have departed,
But his sceptre must increase,
Till o'er all earth's troubled billows
He shall breathe his hallowed peace.

We have reached by God's appointment
To our threescore years and ten:
But our spirit is immortal,
And eternal in its ken.
Not a feeble man among us,
We are marching through the deep,
To the Canaan God has promised,
To the land his eye doth keep.

We are looking for the "after"
Of the blessed bygone days,
For the beautiful fulfilment
Of his promise and his praise.
He will visit us! He saith it,
After seventy years again:
So with eye undimmed and eager,
We are watching o'er life's main.

RESCUE WORK IN SYDNEY.

Mr. and Mrs. Ardill are carrying on very extensive rescue work in Sydney, N.S.W. They have established the Discharged Prisoners' Mission, the officers from which visit the gaol daily, having the privilege of speaking to all the prisoners to be released on the day following the visit. The male and female visitors daily attend the gates of the gaol on the discharge of the prisoners, and invite them to a free breakfast. During twelve months 18,450 meals and 6958 beds were supplied to men. Many prisoners have been led to abandon a life of vice. Recently there were staying at the Home of Welcome, waiting employment, three men who had spent 35, 32, and 17 years in gaol. The women are drafted to a Rescue Home. These friends have also an Open All-Night Refuge for Women, in which, during last year, 9091 beds and 14,104 meals were supplied. Many young women directed to this Home by the police and others have been restored to their friends. Situations have been secured for a large number.

The Home of Hope for Friendless and Fallen is now well known, and has proved most successful. Midnight meetings have proved very successful, being usually attended by from 60 to 70 of the fallen. The magistrates are in full sympathy with the work, and have handed over to the Police Court visitor over 50 girls during the year, instead of sending them to gaol.

Mr. and Mrs. Ardill have also opened a Registry Office and Home for female servants. Visitors attend the railway stations and steamers' wharves, and meet young girls upon their arrival in Sydney, and thus save them from the allurements of city life and the seductions of evil men and women. Already much good work has been accomplished. Mr. Ardill's address is: Temperance Hall, Pitt-street, Sydney.

MILITIA ON HOUNSLOW HEATH.—Early next month about 3000 militia men will be in camp. Tracts, leaflets, and suitable literature for distribution among them will be thankfully received by Rev. Samuel Wesley, Hampton House, Hounslow.

THE BRUSSELS EXHIBITION.

Sir,—Referring to the letter from Dr. Edith Huntley on the above subject which appeared in your issue of May 11, will you permit me to inform your readers that we put ourselves in communication with our friends in Brussels to see what could be done to provide safe and suitable lodgings for the young English women who, as soon as the exhibition is opened, will be employed to superintend the stalls, their position, of course, being one of great moral peril.

I am glad to say that the friends in Brussels had already bestirred themselves in the matter, and were keenly alive to the necessity of warning such and protecting these young women from the temptations and insidious evils which abound in a city. There are several Christian ladies in Brussels who will do their utmost to enable these young women to feel that, though strangers in a strange land, they are surrounded by those of their own sex who will at any time render whatever help and assistance they need.

Miss A. Bear, who is the hon. secretary of the Preventive and Rescue Committee of this Association, will be glad to give ladies, who may be contemplating a visit to Brussels, an introduction to friends there, who will be glad of any assistance they may be willing to render in the case of the English girls who, during the Exhibition, will be in charge of the stalls.

W. A. Coote, Secretary.

FRIENDS OF YOUNG WOMEN.

The first organised Conference of the International Union of the Friends of Young Women was held in Paris, during four days at the beginning of the month. Great impetus was given to the work by the meeting of representatives of many countries, and the reports that were read proved that the Union has been a special boon to girls who had been in positions of danger.

In the evenings large and successful public meetings were held, at which addresses were given by the principal Protestant pastors in Paris. Many important subjects were discussed, amongst others the need of steps being taken to prevent girls leaving their own country to seek their fortune in foreign lands.

The danger of taking situations through advertisements cannot be exaggerated. Only the other day a respectable French girl was just saved from great moral danger. Having happily missed the designing person who was to have met her, she fell back on information contained in the Union's "Guide," which she fortunately had in her pocket. It afterwards appeared that she had answered an advertisement, and had made no inquiries.

Ladies having the moral good of the young at heart, and desiring to help in the work, are invited to join the Union. Members receive lists of ladies all over the world who will look after young people, and they are also entitled to give away the Guide Book, containing a list of homes, registries, &c. Over 3000 girls visit the office yearly.

The need at present is for the Union to be better known, and those who can help by arranging drawing-room meetings will be doing a good work.

Applications for membership should be made to the hon. sec., International Union, 316, Regent-street, W., where further information may also be obtained.

HACKNEY HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN.—The annual meeting was held in the Wesleyan Schoolroom, Downs-road, Clapton, on Thursday week. Mr. J. E. Greenhill, chairman, called attention to the urgent need there is for this and kindred institutions, as blindness is greatly on the increase. There are twenty-three children at present in the Home, and several are awaiting admission as soon as larger premises are available.

DESTITUTE BOYS OF LONDON.

The large building which has recently been erected in Shaftesbury-avenue, St. Giles, as a memorial to the late philanthropic Earl of Shaftesbury, and which is to be devoted to the benefit of destitute boys, was opened on Tuesday, last week, by the Countess of Jersey.

Mr. W. Williams, secretary to the Committee of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, read a statement, which showed that the operations of the Committee commenced in a humble way forty-five years ago, the object being to give secular and religious instruction to the most wretched and destitute children in St. Giles. The work had grown to such an extent that the Committee had now several large institutions under their care. In the Ships and Homes together there were nearly 1000 boys and girls wholly maintained. Since the establishment of the Homes, over 10,000 boys and girls had been admitted, and over 9000 sent to service at home or abroad.

The new Home is meant to accommodate 100 boys, as well as 35 working boys, who will pay for their board and lodgings according to the wages they receive. The "Ashley Club and Institute," with all the usual comforts for "old boys," will also find a home in Shaftesbury House.

CONFERENCE IN TASMANIA.

In the middle of March the ministers of the different Churches in Launceston convened a General Conference for the deepening of spiritual life. The matter was warmly taken up by many interested in the progress of the Lord's work. The Conference proved a great success, and must be productive of lasting blessing. Through the liberality of one or two friends we were enabled to issue invitations to all the ministers in Tasmania (Episcopal excepted), free of charge, so that they might come up for the week, and be refreshed in spirit. As many as were free from other engagements accepted the invitation, so that we had a goodly number of ministering brethren present. It was cheering to us all to meet each other, converse and pray together, and listen to the messages that were delivered by God's servants. Two brethren came from Melbourne, Rev. Allan Webb and Rev. H. S. Mercer; their words were specially helpful at the Conference.

The meetings were held in the afternoons at the Universal Church, in the evenings at the various large churches in rotation. Hundreds gathered at these evening meetings, and at the closing communion, fully 600 must have sat together around the Lord's Table in happy fellowship. Such a gathering had never before been seen in Launceston, and we praised God for giving us such a time of blessing.

The subjects chosen were "Waiting on God," "The Fulness of Blessing," and "The Believer's Separation unto God." To many new and startling light was thrown on these subjects, for the privileges of the child of God were clearly pointed out, and the responsibility to use them to the glory of God.

Many requests for prayer from different parts of the island were sent in, and the spiritua interest in subjects grew as the days went by We look for increased activity in service, truer holiness of walk and character, and separation from the world, as the results of the Conference To some of us who have had the joy of attending Mildmay Conferences, this one was a mos precious reminder of bygone days, and, at the same time, a pledge of fuller blessing and wider usefulness in these Australian colonies We hope that the Conference will be an annua one, and a connecting link of many scattere interests in the Master's work.

George Soltau.

The Book World.

Millie's Disappearance, and what came of r. By Mary E. Shepherd. Honesty is the best olicy; hypocrisy will sooner or later be detected. hese wholesome morals are well pointed in this leasant little story. (1s. 6d. T. Woolmer.)

Holy Thoughts for Quiet Moments. By ev. A. Hunter Dunn. This is a book of meditaions such as robust Christians would not think of sing. High Church doctrine pervades the volume, nd it is difficult to conceive what useful purpose it an serve. (Roper & Drowley, Ludgate-hill.)

The Trinity of Evil. By Canon Wilberforce. s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. We are glad to find hat these vigorous papers on infidelity, impurity, nd intemperance, have reached a third edition in very handy combined form. It is to be hoped hat many more readers will yet be found for this seful book by this eminent and earnest Christian vorker.

The Inner Mission. By Rev. Dr. Paton. 1s. sbister. The "inner mission," an expression from ermany, is that within a land in which the hurch is planted, rather than the mission to the uter world. This little book contains four very uggestive papers, in which various kinds of Chrisian work are indicated, and discussed with reference to different countries and conditions.

From Stable Boy to Merchant Prince. By B. Liles Burnett. 1s. Marshall Brothers. In this ttractive story industry and integrity are commended by a record of the commercial success ttained by one who began life in a lowly station, nd achieved some kind of social distinction. There is but little fiction in the book, for "John Lovegood" stands for a real man, now deceased.

Ingersoll Unmasked (2d. J. Kensit) is a very horough-going and damning exposure, apparently ased on the most reliable evidence, of the private haracter and career of the notorious American nfidel, R. G. Ingersoll. It would be well if this renchant exposé were widely circulated among our working men, who are in danger of being misled by he sophistries of sceptical lecturers and demagogues.

Faithful Service. By Rev. F. W. Dodd. s. Marshall Brothers. A series of short papers on ractical Christianity, bearing the impress of truth nd spiritual power. Mr. Dodd is an experienced mission preacher, but here he seeks rather to build up them that believe. Different kinds of service, service tested, service rewarded, are all suggestive itles. We hope this little volume will be widely irculated.

Modern Romanism, neither Scriptural, Primitive, nor Catholic, is the title of a very useful work, by Rev. W. T. Hobson, M.A., vicar of St. Barnabas, Douglas, Isle of Man, written in reply to a pamphlet, published by a local Roman Catholic priest. In the course of a hundred closely-printed pages, Mr. Hobson attacks the Papal system, and thoroughly exposes its arrogant assumptions and unscriptural claims. (1s. Stock.)

Where is Calvary? By Walter J. Mayers. S. W. Partridge & Co. There are twenty plain papers n this little illustrated book. Beginning with the simple truths of the Gospel, they proceed to touch upon matters pertaining to Christian character, progress, and duty, and close with thoughts upon the end of life, and the solemnities of the future. The book is likely to greatly profit devout readers. It is inscribed, "with warm gratitude, sincere esteem, and ever-deepening love" to Mr. C. H. Spurgeon.

Hildebrand and His Times. By Rev. W. R. W. Stephens. 2s. 6d. Longmans, Green & Co. Students of the history of the Papacy will find this volume of the "Epochs of Church History" series very useful. The period surveyed includes nearly the whole of the eleventh century and the first twenty years of the twelfth. The age was fruitful of great men and great achievements, and was characterised by movements and enterprises which did much to shape the future course of European affairs. The most momentous change effected during the period, however, was the uplifting of the Papacy from the degradation into which it had sunk, and in this Hildebrand (afterwards Pope Gregory VII.) was easily the chief actor. The events of this remarkably stirring time are well outlined in this excellent handbook.

Lectures on the Revelation (5s.), Lectures on the Epistle of St. John (2s.), and Lectures on the Epistle to the Hebrews (1s. 6d.), are three very useful expository works, by the late Mr. W. Lincoln, of Beresford Chapel. They are calculated to greatly assist plain readers in their study of the sacred oracles. (J. E. Hawkins.)

The Controversial Methods of Romanism. By Rev. A. Brinckmann. Swan Sonnenschein, Lowry & Co. "It is impossible to trust any statements made by Roman controversialists in their efforts to draw away to their communion members of the Church of England." Such is the sweeping indictment of this ritualistic clergyman, and he fully substantiates it by copious quotations from dead and living Roman Catholic writers and the leading Roman Catholic journals. Yet, strange to say, at the close of the book, he urges that Roman and Anglican priests should join together in St. Paul's prayer for the re-union of Christendom. If Romanists are so dishonest in controversy, may they not be equally dishonest in prayer? Christendom is more likely to be purified and united if all who see Rome's inherent falsehood cease all connection with her, and rally round an open Bible and a Divine High Priest.

Jewish Portraits. By Lady Magnus. 5s. T. Fisher Unwin. Seven papers which have already been published in magazine and review form, are here presented in one volume. The subjects are specially attractive to those who are interested in post-Biblical Judaism, and the style is uniformly pleasant and picturesque. The critical standpoint is that of the highly-favoured British Jew, to whom the traditional hopes and aspirations of the "nation scattered and peeled" are little better than idle dreams. The article on Daniel Deronda shows no sympathy with the heart longings of the millions of poor and down-trodden Hebrews in Eastern Europe—men who not only do not cease to declare their belief that God will, in due course, "send their Messiah," but who also pray for the restoration of Jehovah's "good pleasure unto Zion." The sketches of Manasseh Ben Israel, and Moses Mendelssohn are specially interesting.

It is stated that Mr. C. H. Spurgeon is busy upon a work on Isaiah, to be executed on the same lines as his well-known "Treasury of David."

The Young Standard Bearer is an attractive halfpenny illustrated monthly, published by the Church of England Temperance Society.

Joyful Songs for Sunday-school and Home. Cloth wrapper, 3d. Sunday-school Union. Old notation music in the treble and alto parts accompanies this selection of 200 hymns.

The Joy of Faith is the title of a little book by Rev. J. C. Whish, designed to provide "meditations suited to the aged Christian in the prospect of death." (6d. G. Stoneman, 67, Paternoster-row.)

A pamphlet on The Possibilities of Congregationalism, by "Presbyter" (2d. Elliot Stock), contains many valuable suggestions as to the perfecting of church government, discipline, and arrangements.

Through the kindness of a friend the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland are sending copies of the Memoir of the late Hon. Ion Keith-Falconer to the whole of the theological students in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen.

Lord Robert Montagu has written yet another pamphlet on the temporal tactics of the Church of Rome. In The Pope, The Government, and The Plan of Campaign, he says many things which have an important bearing on the present political situation. (2d. Kensit.)

Christian Testimony and Bible Study is the title of a tract recently published by the Evangelical Alliance, containing two addresses of sterling value, which were delivered by Revs. Principal Cairns and Dr. C. Clemance, at the Aberdeen Conference of the Alliance last September. (3s. per 100.)

The United Kingdom Band of Hope Union have brought together in a pamphlet a large and important body of testimony in favour of using non-alcoholic wines at the Lord's Supper. It deserves to be widely circulated, especially among young believers. Copies, price 1d., may be had from the office of the Union, 4, Ludgate-hill.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The Echo thinks the police have been supine in their treatment of proprietary clubs, betting and gambling houses in London.

Miss Alice Broadbent is doing grand rescue work in connection with the Police-court and Prison-gate Mission of the C.E.T.S., Liverpool.

Mr. Gladstone writes that he is against the licensing clauses of the Local Government Bill, against the provision for compensation, and against the creation of a vested interest in licences.

The contractors for the Metropolitan Sewage Works at Barking are stated to have refused an offer for the privilege of setting up a canteen for the sale of intoxicants, on the premises, during the period the work is in progress.

Rev. Jackson Wray, pastor of Whitfield's Tabernacle, announces that henceforth he will not only be an abstainer, but will take an active part in temperance work. We give him a hearty welcome to the temperance ranks.

Mr. W. C. Amery, Birmingham, has published a statement of "Licensing Facts," in which he proves that in various parts of the country large numbers of licences have been withdrawn, not for misconduct, but because they were not wanted, and without any thought of compensation.

Sunday closing is being much discussed in Ireland. In Belfast there has been a great demonstration in favour of entire closing on the Day of Rest, and also of change in the law regarding bonâ-fide travellers. Early closing on Saturday nights is very popular. In Ulster both political parties are enthusiastic about temperance reform, and the direct veto finds favour on all hands.

FOREIGN.

From the colony of Mauritius rum is being continuously poured into Madagascar.

The New York Senate has, by unanimous vote, passed a Bill prohibiting the sale of cigarettes, cigars, or tobacco, to minors.

Local Option is at work in Victoria, Australia. In the towns of Port Melbourne, Rochester, and Williamstown, forty-three hotels are to be closed.

A new branch of the Temperance League has been opened at Fort Manoel, Malta, under the presidency of Major MacKinlay, R.A. At the "Rest" 174 pledges have been taken.

All the Free Church of Scotland Presbyteries have agreed to petition Parliament to take measures for suppressing the drink traffic between merchants and the native races of Africa.

The Free Church of Scotland Temperance Society claims to be numerically the largest temperance organisation in Scotland. It has 650 abstaining ministers, and over 600 Congregational Societies and Bands of Hope in connection with it.

THE Y.M.C.A. OF MELBOURNE is about to erect new premises, at a cost of £65,000, towards which the Speaker of the Victorian Assembly has given £1000. The agents of the Sailors' Mission, established by the Sydney Y.M.C.A. have visited 213 large ships during the half-year of its existence, issued 8000 personal invitations, and distributed 7000 tracts.

PARIS.—The Daily News announces that a wealthy American gentleman has offered to erect a large and expensive building for the Y.M.C.A., which would appear to be in vigorous working, since it could draw together 2000 in the Protestant Church of the Rue St. Honoré. Evangelical religion in France, according to reports of different agencies, is in a hopeful state, and certainly if young men take hold of the work in a right way there is good prospect of the long-deferred renovation of French society. Protestantism can even in France show itself capable of influencing and inspiring, and as soon as young men feel that a great start will be made. To the company of Protestants in Paris there opens one of the finest and most urgent missions of the present time.—British Weekly.

FRANCE.—The breath of God's Spirit is indeed passing over the Protestant churches of Moncoutant, Aulnay, and Matha in the Departments Deux-Sèvres and Charente Inférieure. In a paper published by Pastor Vernier. we read that a family, animated by the spirit of the Gospel, was led to reside at Mons, who by prayer and labour have succeeded in setting up four places for prayer and preaching in the neighbouring villages. From these places converts have been given, so at Mons a regular meeting is held for their instruction. At Chizé, a large borough of Poitou, M. Reveillaud and others have preached the Gospel to more than 300 Roman Catholics, who listened with deep and animated interest, and begged the evangelists to come again, and to give them regular meetings. At Parthenay many are hungering and thirsting for the truth, while the priests are furious.—Le Signal.

Sunday Afternoon, June 3.

JESUS CRUCIFIED.

ORDER OF EVENTS PRECEDING.—(1) Peter's denials (Matt. xxvi. 69—75). (2) The Sanhedrim reassemble at dawn, and condemn Jesus (Matt. xxvii. 1). (3) Jesus is sent to Pilate. They want power from him to put Him to death. (Matt. xxvii. 2). (4) Pilate's interview with the Jews without the hall (John xviii. 28—32; Luke xxiii. 2). Jesus within the judgment hall. (5) Pilate tries Jesus, but finds no fault (Matt xxvii. 11—14; Mark xv. 2—5). (6) Pilate sends Jesus to Herod (Luke xxiii. 6—12). (7) Jesus once more before Pilate. Acquitted (Luke xiii. 8—16). (8) Jesus, or Barabbas (Matt. xxvii. 15—18; Mark xv. 6—10). (9) Message of warning from Pilate's wife, while people are deciding (Matt. xxvii. 19). (10) Barabbas chosen: "Crucify Him!" (Matt. xxvii. 20—23; Mark xv. 11—13). (11) Pilate seeks to save Jesus (Matt. xxvii. 23; Mark xv. 12—14; John xix. 14—16). (12) Pilate washes his hands (Matt. xxvii. 24). (13) The sentence (Mark xv. 15). (14) Scourging and mockery (Matt. xxvii. 26—30; Mark xv. 16—19: John xix. 1—3. (15) Judas commits suicide (Matt. xxvii. 3—10). (16) Jesus led away to be crucified (Matt. xxvii. 31; Mark xv. 20).

THE SEVEN WORDS FROM THE CROSS.—(1) "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do" (Luke xxiii. 34). Praying in intense agony! and for his enemies! For a moment He almost forgets his pain in loving thoughts for them. (2) "To-day thou shalt be with Me in Paradise" (Luke xxiii. 43, 44). How wonderful! Not only does He save a dying thief, but He, the Saviour Himself, is dying when He thus saves. So earnest is He to save, that He saves from the cross! (3) "Woman, behold thy Son" (John xix. 27). He now cares for his mother, committing her to the care of John. (4) "Eli, Eli, lama Sabachthani" (Matt. xxvii. 46). "Emmanuel's orphaned cry." Probably this cry marked the extreme of our Lord's suffering. Who can tell the mystery of sorrow it expresses? (5) "I thirst" (John xix. 28). The thirst said to have been suffered by crucified men was beyond endurance. (6) "It is finished" (John xix. 30). Glorious words! "Jesus did it, did it all, long, long ago." Salvation is complete, and, therefore, a free gift. (7) "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit" (Luke xxiii. 46). See Acts vii. 59, and Ps. xxxi. 5).

CRUCIFIXION.—The most awful, as it was the most ignominious of deaths. And yet the Holy One suffers this! "Death by crucifixion seems to include all that pain and death can have of the horrible and the ghastly—dizziness, cramp, thirst, starvation, sleeplessness, publicity of shame, long continuance of torment—all intensified, just up to the point at which they can be endured at all, but all stopping just short of the point which would give to the sufferer the relief of unconsciousness." —Farrar. One of the special horrors of crucifixion was that the victim could not even writhe in his pain without fresh torture. The intense agony of inflammation was another.

Observe how Jesus refused the vinegar and gall (ver. 34). This was a stupefying drink, provided by merciful women of Jerusalem, in pity for dying criminals. But Jesus will drink the cup of suffering to its dregs. Here, indeed, is courage!

Notice the peculiar ignominy of Christ's death. Between two thieves!—as though in fit company—and perhaps worse even than they. Yet, how this fulfils Scripture (Isa. liii. 12). Also, how it is gloriously used for Christ's comfort and glory. But for this great insult there would be no story of the dying thief.

See how the meanest fiend of hell, the mocking spirit, rages (vv. 39—44). In crucifixion, the [illegible] were but a foot or two from the [illegible] right in the midst of the [illegible] crowd. He was dying for them, and yet they mocked him in his very death!

See in the Cross how God hates and [illegible] "the Just for the unjust," frees us from the curse, and brings us home to God; and how we should love others, and forgive [illegible]

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(1) Self-sacrifice.—During a plague in Marseilles, the doctors decided that nothing could be done to stay it unless some doctor could be found who would dissect the body of another who had just died of the plague, and so discover the nature of the disease. The man who dared this task would surely take the plague. Yet one, Dr. Guyon, was found to do it. He set his affairs in order, bade his family and friends farewell, went to the hospital, dissected the corpse, wrote his observations, and there took ill of the plague, and died in a few hours. It is added that his observations taught the other doctors how to meet the plague, and it was stayed.

(2) There is the grand story of the hero Winkelreid, who bought victory for his countrymen with his own life, by rushing upon the crowding spears of the foemen, gathering them with his arms into his own body, till a gap was made on either side of him, through which his comrades rushed in to victory.

3.—The power of the Cross.—Col. G—— was a drunken, immoral man. But one night he saw in a dream the Saviour hanging on the cross, and gazing upon him. He thought he heard Him say:—"I suffered this for thee, and is this thy return?" He felt his awful ingratitude, sought pardon, and became a noble Christian soldier.

4.—Wounded for our transgressions.—A little girl in a Mission-school, one day heard the Superintendent telling how they nailed Jesus to the cross. She was moved to tears, and had to rise and go out. When afternoon came, she was in her place smiling. "Where did you go this morning, Mary?" asked the Superintendent. "Oh, teacher! I could not stand it when you spoke to us about Jesus being nailed to the cross, for I felt just as if I helped to pound the nails in; and I went off a little piece from the school, and got down on my knees, and told Jesus that my sins helped to hang Him on the cross. I asked Him to forgive me for helping to kill Him, and told Him I was so sorry. I am so happy now."

(5) How we should love Him.—Mrs. Browning, in her poem, "The Seraphim," pictures the amazement of the angel host as they gaze upon their dying Lord. One seraph, Ador the Strong, exclaims, "Thou infinite, and worthy infinite love! Love Him more, O man, than sinless seraphs can!" To this another seraph, Zerah, the Bright One, replies, "Yea, love Him more!" And the angelic multitude echo the strain, "Yea, more! Love Him more!"

NO COMPENSATION. — Arrangements have been made for holding a demonstration in Hyde Park, on Saturday, June 2, against the proposed compensation clauses of the Local Government Bill. Mr. F. N. Charrington is Chairman, and Messrs. J. Hilton, S. Insull, and H. J. Osborn are hon. secs. of the Committee.

HAMMERSMITH Y.M.C.A.—The fifth anniversary was celebrated a few days ago, when a very successful public meeting was presided over by Mr. J. Herbert Tritton. Addresses were delivered by Rev. H. Dening, Dr. J. H. Gladstone, Messrs. W. Hind Smith, and others. The great usefulness of the Association was testified to by many.

SOUTH NORWOOD.—Every summer during the past six years tent missions have been held in connection with the South Norwood Branch of the London City Mission, and many persons have been won to the Gospel standard at the meetings. On June 8 next a tent holding about 500 persons will be opened, and it is hoped that the seventh season will be attended by much blessing.

IRISH PRESBYTERIAN MISSION IN GUJARAT AND KATHIAWAR.—The report for 1887 tells of much religious, educational, and medical activity by devoted labourers. The Gospel was preached in hundreds of villages, and Scripture portions were widely distributed, to a large extent without any apparent result; yet there has been distinct progress, fifty-eight converts from Hinduism having joined during the year.

"A LONELY WORKER IN SOUTH AFRICA."—Will you kindly convey my warm thanks to the numerous friends who have written to me, and to those who send me THE CHRISTIAN: their letters have been truly welcome, and have cheered me much. I am greatly grieved that the king will not allow any more missionaries in the country. My friends are urging me strongly to leave this country for the sake of my children, but until I can obtain permission for another to take my place here as witness for God, I shall feel it my duty to remain.—Yours truly, (MRS.) C. H. THOMAS.

Sunday Afternoon, June 3.

THE LOST SHEEP.—LUKE xv. 3—7.

JESUS received sinners, and went to be their guest. For this reason the Scribes and Pharisees murmured. Their sneer was in reality a note of praise, and the stone of malice they hurled at the Blessed One has become one of the brightest jewels in his crown. Luke xv. contains three parables, but there is no tautology. A lost sheep might find its way back, unsought, to the fold, but a piece of money couldn't find its way back, unsought, to the owner's purse. The piece of money was lost; but, as it had no personality, it could not be blamed for being lost: but the son of the third parable was to blame for going astray from the father's house. The first of the parables gives us the thought of waywardness, the second, of insensibility, and the third, of wilfulness. It is with the first we have now to do. Note what is said of—

(1) THE WANDERING SHEEP.—This sheep (a) Had an owner.—The hundred sheep are supposed to be the property of some person ("if he have"). The wealth of the patriarchs consisted largely of sheep and oxen (Job. i. 3). Souls are a Divine property ("All souls are mine," Ezek. xviii. 4). Men are not the property of Satan, and they are not their own. (b) Was a solitary sheep. The owner goeth after "that which is lost." The love of Christ is concentrated upon individuals (Comp. "who loved me," Gal. ii. 20). See this in the Gospel of John. Jesus went after Nicodemus (ch. iii.), the woman of Samaria (ch. iv.), and the man born blind (ch. ix.). (c) Was lost.—Lost as the result of wandering (Ps. cxix. 176). The wandering of the soul from God involves iniquity ("gone astray" ... "the iniquity," Is. liii. 6). The sheep was lost because it was unable to find its way back. Man left to himself has no disposition and no ability to return to God. Even when there is a wish to return, there is no power to do so apart from Divine direction ("they shall ask the way," Jer. l. 5, and "which shew unto us the way" Acts xvi. 17). Note here the owner's sense of lo (comp. "How shall I give thee up," Hosea xi. 8). (d) Was prized.—The owner's anxious search shows that he set a value upon the sheep. God thinks much of a human soul (Ps. xlix. 8; Mark viii. 36). (e) Was helpless.—"Other animals," says Professor Calderwood, "taken from their accustomed haunts, turn their faces in the right direction." A sheep has no such tendency. It rather wanders further and further away. Well might David say, "seek thy servant" (Ps. cxix. 46). The search for God is hopeless, unless God seeks for the searcher. (f) Would be in a state of unrest.—"Bleating vainly," says one, "for help, and startled by everything that moves" (Is. lvii. 20). (g) Was in danger.—Might fall into a pit (Luke xiv. 5), or get entangled in a thicket (Gen. xxii. 13), or be devoured by wild beasts (Ezek. xxxiv. 8), or die of starvation (Mark vi. 34; Luke xv. 17).

(2) THE SHEPHERD'S SEARCH.—Note (a) What the shepherd left.—"Doth he not leave." Jesus left the glory of the Father (John xvii. 5). (b) What He endured.—"Go after" (comp. Matt. xviii. 11 and Luke xix. 10). "There is no extreme," says Calderwood, "to which the Saviour will not follow."

(3) THE DISCOVERY.—"Till he find it." The bringing back of man to God is the work of the Saviour, but observe that there is due regard for repentance ("repenteth," ver. 7). Repentance is the gift of God (Acts v. 31), but it is also a human experience (Acts iii. 19), and must be associated with faith in Jesus (Mark i. 15).

(4) THE HOME-BRINGING.—"On his shoulders" (comp. "his shoulder," Is. ix. 6). One shoulder enough to uphold the universe, but both used to bring the sinner back to God. The sheep is brought to the owner's home, not to the wilderness.

(5) THE REJOICING.—Jesus rejoices (Heb. xii. 2). His friends are those who keep his commandments (John xv. 14), and his neighbours those who live near to Him (Ps. cxlviii. 14). See a glimpse of the joy of the home-bringing in Acts viii. 8.

VIGILANCE WORK IN LIVERPOOL.—The report for 1887 of the Liverpool Association for the Suppression of Immorality, gives an account of much that has been done to close houses of ill fame and care for their unfortunate inmates. It actually seems that many of the disreputable houses of the city are the property of the corporation.

A MISSIONARY BREAKFAST.

The annual missionary breakfast organised by Mr. Frank H. White, of the Talbot-road Tabernacle, Bayswater, was held in Powis Hall, on Monday last. Mr. White presided at the subsequent meeting, and there was a large company of friends present. Whilst the tables were being cleared the company adjourned to the new tabernacle, which is now rapidly approaching completion. Here "All hail the power of Jesu's name" was sung, and Rev. J. Hudson Taylor offered a deeply touching prayer that, when finished, the tabernacle might become the birthplace of many souls, and a training school for missionaries. When the party returned to the hall, Mr. White said that the breakfast meeting had its rise in a little gathering of young men some ten years ago, the object being to stir one another up to missionary effort.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, in an earnest and impressive address, thankfully acknowledged that God has given the China Inland Mission many workers through the ministry of Mr. White. Speaking of the importance of promoting missionary enterprise more than ever, Mr. Taylor said the tidings from China this year have been most remarkable. In the new sphere of labour, where twelve months ago the Gospel was unknown, souls have been saved, and believers baptized, and taken into Church fellowship. Two sisters went to a station in December last, and within two months in sixteen families the idols were destroyed, and every vestige of idolatry removed.

Rev. L. Caley gave a brief exposition of Matt. xx., and then Pastor G. Lecoat, of Bretagne, with the aid of his wife as interpreter, gave an account of the marvellous work being done there. A large number of the people of Bretagne have not yet got the Bible in their own language. Pastor Lecoat has translated the Bible into the Bretagne language, and the work is now in the press. Much success has attended the pastor's efforts among the Roman Catholics.

Mr. F. Baller, of the Inland Mission, who was brought to the Lord through the instrumentality of Mr. White, gave abundant testimony that God is blessing the preaching of his word wherever it is carried in China. Signor Turino, in a stirring speech, denounced in most emphatic terms the evils of Popery in Italy, and showed that there was every necessity at the present time for the Christian Church at large using to its fullest extent all the power it possessed to counteract the influence of the Church of Rome.

Both Mr. White and Mr. Taylor referred in pathetic language to the recent sudden death of Miss Dawson, who was taken home very shortly after arriving in China under the auspices of the Inland Mission. She was a member of Mr. White's church.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—Our friends in charge of this Mission have secured an excellent array of speakers for the annual gathering at Mildmay Conference Hall next Tuesday afternoon and evening; these include Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, Dr. Grattan Guinness, Mr. G. B. Studd, and several missionaries who have been in the field.

SLAVERY IN EGYPT.—Mr. C. H. Allen, secretary of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, speaks in warm terms of praise of the facilities afforded in Egypt for the emancipation of slaves. He says: "It is now becoming generally known by the slaves that they can at any time obtain their freedom by presenting themselves at one of the offices of the Slave Trade Department, and demanding papers of manumission, and of this they are not slow to avail themselves, as between 2000 and 3000 annually claim their freedom. It is satisfactory to find that the convention made with the late Khedive, prohibiting the sale of slaves from house to house in Egypt proper, after 1884, is now actually in process of being carried out, as any one buying or selling a slave is subject to heavy penalties."

A CRYING EVIL.

Dear Sir,—Having resided in England but a short time, I saw to-day, for the first time, in a street near the Strand, the shameless manner in which disgusting, impure books and prints are paraded before the eyes of the youth of this city. Surely some strong effort should be made to put down the indecencies so openly exhibited. In one shop alone I saw enough to poison for ever the minds of hundreds of growing boys and girls.

While I stood looking with surprise and disgust at the display, two boys of about fourteen came up. One of them, pointing to an instrument invented by the devil's agents, said, "That is what I was telling you about." This shows but too plainly the consequences of the vicious traffic. The strong efforts made to save the young from the evil around them are thus constantly counteracted.

Yours sincerely, Geo. E. Williams.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Of the two hundred Hebrew Christian ministers in the United Kingdom more than a hundred belong to the Church of England.

Rev. Ll. Caley, curate of St. Matthew's, Bayswater, has held a special mission at Emmanuel Church, West-hill, Hastings. The services were largely attended, and there have been encouraging results.

Archdeacon Blackeney, of Sheffield, says he believes there never was a time when the clergy and those assisting them were more earnest and devoted in their work than at present, or when a deeper impression was made upon the people at large.

Rev. W. I. Hillier, of Exeter, who is stated to be an evangelical and able preacher, has accepted the living of St. Luke's, Sheffield. Mr. Hillier received his theological training in Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College, and was, until a few years ago, a Baptist minister at Exeter.

BAPTIST.

Mr. Spurgeon says he has read Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" and "Holy War" more than any other books.

In connection with Cottage-green Chapel, Camberwell, during the past winter 11,545 breakfasts were given to poor children, at a total cost of £51 19s. 4d.

Rev. J. W. Harrald, of Beulah Chapel, Thornton Heath, reports forty-eight baptisms during the year, and a total membership of eighty-three, most of whom have joined since the church was opened twelve months ago.

Rev. George Wainwright, pastor of Coupland-street Chapel, Manchester, has intimated to his congregation, much to their regret, that in consequence of his recent illness, and acting under the doctor's advice, he will be compelled to relinquish the oversight of the church, and seek a sphere of work on the South Coast.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new mission chapel has been opened at Nether-green, Woodhouse-street, Leeds, where much good has been accomplished since the work was started some time since.

At Rev. J. W. Atkinson's nineteenth anniversary of settlement at Latimer Chapel, Stepney, encouraging reports were given of the work done by the various agencies connected with the church.

At Plashet-park, E., a church has been formed of over sixty members, and there are 155 scholars in the Sunday-school, with twelve teachers. In this neighbourhood there is large scope for Christian work.

In connection with Hope-street Congregational Church, Hull (Rev. E. C. Jones, pastor), a seven days' Gospel Mission, conducted by Rev. R. Balgarnie, was concluded on Sunday last. The results were most encouraging.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has concluded an eight days' mission in connection with Abbott's Roaching Congregational Church. Several professed to make decision for Christ, while the church has been much encouraged and strengthened.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Principal Oswald Dykes preaches his farewell sermons in Regent-square Church, on Sunday next.

Rev. Martin Lewis has commenced his ministry at Gravesend under very hopeful circumstances.

A London Presbyterian has generously offered to support for three years a medical missionary and two native assistants, in connection with the Irish Presbyterian Church, at a new station in India.

At the meeting of South London Presbytery, last week, a letter was read conveying the painful intelligence that Rev. A. N. Mackray, of Croydon, was threatened with the complete loss of his eyesight, having already virtually lost the sight of one eye. Amid many expressions of sympathy, Mr. Mackray was formally granted four months' leave of absence.

The late Mr. R. Mackay Smith, of Edinburgh, formerly Russian merchant in Glasgow, has bequeathed £500, respectively, to the Moravian Missions in Greenland, the Palestine Exploration Fund, the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, and to Mr. Thomas Davidson, in aid of his good work in behalf of the street-arabs of the Scottish metropolis. Large sums are also bequeathed to several charitable institutions.

METHODIST.

The Wesleyans have decided to begin a mission in September in the West-end of Edinburgh.

Rev. Thomas Cook has been holding special services at Swansea. The result has been a great ingathering of converts, and a quickening of the spiritual life of believers.

The "Forward Movement" is rapidly spreading among the hills and valleys of Wales. At Brecon and Hay people's services are held after the usual services on Sunday nights, preceded by open-air meetings. The proceedings are enlivened by vocal and instrumental music, brief addresses, revival hymns, and other attractive features.

Rev. Thomas Champness has received applications from Rev. G. Sargeant, President of the West Indian Conference, for an evangelist; Rev. S. Langdon, of Ceylon, who asks for a married evangelist to take charge of an industrial school; and from Rev. J. Hudson, of Bangalore, who applies for two men for Canarese work. Mr. Champness has engaged some eight or nine additional evangelists, who will be employed in the home work. He is resolved not to send any men abroad until he has first proved them in the English work.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A new tent, capable of holding about 700 persons, to be used for evangelistic purposes, under the auspices of the Methodist General Mission, was pitched last week at Derrygonnelly, a little town full of public-houses, and [illegible] known by the name of "Sodom," not far from Enniskillen.

Rev. Dr. Stuart, of Londonderry, has held a successful series of Gospel mission services in Wellington-street Presbyterian Church, Ballymena; a similar series of services have been held during the past fortnight in Littlemount schoolroom, co. Fermanagh, by Messrs. Dixon and Robinson, Methodist evangelists.

Rev. W. H. Aitken, who is now in his fifth week at Belfast, and whose services have been greatly blessed, addressed a crowded meeting for men only in the Ulster Hall on the "Purity Question," on Saturday night. To give as many as possible an opportunity of attending, Mr. Aitken's meetings have been held this week in the Ulster Hall, which holds about 4000 persons.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Robert W. Logan, for some years a missionary of the American Board on the island of Ruk, Micronesia.—Rev. Frederick Francis Tracy, of St. Barnabas', Cambridge, an evangelical Protestant clergyman, and a faithful servant of the Lord.—Rev. Dr. Keil, of Leipzig, well-known as a commentator of the Old Testament.—Rev. John Cather, rector of Westport, and Archdeacon of Tuam, an earnest, evangelical minister of the Gospel.—Rev. Adam Montgomery, minister of Ballycairn Presbyterian Church, and for nearly fifty years clerk of the Belfast Presbytery.—Mr. John Weir, of Grange, near Portadown, for many years an earnest, zealous Methodist class leader, local preacher, and Sabbath-school superintendent.—Mrs. Arthur, wife of Rev. William Arthur, of Clapham Common.

MR. DENHAM SMITH.—We are sorry to learn that Mr. Denham Smith's improvement is not so well maintained this week: his nights have been of late somewhat distressing, and his strength has decreased.

FISHERMEN IN NEWFOUNDLAND.—Rev. C. F. Hubbard, minister of St. John's Church, New Harbour, Trinity Bay, writes to express his gratitude to friends who sent him parcels of Gospel literature for the fishermen of Newfoundland, and says:—"We are still rejoicing over mighty conversions." Mr. Hubbard also requests prayer for renewed spiritual strength, [illegible] and permanent growth in grace may be granted the converts, that a way may be opened for building much-needed churches, and for [illegible], and more humble reliance upon the power of God.

THE ENGLISH PRESBYTERIAN Foreign Missions Committee have issued, in concise form, their annual report. A historical note is appended, setting forth that the China Mission was entered upon in 1847, the Church's first missionary being Rev. W. C. Burns. The organised work began in 1858 at Amoy, which was for some years the only centre. The work has since that time so signally advanced that there are now four centres—Amoy, Swatow, the Hak-ka country, and Formosa: from each of which operations are carried on over a large extent of country. The mission in South China has a wider and firmer grasp of the country than any other. The native Church is growing, not only in number, but also in knowledge, in liberality, and in missionary zeal. Medical missionary, educational, and women's work, are, each of them, actively prosecuted. There are five medical missionary hospitals, four training colleges, middle schools, and boys' and girls' schools. A number of Bible-women are in training, and some at work.

Hampton's Mission to the Blind (Webber-row, Waterloo-road, S.E.).—The poor blind are assembled every Sunday, and, after a free tea, they have the Gospel preached to them. On week days the sick and needy blind are helped in various ways. Through lack of funds, last year's report is delayed. Donations and presents will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Mrs. S. Kitchin, hon. secretary.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—C. Reynolds, Bradbury-street Mission Hall, Kingsland-road, N.; Mr. Maskell, Militia Camp, Brecon, South Wales; G. B. Borrill, London College of Divinity, Highbury, N.; W. Stubbs, Mount Pleasant, Mow Cop, Cheshire; J. Montgomery, Lawel Villa, New Brighton, near Birkenhead; E. Gladman, 40, Buross-street, Commercial-road, E.; H. Wood, 7, Gay-street, Scotland-road, Liverpool; W. Mackenzie, 96, Garden-lane, Chester; W. Whitsed, 9, Clyde-terrace, Capworth-street, Leyton, Essex; E. C. Roper, 11, Rosaline-road, Dawes-road, Fulham, S.W.; W. Butler, 34, Pennyfields, Poplar, E.; E. Lay, Railway-cottages, Portslade, Sussex; Mrs. Rogers, 4, Underhill-road, East Dulwich; W. Ridge, 111, Shakespear-road, Stoke Newington, N.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

BAPTISTS IN PRUSSIA.—From the report of the German Baptist Union issued at Hamburg, we learn the members of the different churches in Prussia, the Rhine Provinces, and Russia, numbered 8246 at the close of 1887, showing an increase on former years. The money subscriptions are also larger.

INEBRIATES IN NEW YORK.—An excellent work is being done by the Christian Home for Intemperate Men at 1175, Madison Avenue, New York. Since the founding of the Home in 1877 there have been 2440 men received, and the results have been most encouraging. Within a year 346 persons have been received into the Home, and 75 per cent. of the number are reported to have been reformed and have obtained situations through the help of the institution.

REV. W. D. RUDLAND, of the China Inland Mission, writes from Tai-chau, Cheh-kiang province:—"We began the year with a conference of our native helpers, which proved a time of refreshing. We were glad to see so many whom we knew years ago as heathen who are now fellow-workers for Christ. It is very encouraging to see how the labours of the Bible-women are beginning to tell. Our conference closed by the breaking of bread; the room was packed, and the Lord's presence was very manifest. Thoughts went back to 1870, when we first came here and found only two native Christians. Now there are a dozen native helpers around us and many Christians."

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, May 19, 1888.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

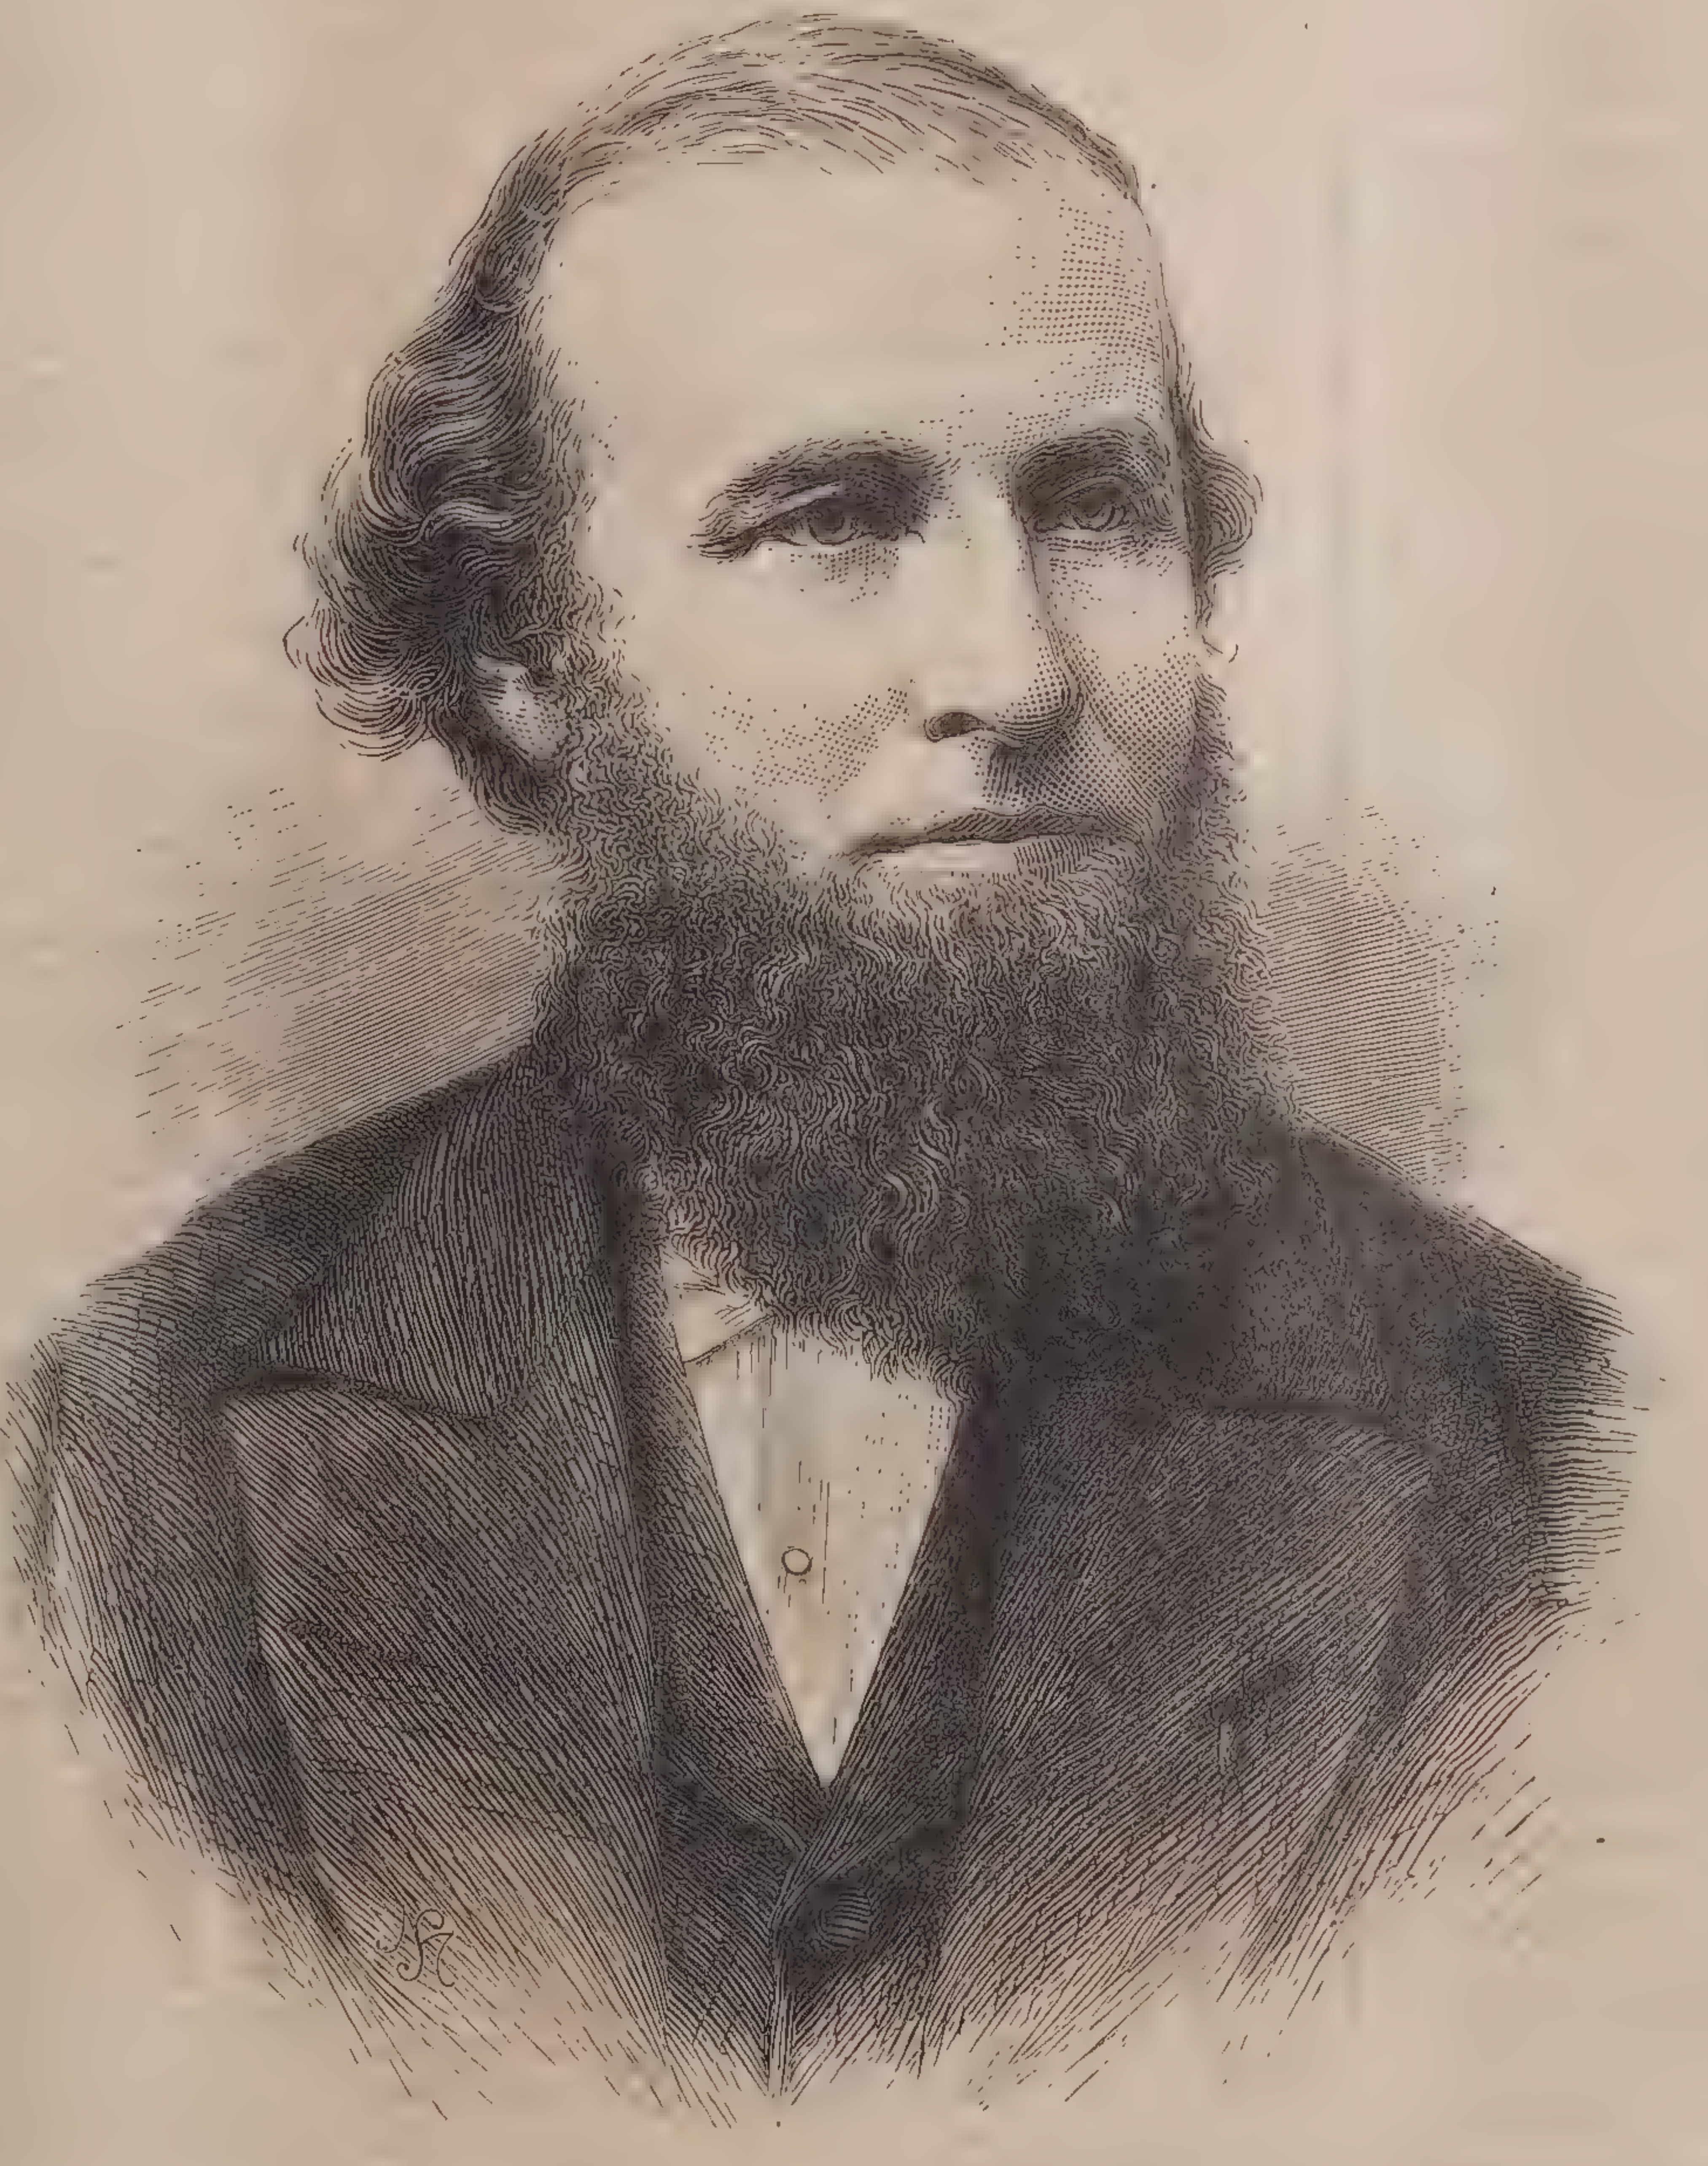
REV. WILLIAM ROSS,

Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow.

IT is a strange commentary on the much-lauded sentiments of the advocates of the "enthusiasm of humanity" and the "service of man" that the world has to turn to the evangelical churches of Christendom for concrete examples of that enthusiasm and that service.



The Rev. WILLIAM ROSS was born in the far northern county of Caithness, in June, 1836, and was educated at a small school among the hills of his native parish. In that school he made such rapid progress with his studies that, at the early age of twelve, he was called to be a public school teacher. Several years after, he left home to qualify himself for a higher sphere in the educational profession, and for two years in succession he won the highest scholarships in the gift of the Free Church Training College. While thus qualifying himself as a teacher of earthly knowledge the converting grace of God suddenly changed the whole prospect of his life, and when he entered Edinburgh University it was with a view to the ministry of the Gospel.

He was ordained in November, 1867, to the Free Gaelic Church of Rothesay, in the beautiful Isle of Bute, where he laboured until called to Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, in 1883. The work that Mr. Ross carried on in Rothesay was of a most extensive kind, and was a fitting preparation for his remarkable life-work among the teeming toilers of Glasgow. Very early in life he became associated with the temperance movement, and it is a remarkable fact that all the elders, deacons, Sabbath-school teachers, and numerous workers connected with his present charge are total abstainers.

When in 1883 Mr. Ross received an invitation to Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, the immediate prospects of the congregation worshipping in that building were such as to deter any but a most devoted servant of Christ from accepting the call; to say nothing of changing the charming scenery of the Isle of Bute for the squalor, wretchedness, and misery of one of the lowest districts of Glasgow—a district comparable to the Seven Dials of London—the church was burdened with a debt of £5000, there were only about 100 members, and the office-bearers were contemplating closing the building, because the burden of interest on the debt was greater than the people could bear. There were no attractions of a handsome stipend and a comfortable manse, for the congregation were not able to promise either. While hesitating as to whether he should accept or refuse the call, a well-known evangelist said to Mr. Ross:—

> Don't go to Cowcaddens. I know it well. The mass of the people are monthly tenants, and a great part, probably the large majority, are Roman Catholics. The population is constantly shifting—you have them to-day, and in a little while they are beyond your reach. They are very poor, and between theatres, public-houses, and other influences, multitudes are degraded. Without exceptional means, of which you have not the command, not much of a permanent character will ever come out of the Cowcaddens. Think twice before you go.

When, on the evening of Saturday, October 20, 1883, Mr. Ross first surveyed the district, he felt that the burden of the work to be done there seemed to be intolerable and unbearable; but to all his fears a voice seemed to say, "I have much people in this city." On the other hand, the district was not without its attractions to a whole-souled servant of Christ. As Mr. Ross himself says, "The field was ample to satisfy the largest ambition. The degradation of the people was thorough." There was a large building already erected, although cumbered with a huge debt, and there was the nucleus of a congregation, together with a little band of eight devoted office-bearers. Moreover, pioneer work had already been done in the neighbourhood, for Mr. Moody had made the church the centre of his labours in the northern part of Glasgow in 1882, and after he left, the United Evangelistic Association continued the work till the end of 1883.

No sooner had Mr. Ross accepted the call to Cowcaddens than he began to organise a Christian Mission of an extensive and thorough kind in connection with the church. From the first he resolved that meetings should be held every night, and upon that plan he has laboured ever since. One by one he started and fostered various and multiform agencies, all of them having the conversion of men as their immediate end and aim. A hasty sketch of each of these will convey some idea of the comprehensive work being prosecuted under Mr. Ross's active superintendence. There is, first, an open-air mission consisting of three sections. By the first the Gospel is sung in the street outside the church every night for half an hour before the inside meeting. The second section holds a praise and testimony meeting every Friday evening during the summer, and the third division sings the Gospel in two different parts of the city on Sabbath mornings and afternoons. "This mission," Mr. Ross says, "pursued with regularity, perseverance, and in prayer, has been fruitful of wonderful results."

Feeling that disastrous consequences have followed the church's neglect of the training of children in spiritual life, Mr. Ross turned his attention specially to the young, and there is now at Cowcaddens a band of children of about 200 members, worshipping as a part of the morning congregation, most of whom profess to love the Saviour. They also meet every Monday night for Scripture study under the charge of one of the elders and a few monitors. The Sabbath afternoon Bible-class is one of the most successful in Scotland, and has over 470 members. From this class and the children's band the communicants' roll constantly receives numerous additions.

Of course the sword of temperance is not unused by the Cowcaddens Christian soldiers. Drunkenness is the special curse of the district, and public-houses and licensed grocers swarm on every side. From his youth Mr. Ross has been an enthusiastic abstainer, and as such has made for himself a great reputation. In the Isle of Bute he fought a fierce fight for shorter hours for the publican and his assistants long before Good Templary was heard of in Scotland. In recognition of his valuable services to the cause of temperance he was made Grand Worthy Chief Templar of Scotland in 1877, and since then he has held other high offices in the body. The temperance work he has carried on in Cowcaddens has been blessed to a remarkable degree. Upwards of 10,000 persons have taken the pledge, and many of those thus rescued from the drink fiend have become Christians, and are now actively engaged in endeavouring to rescue others. On the principle that a healthy, pure, and happy home life is the main factor in a prosperous church and country, varied efforts are made to reach in their homes the dwellers in the thousands of one-roomed houses surrounding the church. A mothers' meeting, a home society, a domestic mission, and a district kitchen mission have been organised to this end. Moreover, a medical mission has been conducted uninterruptedly since October, 1884, in connection with the church by Dr. A. Muir Smith, who has given himself to the work without fee or reward. Free advice and medicine have been given in nearly 9000 cases, and much spiritual blessing of a permanent kind has accompanied the work of healing the sick.

During the four years of his pastorate 1250 members have joined the church; three-fourths of these have been rescued from the lapsed masses. Week by week no fewer than sixty-two services are held in connection with the church, the workers at which number 400. It has been calculated that these workers enable the church to give nearly 100 hours every week to direct Christian work in various ways. The big debt of £5000 has been now reduced to £1500, which must be paid very shortly.

Of Mr. Ross as a man and a minister a few words must be written. It has been truthfully said of him, "He cannot rest." Outside his own congregation he is in "labours oft." Every morning from 8 to 12 o'clock his house is like a public office—ministers, evangelists, missionaries come for help or counsel—church members with their difficulties, and poor people in distress. Never a frown is seen on his face. He has a kind word for one and all, and help to give to those in need. It is no unusual thing for him, too, to leave his church at 10 o'clock at night, and go visiting the sick and dying of his flock till a late hour. His powers as a preacher are of a high order, and his faculty of apt illustration makes his sermons and speeches attractive and memorable. Sir John N. Cuthbertson was only expressing the feelings of many thousands when he said of Mr. Ross and his work recently, "We are all delighted to hear of your success, and are rejoiced that you have been spared in health and strength, and that the blessing of the Almighty has so markedly been given to yourself and co-workers in this interesting work."

PRINCIPAL OSWALD DYKES.

HAVING accepted the post of Principal of the Presbyterian Theological College in London, Rev. Dr. Oswald Dykes preached his farewell sermon on Sunday morning last in the Regent-square Church. There was a large congregation, and it was felt that the discourse was admirably adapted to the highest estimate of the occasion. The text was Col. ii. 9, 10: "In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in Him."

Allusions to the past were made with a definite spiritual object, and from first to last the preacher's endeavour was to redeem the occasion. Having deplored the many shortcomings of his pastoral career, he directed attention to the supreme consolation that Christ, who is the centre and subject of all faithful testimony, never fails, and undergoes no change. The all-comprehending theme of his many utterances ought to have been, if it had not really been, that most characteristic, that regal truth of Christianity—God manifest in the flesh, God dwelling bodily and for ever in the man Christ Jesus. When he entered upon the pastorate he desired to know nothing else, and if years of reflection and experience had wrought any changes, they had only deepened his clear assurance that for every practical problem of our time, and of all times, for the single sinner's soul, for society, and the Church, the solution is to be found in the Incarnate Son of the Most High, in the God-Man—given, crucified, risen, ascended—Head of the new humanity, and Reconciler of man to God.

Having dealt with the Divine plan, whereby men may become vitally united to the Son of God, the preacher showed the bearing of the words of his text upon this truth, as it sets forth, that "ye are filled full in him." Then in beautiful and powerful language he exhibited the spiritual liberty of all who depend on Christ; union with Christ makes us independent of everyone else for spiritual life and welfare, so that no Christian church, no Christian man, need lack anything. Being in Christ, the believer is complete, filled full, in Him alone. It was after this made clear that, though pastors may come and go, and changes such as are incidental to life may take place, there remains an immutable and inexhaustible source of heavenly light. On Christ then the congregation should rest for blessing in the future.

In conclusion, the preacher pressed home several important lessons, speaking suitably to all ages and conditions. Young and old were tenderly addressed, and those in the prime of life were lovingly urged to recognise their great opportunities, and do their duty as in the sight of God.

SLEEPING-TIME.

WHEN the summer's day has ended, and its duties all are done,
And the eastern hills are gilded by the slowly setting sun;
Then the songbird seeks the quiet and the shelter of its nest,
While the flowers close their eyes in sleep upon their mother's breast.

When his day of toil is over, then the labourer seeks his home,
And his frame is worn and weary, but his rest has yet to come;
There are those at home to greet him well, with many a loving cheer,
And the thought doth urge him onward, to the home he holds so dear.

When the gentle twilight falleth, then the children gather home,
For their little feet are weary, and their sleeping-time has come;
And in peace they lie unconscious, though in safety all the while,
Till they rise to greet the sunlight, and their father's loving smile.

When the Christian's day has ended, and his work on earth is o'er,
And he longs to meet his loved ones, who have gathered home before—
Then the Father calls his children to the quiet of his home,
For the twilight shades have gathered, and their sleeping-time has come.

WILLIAM H. ROSS.

FROM THE MISSION FIELD.

REV. R. WRIGHT HAY, late of the Cameroons, in a recent letter from Dacca, Eastern Bengal, says:—"In Dacca there are several thousands of students resident during the greater part of the year, in attendance at different colleges, and I am thankful to say that there is the beginning of work among these. It has been a great joy to me to meet some twenty students in a Bible-class every Sabbath morning, and to witness the intense interest with which they read and inquire into the story of Jesus. I have also lately started a week-evening class for the study of questions arising out of the Sabbath lesson, and have been much gratified by the devout spirit manifested, whilst personal intercourse with individual students convinces me that many of them are feeling after God. I have also an opportunity of reaching English-speaking natives through a service held in the mission chapel every Sunday evening, which is getting to be pretty well attended by Hindus, Brahmos, and occasionally Mohammedans."

THE INVALIDS' AUXILIARY of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society is an agency by means of which those laid aside by illness may easily show an interest in other sufferers. The object is to render aid to medical missions at home and abroad by prayer and material support. Through reduced funds, the grants are now decreased in amount, but it is hoped this year to contribute to fifteen missions a total of at least £115. The tenth annual report, which gives details of the Auxiliary's quiet but earnest efforts, may be had from Miss Nichol, 4, Mount Hope-terrace, Bridge of Allan, N.B.

THE OPEN SORE OF AFRICA.

Professor Drummond's new book, Tropical Africa (6s. Hodder & Stoughton), is on quite different lines from his former volume. Its interests are curiously varied and diverse—continental, national, international, tribal, social, domestic; geological, geographical, meteorological; commercial, political, scientific; pertaining to travel, adventure, missions, and we know not what besides. But the most absorbing chapter of all to the Christian heart is that which describes "The Heart Disease of Africa, its pathology, and cure." This disease, of course, is the slave trade carried on by the Arabs, that "homeless people," whose awful destiny, says the Professor, is "to spend their lives in breaking up the homes of others." This infamous commerce in human life is limned in a few graphic sentences:—

> Wherever they go, in Africa, the followers of Islam are the destroyers of peace, the breakers up of the patriarchal life, the dissolvers of the family tie. Already they hold the whole continent under one reign of terror. They have effected this in virtue of one thing—they possess fire-arms; and they do it for one object, ivory and slaves—for these two are one. The slaves are needed to buy ivory with; then more slaves have to be stolen to carry it. So living man himself has become the commercial currency of Africa.

The Professor charges the English authorities with having grown apathetic on the subject, and says that while the European nations are debating about the division of territory in Central Africa, humanity is crying out for someone to administer the country, and see that justice is done. "The only thing needed for Africa at present is some system of organised protection to the native, and the decisive breaking of the Arab influence throughout the whole interior."

In his closing chapter Professor Drummond utters "a political warning" as to the future trouble that must arise if some arrangement is not come to with respect to the ruling authority in the Nyassa region, which, by virtue of discovery, of missionary occupation, and of commercial enterprise, has a special claim on Great Britain. The news that our Government has granted a charter to the East African Company, for purposes of commerce, civilisation, and internal rule, appears to be a satisfactory reply to Professor Drummond's demand, and we assume that his testimony, by voice and pen, has done much to stimulate and guide this new departure. We believe it is in the hands of high-minded Christian men, and therefore we look for happy results for Central Africa from the founding of such an enterprise.

LONDON AGED CHRISTIAN SOCIETY.—The anniversary of this Society was held in Exeter Hall last week, under the presidency of Sir Arthur Lawrence. The report, read by Hon. M. Best, stated that the number of pensioners had increased from 167 to 174, mainly through the repeated liberality of Mr. J. T. Morton, who had also given valuable donations of coals, groceries, and blankets. The chairman said he could personally sympathise in the objects of the Society, he himself experiencing the infirmity of age, and he knew how welcome it must be to the pensioners to receive the Christian help and sympathy which was afforded them through the Society. Rev. E. A. Stuart addressed the pensioners from 2 Cor. xii. 9. What Paul's thorn in the flesh was we do not know; but we may be certain that, whatever our peculiar trial is, God's grace is sufficient for us. He hoped the aged Christians present might enjoy the fulness of the blessing contained in the words addressed to Paul. Various other friends spoke.

CRUELTY TO PRISONERS.

A painfully startling communication on this subject appeared recently in The Pall Mall Gazette. We make the following extracts in the hope that we may further our contemporary's wish for some action in Parliament that will lead to the mitigation or removal of such horrors. Surely, under a professedly Christian administration such as ours, the objects of prison treatment should be, first, the protection of the public; and, next, the reclamation of the criminal. Under the existing system a process of vindictive torture of the most aimless and horrible description appears to be the rule. Would God another Howard might appear in our midst, and take up the cause of the unhappy transgressor against the law:—

> We boast that we have abolished torture and that we are more humane than our ancestors, the fact being that we have only substituted one kind of torture for another, and that the modern prison system is tenfold more cruel than that which it superseded. A few days since we happened to meet a respectable young woman who had just suffered several years of penal servitude for an offence which, to most people, renders the criminal the object of the deepest pity. We thought we would ascertain from her the effect left upon her mind by her sad experience. At first we found her very reticent. "Please, don't speak to me about it—it is too horrible. Let me try to forget it." [Ex-convicts usually are reticent. They have a dazed manner which gives one the impression that they are more or less injured in mind as well as in body by the sufferings they have undergone. Time must be given them to collect their thoughts.] After chatting about other things by way of relief, we gradually returned to the dreaded subject. She spoke very slowly, as though she were weighing every word. Clasping her hands tightly and with a far-off look in her eyes, as though she were living again those long years of horror, she began:—
>
> What is penal servitude like? How can I tell you? It is like nothing else. It is impossible to describe it—no words can paint its miseries. Nothing that I could say would give any idea of the horrors of solitary confinement. It maddens one to think of it. No one who has not been through it can conceive the awful anguish one has to endure when shut up in a living tomb. You think, think, think, till you become by turns hysterical and imbecile. Thrown back upon yourself, nothing to do but think, think, think of all that might have been—of the poor little child, the unconscious cause of all this trouble; of how you loved it—how you suffered for it—how could you —— oh, God!—of your dear mother; of her pitiful, ghastly face, when the big policeman said, "My girl, you must come with me;" of your sister, and your parting with her; of the once happy home, now a home of sorrow through you; of the long, long years to come, to be spent in this torture. No one who has not experienced it can realise the sensation of being locked up in a cell. You may be fearfully cold, as you often are, yet the overpowering sensation is one of suffocation. You feel that you must and can smash the walls, burst open the door. You feel that you must kill yourself. Why not? Why linger on in that cell for years? Why not strangle yourself, dash your head against the wall, starve yourself? Then, perhaps, you have a fit of hysterical screaming, and thoughts come into your head and words into your mouth unknown to you before ——. Then the reaction comes, and you relapse into sheer, stupid melancholy, caring for nothing—a mental and moral wreck.
>
> The cruellest part of the system is its hopelessness. I remember a nice young girl of about twenty at Fulham, who was always getting into trouble. I tried to reason with her once when we happened to be together, but she said quietly, "What is the use of trying to be good? I am in for life—let them kill me. The sooner I die the better."
>
> "Oh, God have pity on all prisoners and captives! My mother came to see me once—only once. My poor, dear mother" (here she broke down), "I shall never forget her face when she saw me through the iron bars. Her little pet shut up like a wild beast! Years of suffering appeared to be concentrated in her face, and she went away years older. Before the time came for seeing her again she was dead. Oh, my dear, dear mother!" (breaking down again).
>
> Warming with her subject she said:—"It is too cruel—it is too fiendishly cruel—the devil himself could invent nothing so cruel as to shut up a woman in a cell to prey upon herself till she breaks down in body and mind, and it's no use the authorities saying it is not done, because it is done. I have heard and seen women raving mad, and no wonder. Day after day, and night after night (oh! those awful nights, and that tolling Westminster bell), day after day, and night after night, with my head and my heart feeling as if they would burst, I have prayed God to keep me from going out of my mind—prayed that I might die. I tell you that if the public knew what penal servitude was the gaols would be mobbed. I tell you that no crime that a poor tempted woman could commit deserves such treatment. Shut up a dog in that way, and it would refuse its food and die. Do you think a woman half-starved and penned in her lonely cell feels contrition? Broken down she may be in body and mind. I was a strong, healthy girl when I went into gaol, but I was a chronic invalid before my nine months was over. I ask, Do you think a girl treated as you would not dare to treat a brute beast feels contrition? Of course not. She feels aggrieved. She feels that she is a victim. She feels that cruel injustice drove her to a crime the commission of which was against her very nature, and which she would have given worlds to undo as soon as done, and in the madness of her despair she curses her cruel fate. That sense of injustice has burned into my brain, and now when I see that a poor young creature is sentenced to death or to long years of penal servitude, my heart goes out to her, and I cry, 'How long, O Lord, how long?'"

Briefly (adds our contemporary), that was about the sum and substance, in almost the very words, of two long interviews. Now, the question is—(1) When Mr. Justice Hawkins says to a poor young creature on whom he is about to pass sentence of death, "I will not prolong your agony," does he know that that agony will be prolonged through years and years till the bodily frame is broken and the brain is dulled and the moral nature ruined by scientific mental and bodily torture? And (2) do the public understand that every poor tempted girl sentenced to penal servitude is condemned to this hideous, this infernal treatment? Because, if this picture be true, or anything like true, the sooner such a diabolical system is reformed the better for our reputation as a Christian nation. The mere deprivation of liberty is a most terrible punishment. We have no right to inflict torture. Will not some Member of Parliament, who will not be put off with red-tape replies, have the courage to take up this question? and not merely to take it up, but to follow it up, disregarding the assurances of officials that penal servitude is carried out with humanity? because as long as it is what it is it cannot be othewise than hideously cruel.

DOWN IN THE SLUMS.—Under the title of "Slum Warfare," the first report has been published of the work of the Salvation Army in the London Slums. There are now seventeen Slum Homes, and forty-six slum officers, and it is hoped that as these agencies and workers increase in number, good, such as has already been done, will appear on a still larger scale. Staff Captain and Mrs. Cooke, who superintend the Mission, appeal for devoted women as slum officers, and also for funds with which to further extend the work. Mrs. Carleton tells the strange story of "a slum convert."

"NO COMPENSATION."—The Demonstration to be held in Hyde Park to-morrow (Saturday) is making satisfactory progress toward complete arrangements under the direction of the committee of which Mr. F. N. Charrington is chairman, and Messrs. J. Hilton, S. Insull, and H. J. Osborne, hon. secs. A large number of members of Parliament and other influential gentlemen have joined the committee. Among the speakers already arranged for are Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart., M.P., Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., Mr. James Rowlands, M.P., Mr. J. Rowntree, Rev. Canon Barker, M.A., Hon. Conrad Dillon, Mr. John Taylor (Chairman National Temperance League), Mr. J. H. Raper, and many other well-known friends of the movement.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XIII.—"Be Thou Perfect."—Gen. xvii. 1.

Thirteen long years passed slowly on after the return of Hagar to Abraham's camp. The child Ishmael was born, and grew up in the patriarch's house. The acknowledged heir of the camp, and yet showing symptoms of the wild-ass nature of which the angel had spoken (xvi. 12). Not a little perplexed must Abraham have been with those strange manifestations; and yet the heart of the old man warmed to the lad, and clung to him, often asking that Ishmael might live before God.

And throughout that long period there was no fresh appearance, no new announcement. Never since God had spoken to him in Charran had there been so long a pause. And it must have been a terrible ordeal, driving him back on the promise which had been given, and searching his heart to ascertain if the cause lay within himself. Such silences have always exercised the hearts of God's saints, leading them to say with the Psalmist: "Be not silent to me; lest, if Thou be silent to me, I become like them that go down into the pit." And yet they are to the heart what the long silence of winter is in the world of nature, in preparing it for the outburst of spring.

Some people are ever on the outlook for Divine appearances, for special manifestations, for celestial voices. If these are withheld, they are almost ready to break their hearts. And their life tends to an incessant straining after some startling evidence of the nearness and love of God. This feverishness is unwholesome and mistaken. Such manifestations are, indeed, delightful; but they are meant as the bright surprise, and not as the rule of Christian life, flung into our lives as a holiday into the school routine of a child, awakening thrilling and unexpected emotions of joy. It is true that they are liable to be withheld when we are walking at a distance from God, or indulging in coldheartedness and sin. But it is not always so. And when the child of God has lost these bright visitations for long and sad intervals; if, so far as can be ascertained, there is no sense of condemnation on the heart for known unfaithfulness; then it must be believed that they have faded from the life, not in consequence of palpable sin, but to test the inner life, and to teach the necessity of basing it on faith rather than on feelings however innocent, or experiences however divine.

At last, "when Abram was ninety years old and nine, the Lord appeared unto him" again, and gave him a new revelation of Himself; unfolded the terms of his covenant; and addressed to him that memorable charge, which rings its summons into the ear and heart of every believer still: "Walk before Me, and be thou perfect."

I. The Divine Summons.—"Walk before Me, and be perfect." Men have sadly stumbled over that word. They have not erred in thinking that there is an experience, denoted by the phrase, which is possible to men. But they have sadly erred in pressing their own significance into the word, and then asserting that men are expected to fulfil it, and that they have themselves attained it.

"Perfection" is often supposed to denote sinlessness of moral character, which at the best is only a negative conception, and fails to bring out the positive force of this mighty word. Surely perfection means more than sinlessness. And if this be admitted, and the further admission be made, that it contains the thought of moral completeness, then it becomes yet more absurd for any mortal to assert it of himself. The very assertion shows the lack of any such thing, and reveals but slender knowledge of the inner life and of the nature of sin. Absolute sinlessness is surely impossible for us so long as we have not perfect knowledge; for as our light is growing constantly, so are we constantly discovering evil in things which once we allowed without compunction; and if those who assert their sinlessness live but a few years longer, and continue to grow, they will be compelled to admit, if they are true to themselves, that there was evil in things which they now discharge as harmless. But whether they admit it or not, their shortcomings are not less sinful in the sight of the holy God, although undetected by their own fallible judgment. And as to moral completeness, it is enough to compare the best man whom we ever knew with the perfect beauty of God incarnate to feel how monstrous such an assumption is. Surely the language of the Apostle Paul better becomes our lips, as he cries, "Not as though I had already attained, or were already perfect; but I follow after." Perhaps in the dateless noon of eternity such words will still best become our lips.

Besides all this, the word "perfect" bears very different renderings from those often given to it. For instance, when we are told that the man of God must be perfect (2 Tim. iii. 17) the underlying thought, as any scholar would affirm, is that of a workman being "thoroughly equipped for his work," as when a carpenter comes to the house, bearing in his hand the bag in which all necessary tools are readily available. Again, when we join in the prayer that the God of Peace would make us perfect in every good work to do his will, we are, in fact, asking that we may be "put in joint" with the blessed Lord, so that the glorious Head may freely secure through us the doing of his will. Again, when our Lord bids us be perfect as our Father in heaven is perfect, He simply incites us to that "impartiality of mercy" which knows no distinctions of evil and good, of unjust and just, but distributes its favours with bountiful and equal hand.

What, then, is the true force and significance of this word in that stirring command which lies before us here, "Walk before Me, and be thou perfect"? A comparison of the various passages where it occurs establishes its meaning beyond a doubt, and compels us to think into it the conception of "whole-heartedness." It denotes the entire surrender of the being; and may be fairly expressed in the well-known words of the sweet and gifted songstress of modern days:—

> True-hearted, whole-hearted, faithful and loyal,
> King of our lives, by thy grace will we be.

This quality of whole-hearted devotion has ever been dear to God. It was this that He considered in Job, and loved in David. It is in favour of this that his eyes run to and fro to show Himself strong. It is for this that He pleads with Abraham; and it was because He met with it to so large an extent in his character and obedience that He entered into eternal covenant bonds with Him and his.

Here let each reader turn from printed page to the record of the inner life, lying open to God alone, and ask, "Is my heart perfect with God? Is He first in my schemes, pleasures, friendships, thoughts, and actions? Is his will my law, his love my light, his business my aim, his well-done my exceeding great reward? Do others share me with Him?" There is no life to be compared with that of which the undivided heart is the centre and spring. Why not seek it now? And, turning to God in holy reverie, ask Him to bring the whole inner realm under his government, and to hold it as his for evermore.

And such an attitude can only be maintained by a very careful walk. "Walk before Me, and be thou perfect." We must seek to realise constantly the presence of God, becoming instantly aware when the fleeciest cloud draws its veil for a moment over his face, and asking whether the cause may not lie in some scarcely noticed sin. We must cultivate the habit of feeling Him near, as the Friend from whom we would never be separated, in work, in prayer, in recreation, in repose. We must guard against the restlessness and impetuosity, the excessive eagerness and impatience which drown the accents of his still, small voice. We must abjure all expedients He does not inspire, all actions He does not promote. We must often turn from the friend, the poem, the landscape, or the task, to look up into his face with a smile of loving recognition. We must constantly have the watches which we carry next our hearts synchronised by his eternal movements. All this must be, and yet we shall not live forced or unnatural lives. None so blithe or light-hearted as we. All the circles of our daily life will move on in unbroken order and beauty, just as each shining moon circles around its planet, because the planet obeys the law of gravitation to the sun. Would you walk before God? Then let there be nothing in heart or life which you would not open to the inspection of his holy and pitiful eye?

II. The Revelation on which this Summons was based.—"I am the Almighty God." El-shaddai. What a name is this! And what awful emotions it must have excited in the rapt heart of the listener. God had been known to him by other names, but not by this. And this was the first of a series of revelations of those depths of meaning which lay in that fathomless abyss, each disclosure marking an epoch in the history of the race.

In God's dealings with men you will invariably find that some transcendent revelation precedes the Divine summons to new and difficult duty; promise opens the door to precept; He gives what He commands, ere He commands what He wills. And on this principle God acted here. It was no child's play to which He called his servant. To walk always before Him, when heart was weak, and strength was frail, and the temptation strong to swerve to right or left. To be perfect in devotion and obedience, when so many cross-lights distracted, and perplexed, and fascinated the soul. To forego all methods of self-help, however tempting. To be separated from all alliances that others permitted or followed. This was much. And it was only possible through the might of the Almighty. Abraham could only do all these things on the condition, on which the Apostle insisted in after days, that God should strengthen him. And, therefore, it was that there broke on him the assurance: "I am the Almighty God. All power is mine in heaven, and upon earth. Of old I laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the work of my hands. I sit upon the circle of the earth, and its inhabitants are as grasshoppers. I bring out the starry hosts by number, calling them all by names, by the greatness of my might, for that I am strong in power. Not one faileth. Hast thou not known? Hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth fainteth not, neither is weary?"

All this is as true to-day as ever. And if any will dare venture forth on the path of separation, cutting themselves aloof from all creature aid, and from all self-originated effort, content to walk alone with God, with no help from any but from Him, such will find that all the resources of the Divine Almightiness will be placed at their disposal, and that the resources of Omnipotence will fail ere their cause can fail for want of help. Oh, children of God, why do we run to and fro for the help of man, when the power of God is within reach of the perfect heart? But this condition must be fulfilled ere that mighty power can be put in operation on our behalf. "To him that overcometh I will give a white stone, and in the stone a new name written." In Abraham's case, that name, graved on the glistening jewel, was, "I am the Almighty God"; for Moses it was "Jehovah"; for us it is "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."

III. The Covenant, which was divinely proposed.—"I will make my covenant between Me and thee." A covenant is a promise made under the most solemn sanctions, and binding the consenting parties in the most definite and impressive way. What mortal would not consent when the Almighty God proposed to enter into an everlasting covenant with his creature, ordered in all things and sure, and more stable than the everlasting hills.

It touched the seed.—And there was a marked advance. In Haran it ran thus, "I will make of thee a great nation." At Bethel, thus, "Thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth." At Mamre, thus, "Tell the stars, so shall thy seed be." But now, three times over, the patriarch is told that he should be the father of many nations, a phrase explained by the Apostle as including all, of every land, who share Abraham's faith, though not sprung from him in the line of natural descent. In memory of that promise his name was slightly altered, so that it signified the father of a great multitude. "Nations and kings shall be of thee." We are included in the golden circle of those words, if we believe, and we may claim the spiritual part, at least, of this covenant, which was made with Abraham before he was circumcised.

It touched the land.—"I will give thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession." This promise waits for fulfilment. The word "everlasting" must mean something more than those few centuries of broken, fitful rule. The recent immigration of Jews to Palestine may be an initial stage to its realisation. But there is a time, no doubt, at hand when our covenant-keeping God will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down, and will repair the ruins thereof; and the land, which now sighs under the cruel despotism of the infidel, shall be again inhabited by the seed of Abraham his friend.

It touched the coming child.—Till then Abraham had no other thought than that Ishmael should be his heir. But this could not be: (1) because he was slave-born, and the slave abideth not in the house for ever; (2) because he was the child of the flesh, and not the direct gift of God. Abraham had been left to wait till the hope of children had become as remote from him, as it had been for years from his wife, and that the heir should be evidently the creation of the Almighty God, whose name was disclosed, ere this astounding announcement was made. This is why we are kept waiting till all human and natural hope has died from our hearts, so that God may be All in all. "And God said, Sarah thy wife shall bear thee a son indeed; and thou shalt call his name Isaac."

For us there is yet a crowning sweetness in the words, "I will be a God to thee, and to thy seed"; words repeated so as certainly to include us all, if we believe, in Hebrews viii. 10. I cannot unfold all the wealth of meaning of these words. All light and no darkness at all. All love and no shadow of change. All strength and no sign of weakness. Beauty, sweetness, glory, majesty, all are in God, and all these will be thine and mine, if God saith to us, "I will be a God to thee."

OUR SOLDIERS.

Dear Sir,—Now that the attention of Christians is being drawn to the terrible vice at our military stations in India, may I plead for increased prayer and effort on behalf of our young soldiers. I heartily wish God-speed to those who are exposing and seeking to suppress the present infamous system; but our part, in these Soldiers' Institutes, is to bring before our men the Gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation. Whatever else we may be able to do for soldiers, sailors, and their families, this must be our primary object. I am thankful to say that we are meeting with much encouragement here just now; many young men can testify that Christ has saved them in this Institute, and the redeemed of the Lord are helped to say so in the presence of their comrades.

Our new monthly magazine, Ready, is being sent regularly to regiments abroad, and to Army Scripture-readers at home, in large quantities. Our Gospel meetings are well sustained indoors and out. Last Sunday General Sir Robert Phayre was the speaker. Next we expect a worker of the China Inland Mission, and afterwards two sturdy skippers from the M.D.S.F. We have also had Ned Wright for eight days' mission recently. I shall be glad to hear from friends willing to help us in these Gospel meetings, and also to receive contributions in aid of the increased expenditure for increased efforts.

We ask for prayer and praise on behalf of the work and the workers. There are grand opportunities here, and our mighty God can use feeble instruments in his work. Glory to his name.—Believe me, cordially yours,

Sarah Robinson.

TASMANIA CHRISTMAS CARD SOCIETY.—For two years now Christian workers in Australasia have been bearing in mind at Christmas time that some of Mrs. Grimkè's Scripture cards might also be seasonably purchased for circulation in foreign countries. The movement was started in Tasmania by ladies who decided to spend less on cards for themselves, and to send the money thus saved to Mrs. Grimkè, with a request that she send large parcels of assorted Gospel cards to different missionary societies. Considerable sums of money have already been devoted to this object, and a message now comes across the sea, "Cannot the same be done in 'the old country'?" A lady missionary has suggested the collection of old Christmas cards, even though written upon, for distribution in foreign lands.

OPPORTUNITIES IN FRANCE.

Will not some kind friends interested in our evangelical work here, our home-orphanage, visit our valley this summer? They will be well rewarded, for the whole of the Dauphiny offers historical and natural attractions on every hand. We could arrange excursions to the Hautes Alpes, and visit the sites of those places where the Huguenots fought so boldly and died so bravely. Some evangelical meetings could be held in all the villages which separate us from the Hautes Alpes, the dwelling of the French Waldensians, where the voice of laymen and foreign brethren is always listened to with intense pleasure.

The charm of the place is its exhilarating air, its magnificent scenery, strange flowers, its unconventionality, its freedom from tourists, its sunniness, and to some its wealth of associations. Roman roads, temples, towers, mosaic arches, even the altars on which they sacrificed bulls to Ceres, stand complete. To others the voices of the martyred Huguenots, speaking from the ground where they perished for their faith, will have more charm. The little Protestant "temples" are scattered here and there among the villages; these villages are little changed from what they were three hundred years ago, when the troopers hunted down the simple inhabitants with the sign of the cross. I shall be only too happy to answer any inquiries from friends wishing to know more of our valley; letters or cards addressed to me will receive prompt attention.

AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND.

Last week the eighth annual meeting of the Homes at Crouch-hill was held in the Jubilee Hall, Hanley-road, under the presidency of Dr. James Gale. The annual report, presented by Rev. J. F. Osborne (secretary), alluded to the erection of Jubilee Hall at a cost of £1053, and the adoption of other adjoining houses to the use of the Homes. When all the buildings had been organised there would be room for 75 inmates. During the year 10 had been admitted to the Homes, and 11 had left or died. The committee were considering the advisability of a special home for younger women under painful and exceptional circumstances. Some educational classes for the blind were being held in the Jubilee Hall.

The Chairman expressed his approval of the institution, and after referring to the changes which had of late years taken place in the treatment of the blind, expressed a wish that the benefits of the Homes might not be entirely confined to Christians. The report was adopted on the motion of Rev. Dr. Edmond, seconded by Rev. James Crabtree; and a resolution passed rejoicing in the extension of the Homes and pledging the meeting to use its influence to increase their usefulness.

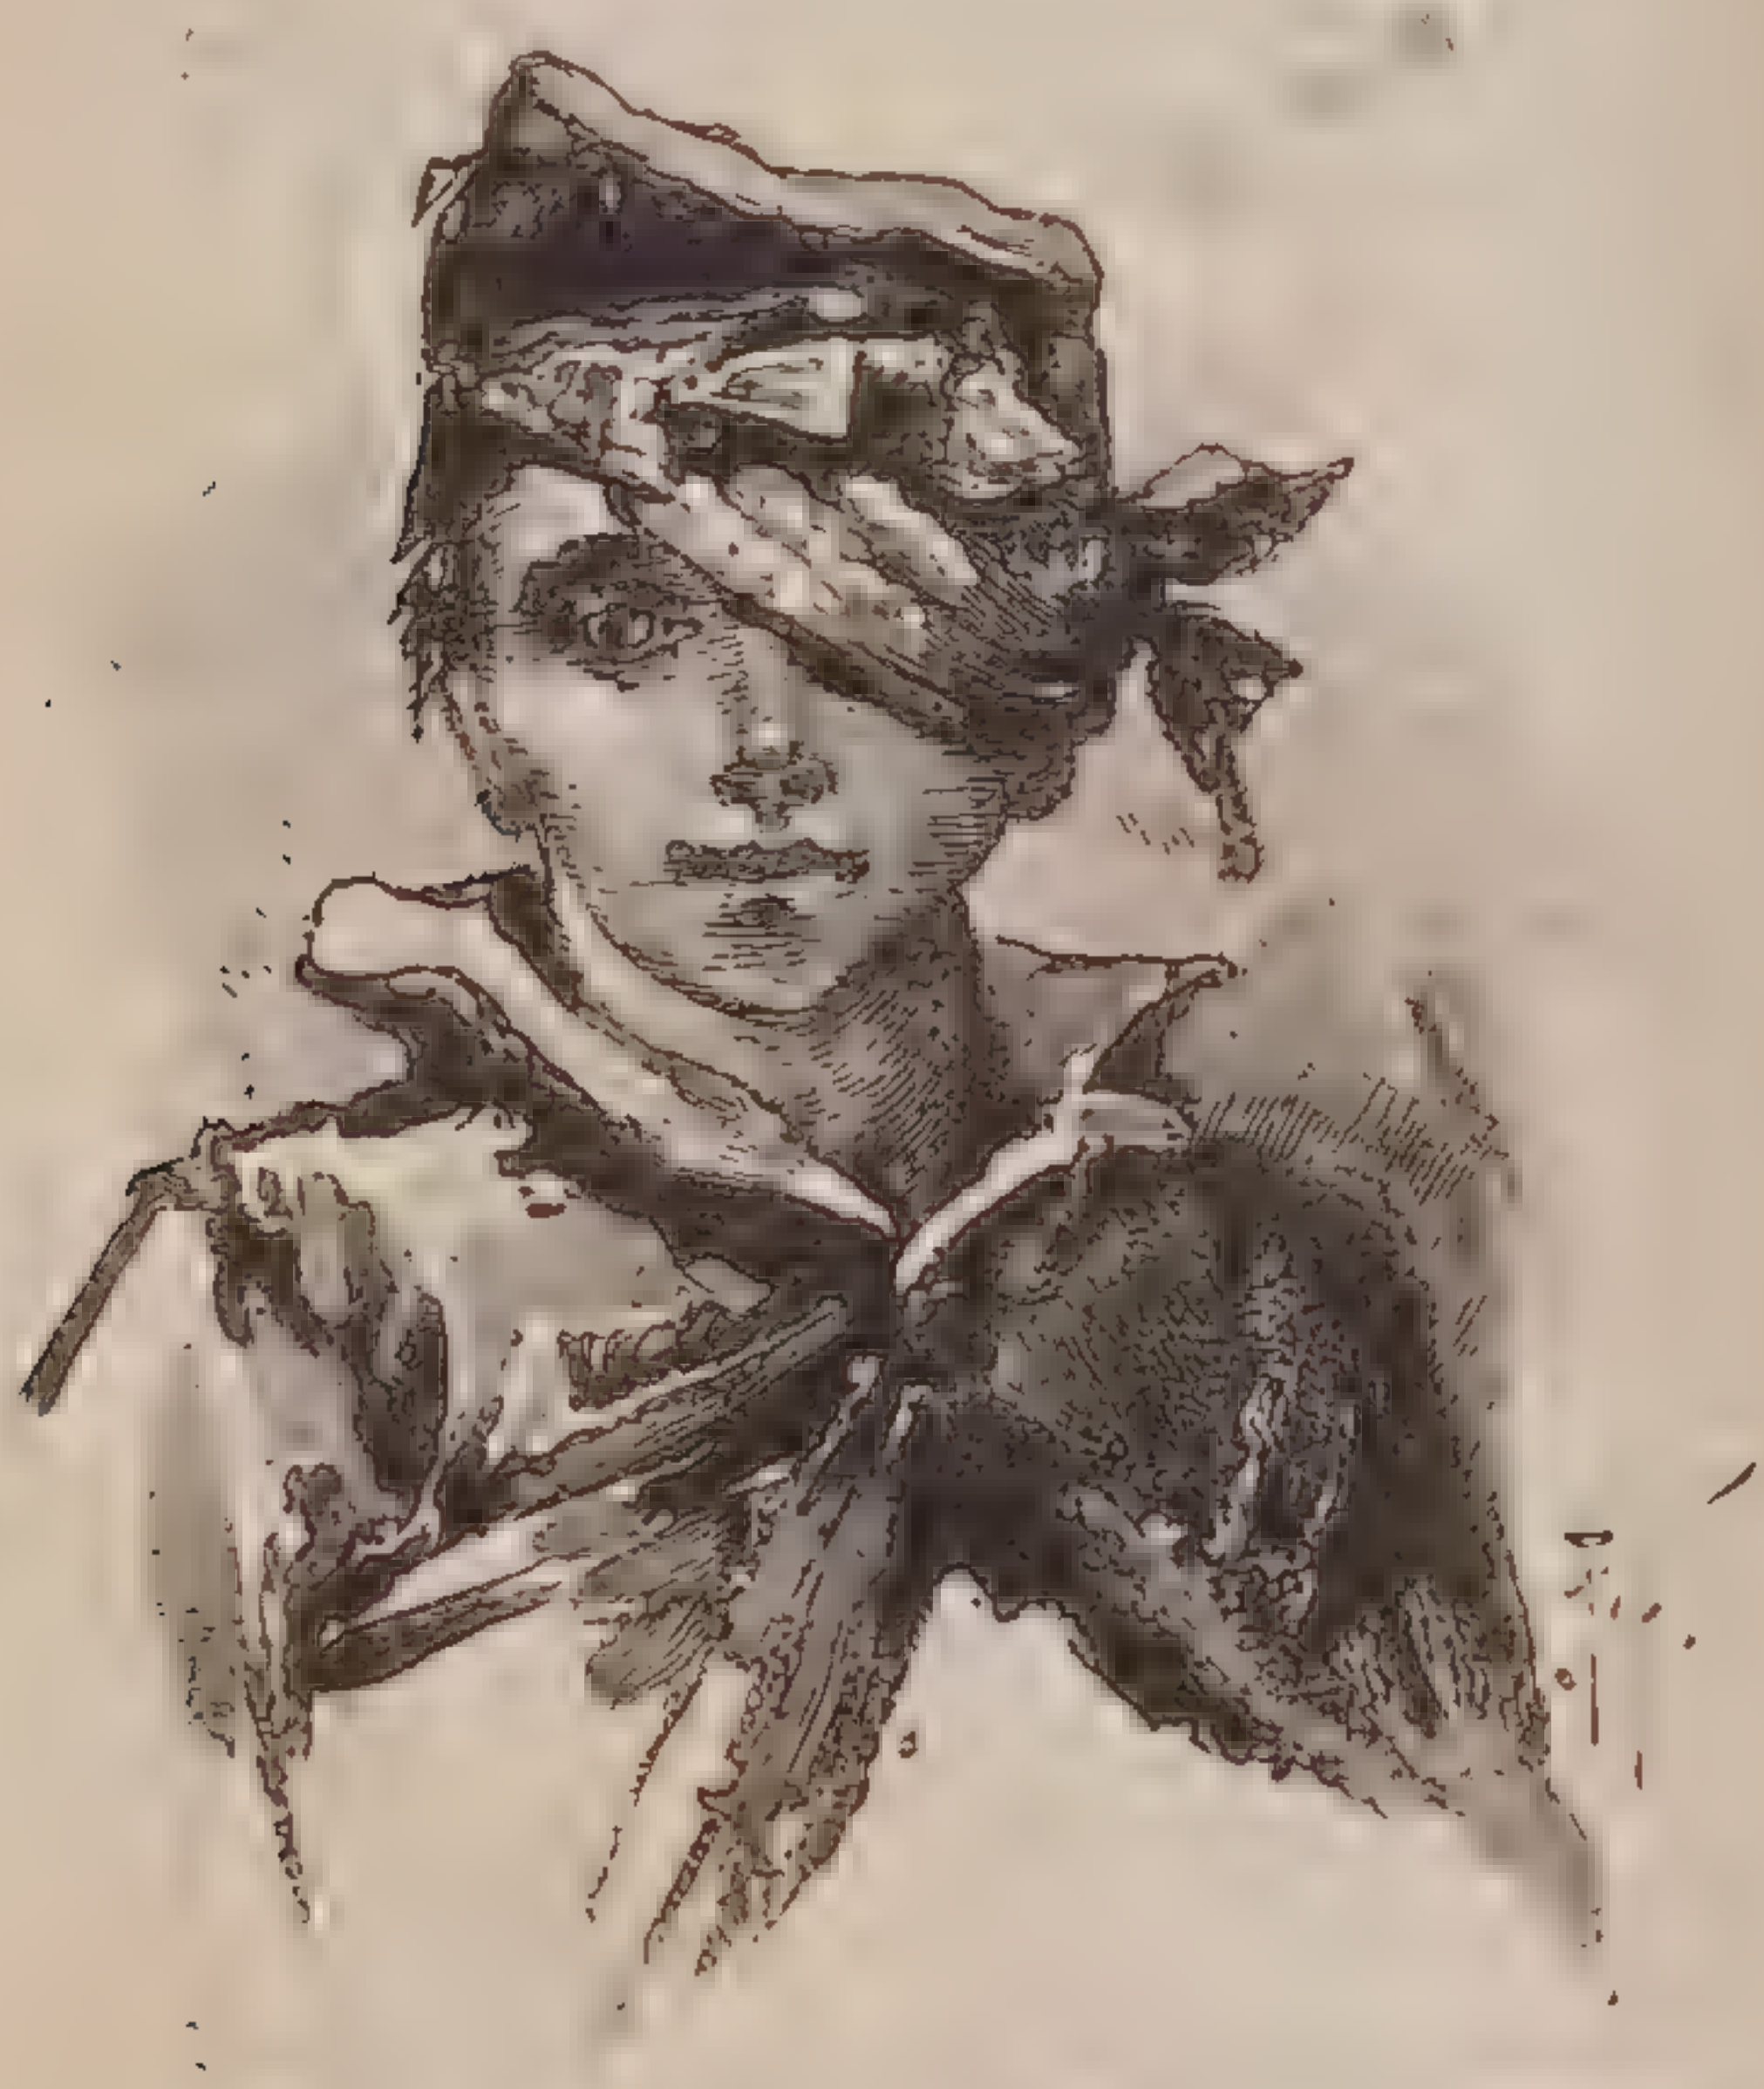
A BIBLE CARRIAGE WORK.—The first Bible Carriage Conference was recently held at Bristol. A number of carriages were represented. The best way to work a carriage was freely discussed. All who were present found it good to be there, and much prayer was made for wisdom and guidance on this season's work. Our brethren, John Hambledon, Brewster, and Hind, now labouring in Australia, were not forgotten.

PUBLIC-HOUSE WORK IN BRISTOL.—Mr. S. T. Crocker, evangelist, has commenced a very important work amongst the public-houses, hotels, and dancing-rooms of Bristol. About 1000 public-houses and hotels have been made accessible, and the proprietors are very respectful. Crowds of the frequenters have attended Mr. Crocker's meetings during the winter, and about 300 have professed conversion. One man came to Christ after playing the "fiddle" in public-houses for nearly forty years; he is now getting an honest living. Mr. Crocker is desirous of purchasing a tent for the summer season, to gather the people in. Any who wish to have fellowship in this work will please address Mr. Crocker, Y.M.C.A., St. James'-square, Bristol.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

Annual Meeting in Exeter Hall.

Any meeting organised by Dr. Barnardo is pretty sure to be a conspicuous success. Taking it all round, he may be said to have excelled himself in his anniversary at Exeter Hall last week. We cannot honestly say that the speeches, apart from the Doctor's own statement, were quite equal to the occasion. But we recognise the difficulty of saying anything very now with reference to such work; moreover, the interest of these anniversaries is independent altogether of platform efforts. The presence and performances of the children themselves form such a splendid object-lesson in rescue work and in that wondrous "alchemy of love" of which the Doctor spoke, that discriminating audiences, even if not jaded with May meeting oratory, are somewhat impatient of over-speechifying.



"John," who tramped from the Midlands to Stepney.

Three years ago we ventured to suggest that Dr. Barnardo should furnish his friends, in Exeter Hall assembled, with some specimens of "the raw material" from which he evolves the manufactured article. This year he saw fit to adopt the suggestion, on a very small scale but with most unqualified success. Early in the evening "a very dear little child," as the Doctor called her, was honoured with a conspicuous seat on the platform. We were puzzled to think what could be her part in the economy of the evening's work. Near the end of his statement Dr. Barnardo set her on a stool beside him, and another girl five years old was placed by her side; then the object was apparent. How marvellous the contrast between the pale, ragged, half-starved creature just received into the institution, and the bit of rosebud beauty who had been for some time under its fostering care. And yet no one could doubt the answer that should be given to Dr. Barnardo's question about the fresh arrival: "May we not hope that she will some day be like the other one?" Surely the contrast between these products of cruelty and neglect on the one hand, and of loving care on the other, must give to all who saw it "a deeper pathos and meaning to the work than ever before." Another specimen of the raw material was a sharp, wiry boy of fourteen, who, we were told, had been brought up with gipsies, but ran away from them in consequence of cruel treatment. He had heard, away in the Midlands, of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, and, placing faith in what he had heard, had tramped all the way to London, where his confidence was rewarded, and he was admitted. "I do believe," said the Doctor, patting his grimy young protégé on the shoulder, "that John will one day be a good boy and a credit to our institutions."

The meeting lasted nearly four hours, and we can but indicate the drift of the deeply interesting proceedings.

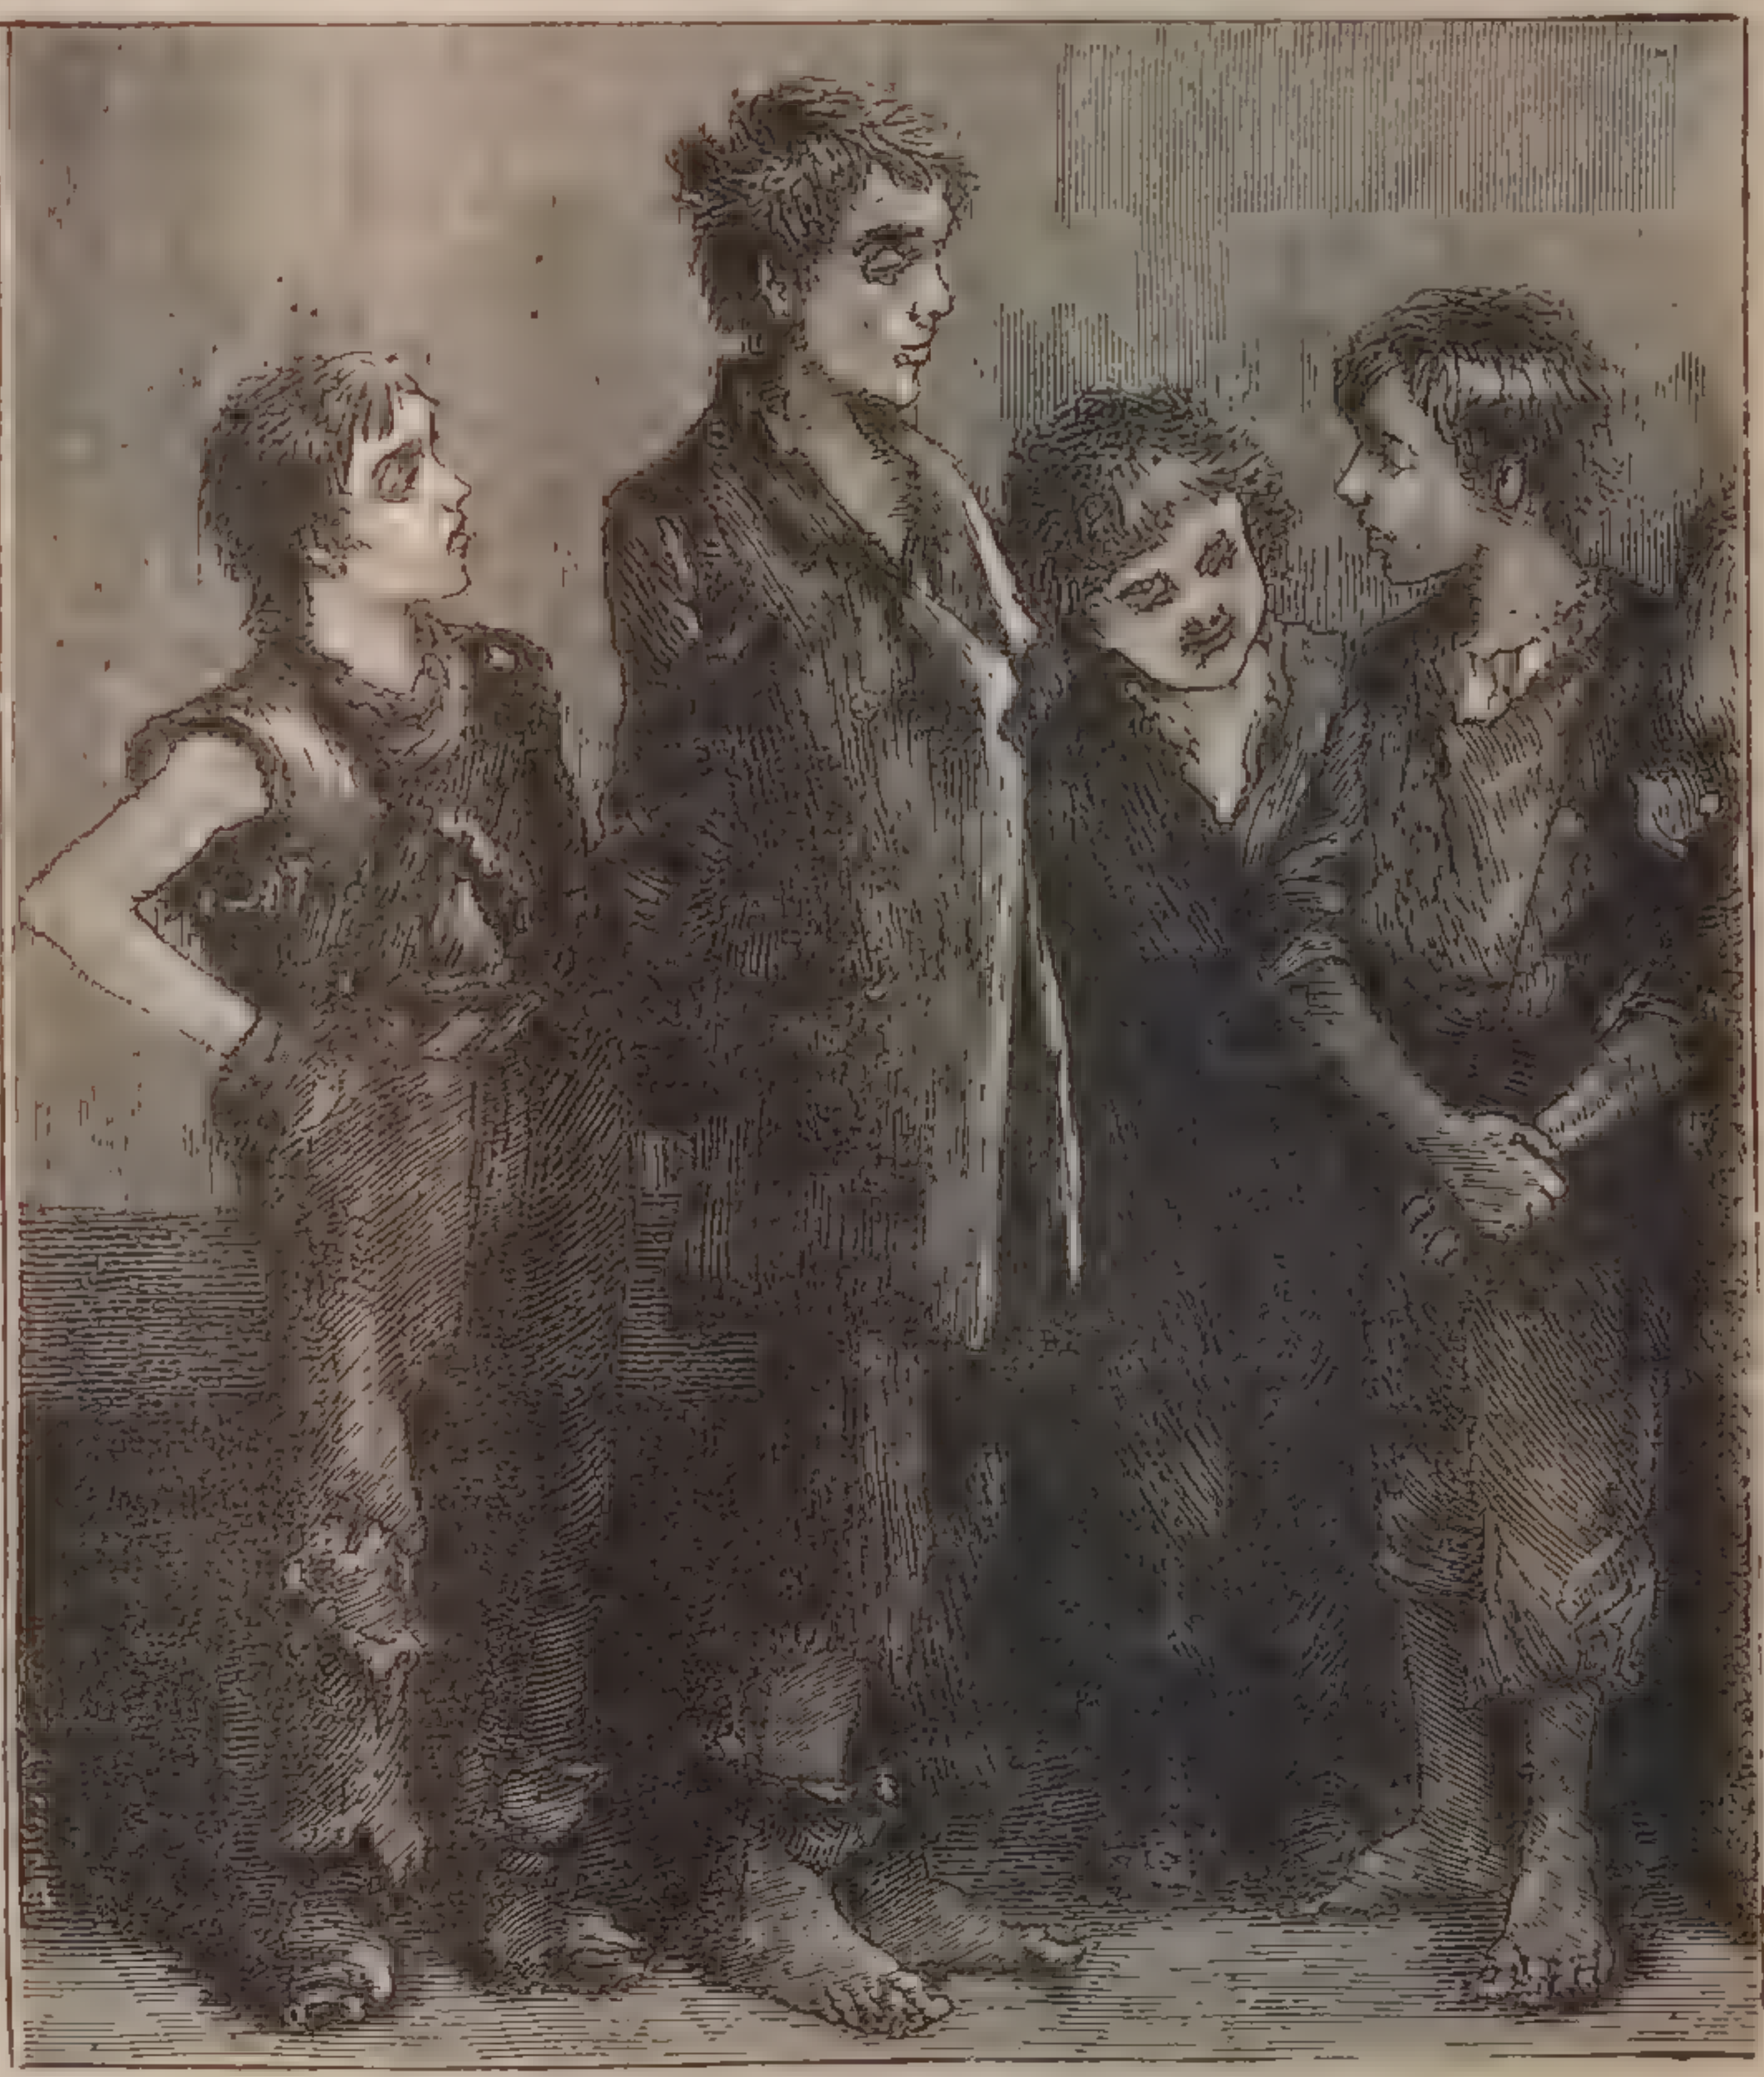
THE CHILDREN, of course, claim the first place. Very charming they looked, ranged across the spacious orchestra—the girls in their cool, new, striped print dresses, and hats trimmed with pink or blue; and the boys in trim sailor rig. Mr. Proudman, as usual, wielded the bâton, and did it to some purpose. We have so often attempted to describe the delightful singing of these whilom waifs that we need not do so now, except to say that there must have been advances in the method of tuition, when these very youthful musicians could ring out in such excellent time and tune and cadence the complicated strophes of Handel's Chorus, "Lift up your Heads, O ye Gates." Besides the ever welcome song, there was the tintinnabulation of the bells so deftly handled by Mr. McNab's clever pupils. The band from the Stepney Home did their part well; and the same can be said of "the little pipers in Highland costume," who created quite a sensation as they strutted back and fore on the enlarged platform, pealing out the wild strains of pibroch and march so dear to the Scottish mountaineer. A novel but pretty and most interesting feature was the musical drill gone through with precision and grace by Mr. Sully's contingent; one could see at a glance how useful from an athletic standpoint is this exercise.

THE PRIZES,

though coming rather late in the evening, may be mentioned here. No less than forty-three young women who had been trained in the Homes, and had creditably filled situations in domestic service, from one up to five years, were marshalled on the platform, and constituted a telling evidence of the permanent character of the work. The prizes (to be handed to them afterwards) were of various kinds, each of those whose term of service exceeded four years getting a silver watch. Six young women who had been more than five years in situation received a silver medal—the final gift of the Homes, which stands for a certificate of character and merit. After these came over a hundred lads and young men to whom prizes were to be awarded in the same ratio, according to length of service. These young people, needless to say, were warmly cheered as they appeared and disappeared, and the plaudits of the audience will doubtless help to fix in their impressionable minds the deep debt of gratitude they owe to the Homes and their indefatigable Director.



Waifs and Strays awaiting admission.

A little unrehearsed episode was the presentation to Dr. Barnardo for Mrs. Barnardo, on behalf of the artist, a young Russian lad, of a finely framed crayon portrait of the children's benefactor, subscribed for by the youths in the Labour House. A contingent of these sturdy young fellows was also arrayed on the platform, attired in the working costume they will wear when they start work on the Manitoba farm. In introducing these future farmers to the assembly, Dr. Barnardo said that the cost of transporting the forty-eight to distant Manitoba would be £528, or £11 each. Another band of 140 younger boys are about to be emigrated to Canada at a cost of £9 each—a total of £1788. Of this sum only £112 had then been guaranteed, so that there is ample scope for the exercise of the generous impulses of the friends of the Homes. We naturally pass from this to which was long, but might have been much longer, so far as material was concerned. At the outset he paid a warm and well-deserved tribute to the Committee who for the last ten years have given the Homes the benefit of their counsel and support. One of the concrete facts of the past year's work, said Dr. Barnardo, is this, that 1668 fresh cases were admitted to the Homes out of a total of 7418 applicants. The number rejected seems large, but it was asserted that in not a solitary instance had a really destitute applicant been turned away. This is the proud boast of the institution, that its doors have never yet been closed to an unmistakably and thoroughly destitute child, and the Doctor hoped they never would. It is true that children had been admitted when there was not money in hand to provide for them. "But," said the Doctor naïvely, "it is my business to receive the destitute children in the name of my Master, and it is yours to provide the wherewithal; if you fail in your part, that is not my fault." He hastened to add, however, that the Christian public had not failed, but had done nobly. The gross income for the year reached the high total of £103,091, the donations for all purposes alone reaching over £98,000. Of this sum, however, £12,000 was given in response to the special Jubilee appeal for £50,000. One most gratifying circumstance is that, of the 76,756 separate donations, 53,302 were for sums less than £1, showing that the work of the Homes is dependent, not on the uncertain gifts of a few, but on the wide base of the goodwill of the multitude. Stating that one of those admitted during the year was a lad nineteen years old, Dr. Barnardo described the scope and importance of the Youths' Labour Home, which receives, employs, and trains a class of our London community for which almost no other provision is made. In this Industrial Home they receive a chance of showing by hard work and discipline what stuff they are made of, and thus to them "the primeval curse becomes a latter-day blessing." Many of them go ultimately to Canada where they can look forward to a position of independence, through honest industry, that the state of the labour market will not give them on this side the sea. Dr. Barnardo had some weighty words to say on the subject of "boarding out" the poor children; a plan which he strongly advocates for very young boys and for girls of all ages. Out of the 32,000 children dealt with under the Poor Law last year, only 1500, he says, were boarded out; and that although the cost of the latter system is only £13 each, as compared with £25 to £30 per head for the unsatisfactory barrack treatment in large district schools. Surely this reveals a wide field for the sanctified energy of some ardent social reformer.

In connection with the Homes there are thirty-five distinct branches of work, embracing work for the babes, the children, the youths, for servants, rescue work, industrial and emigration work, deaconesses' work, medical mission, and various evangelistic and charitable endeavours. The great majority of these do not even get a mere mention at the anniversary gatherings, but the reader ought to remember that for the due maintenance of them all Dr. Barnardo and his Committee are responsible.

THE SPEECHES.

The Earl of Meath, in a hearty speech, expatiated on the different aspects of the work, and commended it to the best sympathy of the Christian public. Lord Kinnaird, who succeeded Earl Meath in the chair, was equally hearty in his advocacy, and spoke, as he said, from an eighteen-years' personal knowledge of the Homes. Rev. E. A. Stuart called for the support of the work on philanthropic, patriotic, and Christian grounds. He considered these institutions as a most practical "Commentary on the New Testament," and one of the best possible of "Christian evidences." Mr. William Fowler, treasurer of the Homes, gave the Director a clean bill of health for judgment and economy in the conduct of the institutions, and vindicated his position as holder of the purse strings by an earnest appeal for "more money." Rev. W. J. Mayers, of Bristol, though crammed into a corner of time, managed to say some good words on behalf of the work, coupling Dr. Barnardo's name with those of George Müller and Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, as the great benefactors of the poor children in our day.

The sum subscribed to the treasury of the Homes in connection with the annual meeting was £1325; but this, we believe, is a considerably smaller amount than these gatherings usually produce, so that there is abundant scope for the liberality of those friends of the work who could not be present.

On Monday last Dr. Barnardo attended the noon-day prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, with 166 lads about to leave for Canada. In the course of an address on the emigration work of the institutions under his care, he related some remarkable cases of boys from the Homes turning out not only successful but useful men. He told of the miseries from which some of the lads had been rescued, and among his most encouraging statements was one to the effect that the company included a larger proportion than he had before known of boys who had confessed Christ as their personal Saviour. About 2300 children and young people still remain in the Homes. Fervent prayer was offered to the Father of Mercies for a blessing upon them, as well as upon the company who are crossing the sea. The president of the meeting, Mr. R. Paton, addressed some remarks to the lads on the words, "Thou God seest me."

CHINESE CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The second annual report of the Chinese branch of the C.S.U. shows nearly six hundred members on the roll. The English-speaking young people of China have also a branch with 110 members. The reading of the daily portions has been much blessed to many of the children.

HINDOO INFANT MARRIAGES.—A native gentleman states the Hindoo view of infant marriage tersely as follows:—"Girls are in our society looked upon as a sort of perishable commodity which must be disposed of within a certain time to fetch any decent price to the seller, or be of any use to the buyer." If this is not slavery of the deepest hue then serfdom is a myth. But Government must not interfere! Such a view of woman shows that there is nothing in the world as cruel, costly, and criminal as ignorance.—Indian Witness.

Leaves from my Note-Book.

By Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life."

IX.—THE FIVE-BARRED GATE.

My attention was one day attracted to a picture representing several urchins riding upon a gate. Some were balancing themselves on the top of the gate, while others took their turn to swing it, first out into the public road, and then in the opposite direction. One or two boys were to be seen sprawling upon the ground, and one or two behind these were crying.

I described this picture at a Bible-reading, and pointed out that too many believers spend their time in riding on the gate of conversion. They are saved and happy, and they know why, therefore they are delighting themselves. Other believers are occupied in swinging the gate to and fro—they talk about conversion, and the necessity of it, and there they stop. Not a few fall and fail in this exercise, and some hurt themselves.

In the meantime no one can pass through that gate to go on the way which leads through it to the palace beyond. The gate is not the way, any more than the way is the gate. Too often these perfectly distinct things are confused, as if they were the same.

An earnest young man who happened to be present at the reading, was attracted by this illustration and remained behind to ask questions.

He said, "You have exactly described my experience in its several phases. Sometimes I have been riding on the gate full of joy, and at others pushing it backwards and forwards; I must confess, too, that I have fallen more than once. I see one thing plainly enough," he added, "that my mind has never been definitely directed to walking in the way, as it was to finding the gate. I thought that if I kept up the joy of salvation, and my confidence, it would be enough."

I said to him, "When you were a babe, I expect you smiled and crowed, and no doubt took your milk, or you would not have satisfied your mother; but I suppose you have renounced all that now!"

"I think," he replied, "that I understand your meaning; please go on."

"The road," I continued, "in the picture is as clearly defined as the gate; but you have overlooked that. Now that your attention is directed to the way, you are as free to walk in it as you were to swing on the gate. The Lord says to all who believe in Him, 'Follow Me.' He does not say, 'Come,' to those who have come; or 'Follow,' to those who have not come."

"Very good," said my friend, "my mind is made up, I will be a follower of the Lord."

He went away, and two days after this returned with a print of the picture in question nicely framed and glazed for my acceptance. With a beaming face, he went over the different characters in the engraving. "Do you think," he asked, "that the artist meant to describe what you say?"

"Oh, dear no," I replied; "his thoughts were altogether in a different channel. He was merely depicting nature. God has made nature to be an allegory of grace, and the more closely these great men keep to nature, the more clearly they picture the way of grace to those who have eyes to see it."

My friend having determined, as he said, to live the Christian life, I inquired, "How do you propose to begin?"

He answered, "Oh, I have a book here which I am delighted with, called 'Aids to a Devout life.' I mean to work at this, and another book I have, 'The Imitation of Christ.' Do you know it?"

"Yes," I said, "I do, I used to study it most diligently before I was converted; but I have put it away since that time."

"Put it away?" repeated my young friend with evident surprise. "I hope to find these two books very useful."

"Useful for what?" I said, "to bring you into bondage instead of liberty! Have you forgotten that you once tried by works to make a door of salvation for yourself, and failed; and that afterwards you found Christ the Door already made. Now you are going to try and make a pathway to heaven for yourself instead of walking in the way that is provided for you. You have yet to find out that Christ is the Way, as well as the Door."

"You discourage me," he said. "I saw Mr. —— last evening, and he told me to study these two books, that they would be a great help to me."

I replied, "I am not going to put myself in comparison with that good man, or any other; but you shall judge for yourself whether salvation and progress are attained by works, or by faith."

He went away evidently unwilling to follow my advice. The few hours he had spent over his books had given him so much pleasure that he longed to return to them again. Religiousness is so soothing to the natural mind, that my young friend pursued his studies with great self-satisfaction.

One day, however, in spite of all his resolutions, and prayers too, he fell grievously. In his sorrow and disappointment he came to me, and said, "It is hard work, this falling and rising—I am happy enough when I am reading and praying; but when I come abroad, down I go!"

"Ah," I said, "you are now beginning to find out that you cannot stand by yourself, and you will find, moreover, that you cannot walk by yourself. Indeed, you cannot do without Christ for your leader. Books are very well, and may be useful, too, when they bring you to Him; but if they do not do that, they are no help; but rather mislead you. The devil can easily overthrow you at his pleasure—the world sweep you away with its torrent, or the flesh hinder you most of all. You can no more stand by yourself than that umbrella! The Psalmist says, 'Hold Thou me up, and I shall be safe' (Ps. cxix. 117). Believe me, only Christ can keep you from falling, and only Christ can guide you in the right way."

My young friend remained silent as if thinking, so I continued, "If I had a child in prison in a foreign land, I would ransom him; but do you think I would leave him there to find his own way home? No, certainly not, I would take the child by the hand and bring him home with me. This, too, is God's way of salvation and deliverance. You know that beautiful hymn—

Guide me, O Thou Great Jehovah!
Pilgrim through this barren land;
I am weak, but Thou are mighty,
Hold me with thy powerful hand.
Bread of Heaven,
Feed me till I want no more.

Take this first verse, and make it your prayer. Never mind your books for the present."

He followed my advice, and in a short time proved in his own experience that Christ can as easily guide us when we are saved as He can save us when we are lost—that, indeed, He is the Way of life, as well as the Door of salvation.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION.—This organisation is sadly in need of funds at the present time. Lord Polwarth has issued an appeal in which the operations of the Mission are well explained and help solicited. Mr. Gawin Kirkham, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C., is the secretary.

MISS CLARA LOWE.—Dear Sir,—I am told that the prayers of your readers were asked for me during my recent total blindness. May I ask you to insert a note of praise for answered prayer in the priceless gift of sight restored through the Lord's blessing on the skill, care and kindness lavished on me in the "Invalid Ladies' Home," 90, Harley-street? May the restored gift be used for the Lord's glory.—Yours in one blessed hope,

Clara M. S. Lowe.

For the Young.

NOT SORRY.

I am an old man of three-score years and ten, and I have been a minister of the Gospel not very far short of fifty years. During that long time I have been acquainted with all sorts of people; I have talked to a great many old persons who knew they could not have much longer to live; and I have visited I cannot tell how many death-beds.

Perhaps some of my readers would like me to tell them something about the people I have thus seen, but I think that just now I would prefer telling them about some people I have not seen.

I never once met a man who had served God faithfully all his life, who, when he came to die, regretted having done so. However old he might be, however poor, however afflicted, and even though he might have had to endure great loss and suffering for having done what he believed to be right, he never said, in my hearing at any rate, or in the hearing of anybody, that he was sorry he had tried to live a godly life, and that if he had his time to begin over again he would live wickedly.

I have, indeed, heard a great many regrets from good men when they had reason to think they were going to die, and I have heard such regrets from some of the very best men I ever knew; but their regrets were because they had not served God better. I have known such men sorely troubled as they remembered the sins of bygone years. Although they had no doubt whatever that God had forgiven them, they could scarcely forgive themselves.

I cannot say that I recollect hearing an old and long-tried servant of God saying that he would like to live his life over again. For the most part I have found such people glad to think that their toils and their battles were over, and that they were about to enter into rest. I am quite certain of this, however, that if such a desire had arisen it would have been, not that they might seek "the pleasures of sin," but that they might render to God a better service.

On the other hand, I have visited a great many people who were dying after having lived evil lives. I wish I could say that all whom I so visited were truly penitent, but I am grieved to say I cannot. I found some of them sullen and hardened, whilst others were indifferent. They did not want to hear about either their sins, or the Lord Jesus Christ, or salvation; all they wanted was to be let alone. But this I can say, that I do not recall one who at such a time told me he was sorry he had not lived more wickedly. I will not take upon me to say that there never was such a man, but I never met with one.

I have met, however, with numbers who said to me, with deep feeling and with many tears, "Ah! if God would only spare me, what a different life I would live!"

I have talked on this subject with ministers and others who, like myself, have been in the habit of visiting the aged and the dying, and the recollections of all of them correspond with my own.

I have read the lives of a great many people, of all times—of different lands and of different conditions in life. Some of these are written in the Bible, but a vastly greater number by uninspired pens. Biographers do not often tell us of the regrets of those about whom they write, as they look back on life; but some of them have done this very faithfully, and what they have recorded also corresponds with what I myself have seen and heard.

I do not remember having read of one who said, when he came to die, that he was sorry he had read his Bible and walked in its light, and loved and served the Lord Jesus Christ; but I have read of numbers who said what a good Master Christ had been to them, and what a joy it was to them to think that they were going to a world where they would love Him more and serve Him better than they had ever done on earth.

I have no doubt whatever that numbers of my readers could confirm all I have said, from their own reading and observation and experience. Is it unlikely that almost the very last words of your own father or mother were spent in telling you how happy their religion had made them, and that they would not exchange their hope and comfort for all the world?

Is not this, then, of all possible resolves one of the very wisest—that, by God's help, we will live the life which will cause us no regrets when we come to die?

And who needs to be told that such a life can only begin by repentance for all sin, and by an entire and undoubting faith in the Lord Jesus Christ?—Friendly Greetings.

THE "BIRDS' NEST."

This is the name of a Home for Destitute Children in Kingstown, Ireland. There is also a Home at Spiddal, making a second "nest," and altogether some three hundred destitute boys and girls, of from six to fifteen years of age, are cared for by some kind women who are as mothers to them.

Not only are the children taught to read and write, and so on, but they are also taught to work; and even more than that, to love God, who has put it into the hearts of good people to provide and care for them. In last year's report, we read:—

"The Birds' Nest is a very busy household; plenty to do for everyone. We encourage, as much as possible, voluntary work, and many prizes, given on the festival day, are marks of approval in this. Some very little girls in the Infant School recently held a consultation as to what they could do. They had heard me speak to the little boys about their jerseys, to be sure and watch that the wrists did not ravel out. The consultation ended in a deputation being sent to get leave to undertake the care of the jerseys. Such mites they were! but their teacher promised to be responsible; and very soon every jersey in wear was scrutinised, knitting-needles and yarn were produced, and all wrists showing signs of weakness were soon furnished with a strong cuff or half-sleeve. One little one of only six years' old, insisted she could help, for "she tud knit a darter;" and she was permitted to knit some rows to her great delight. The little ones found this very happy work, for were they not saving money for the Nest?

"During the past year we have sent out a larger number of boys and girls than usual, and have received more new children than in any one year before. You know about the "bag-day," when all the Christmas gifts sent by our friends are given out in bags to our children. That day I counted fifty-one children, to whom all was new; fifty-one children enjoying their first happy Christmas. Each of these fifty-one, when they came in, had to be supplied with every article of clothing they needed. You will, therefore, understand how very valuable the gifts of clothing sent by our friends are."

The Nest is under the educational care of the Society for Irish Missions, and has a kind president in Mrs. J. Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, June 3, Acts ix. 32—43; Monday, June 4, Acts x. 1—16; Tuesday, June 5, Acts x. 17—33; Wednesday, June 6, Acts x. 34—48; Thursday, June 7, Acts xi. 1—18; Friday, June 8, Acts xi. 19—30; Saturday, June 9, Acts xii. 1—12.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, on Continent for two months; Lausanne, May 26 to June 3. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Assembly Rooms, Malvern, June 3-15; Skating Rink, Croydon, July 2—13. Mr. Martin J. Hall, Dundalk, May 29 to June 8. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Tooting, June 3—10.

KESWICK CONVENTION

FOR THE DEEPENING OF SPIRITUAL LIFE, 1888.

Beloved Friends and Servants of Jesus Christ,—

We would again, though conscious of much unworthiness, in the name of our Great Master, and trusting alone in his promised presence and guidance, invite Christians of every section of the Church of God to meet at Keswick, in a Convention intended to be held, D.V., from Monday July 23, to Saturday, July 28, 1888, for the purpose of seeking a fuller knowledge of our Father's will, and more perfect conformity thereto; and that by abiding in Christ, and being filled with the Holy Spirit, our yielded lives may henceforth be to the glory of God: see Rom. vi. 13.

At this time when the powers of evil are mustering so strongly against the truth of God, let us ever remember with joy that the Foundation of God standeth sure; let men disallow it as they may. It is chosen of God, and precious; Jesus Christ is a tried Stone, a precious Corner Stone, a sure Foundation laid by Him in Zion—Isaiah xxviii. 16; and we are called to be living stones, built upon this one Foundation, a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ (1 Peter ii. 4, 6); builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit (Eph. ii. 22).

To realise this in our own experience, we must lay aside all evil, and desire to be fed with the sincere milk of the Word, that we may grow thereby (1 Peter ii. 2); following God as dear children, and walking in love as Christ also hath loved us (Eph. v. 1, 2).

If we meet in this spirit, in contrition before the Lord, we shall know what it is to be knit together in love; and the efforts of the great enemy of souls, to separate the living members of Christ's body will be frustrated, and we shall grow up into Him in all things, which is the Head, even Christ (Eph. iv. 15).

May it ever be our aim in the strength of the Lord, and guided by his Spirit, to show in our lives that there is a living power in his truth. We are on the side of Him of whom the oath of God declares, every knee shall bow, so let us in the fullest confidence in the presence of our Lord, be humbled in the dust before Him, and then in his almighty power, go forward to assured victory over his and our enemies: see Josh. v. 13, 15.

You will join in prayer to God that his richest blessing may rest on his servants whom He calls to minister to us in his name, that in watering others they may be abundantly watered themselves by his Holy Spirit.

Let us unitedly praise God for blessing when we have met together in the past, and pray, nothing doubting, that richer and fuller grace will yet be bestowed, and that we may be filled with joy and with the Holy Ghost, serving and waiting till the Master come.

It is proposed to hold services in the tent on the Sunday afternoon before and after the Convention, and a prayer meeting on Saturday evening, the 21st; also a choir practice, on Monday afternoon, the 23rd.

The lecture hall and rooms adjoining have been again kindly granted by the Vicar, Rev. J. N. Hoare, for the use of the Convention. Some additional room will be provided in the Drill Hall and tent this year.

A plot of land adjoining the Convention ground, having been offered for sale, including the house erected upon it, it has been secured, with a view to providing increased accommodation for visitors, to include office, writing-rooms, lavatories, &c. This will entail some considerable expense, which doubtless those attending the Convention will assist in meeting.

Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin-place, Keswick, will again kindly act as hon. secretary, to whom applications for lodgings or hotel accommodation may be sent, stating particulars of what is desired. Anyone taking rooms for longer than a week, will find it much easier to obtain accommodation early.

Yours faithfully in Christ Jesus,
Robert Wilson, Broughton Grange, Carlisle.

A HOLIDAY HOME OF REST.—Dear Sir,—I am again ready to receive London working women and girls for country holidays at my "Cottage Home of Rest" (15, Whitstable-road, Canterbury), upon the recommendation of ladies, who are requested to give full particulars (with stamped envelope) of those desiring admittance.

THE SCOTCH ASSEMBLIES.

THE FREE CHURCH.

The Northern Presbyterian Parliaments are now in full Session. The Free Church of Scotland Assembly has migrated for the nonce to the picturesque capital of the Highlands, a special building having been erected on the bank of the flowing Ness. Much interest has been awakened throughout the Highlands in connection with the visit of the Assembly, and the delegated members mustered in full array.

On Thursday, at noon, the retiring Moderator, Principal Rainy, preached an excellent discourse, in which he earnestly appealed to young men to form and realise an adequate conception of Christian life and service. There followed the election of the new Moderator, Dr. Aird, of Creich, a veteran survivor of the Disruption days. Dr. Aird's inaugural address was devoted to a very interesting historic sketch of the progress of religion in the North of Scotland since the Reformation. The faithful labours and testimony of many of the "apostles of the North" were noted, and the various spiritual revivals touched upon.

At a private meeting a testimonial, in the shape of £5000, was presented to Principal Rainy, in the name of a number of friends.

On Thursday evening a large temperance demonstration was held under the auspices of the Temperance Society of the denomination. Dr. Alexander Whyte, who presided, said it was a noble testimony to the temperance cause that 650 of the ministers of the Free Church were pledged total abstainers. He believed it was the resolute demand of a Christian conscience that had made many of them put their signatures to the pledge. They had work to do in the political as well as the congregational sphere. They were a free and enfranchised people, and what the people demanded any Government must give them, or it would soon be swept away, and another Government would rise and give what the people choose to ask. He did not think he had ever heard a more cynical or a more indecent proposal made than that compensation should be given for the abolition of this traffic. There was never a more contemptuous proposal made to a Christian people than to say that, when they had at last brought Governments to face the drink question, they would turn upon the people in their hour of victory, and demand compensation for a trade which they had resolved should end, at least in its grosser manifestations, among them. Mr. Ritchie might thrash out his proposals on the other side of the Border, but he need not bring them here. A strong campaign in the temperance cause was to be made among their Gaelic-speaking people, and he hoped they would rally round those who were lifting high the Gospel temperance cause, and that it would go far to solve many political, social, and domestic troubles.

Rev. William Ross, Glasgow, moved a resolution, commending the Gospel temperance cause throughout the land to the cordial sympathy and support of all Christian people. Rev. Mr. Mackay, Glasgow, said he had found from a calculation that in Inverness they spent in strong drink every quarter half as much as was contributed to the Sustentation Fund throughout the Free Church. Although a man of peace, his Highland blood would boil so strongly that he would almost feel inclined to head a regiment, and would compel England to conquer Scotland, if she could, before he would accept such a Bill as that of Mr. Ritchie's for this country. Rev. Mr. McKinnon, Uig, said he would like to see all their elders and deacons out of the liquor trade; for as long as they had office-bearers of the Church interfering with this work, their hands were tied. Rev. Thos. Grant, Tain, said he desired, with all his heart, that the traffic should be abolished; but as long as the trade existed he would rather see it in the hands of God-fearing men than in those of unprincipled people.

Resolutions were also passed strongly protesting against the proposed compensation clauses, and against the traffic in strong drink with native heathen races.

On Friday morning the report of the Committee on Religion and Morals was submitted. The document was somewhat desponding in its terms, and referred to the prevalence in many parts of the country of habits of non-church going, of intemperance, and immorality. During the year about an eighth part of the churches had been visited with a view of deepening spiritual life and quickening church activity. Several speakers referred to the need of making the prayer-meetings more attractive by more evident and earnest preparation on the part of the conductors. Christian families were urged to take in hand careless families around them, and influence them for good.

A crowded gathering in the evening listened to the report of the Jewish Mission, and an address by the Venerable Dr. A. N. Somerville on his recent tour in Eastern Europe. Particulars of this tour have appeared in our columns from time to time. Dr. Somerville, in his exceedingly interesting statement, said he had done the work of an evangelist among nine different nationalities, and had spoken through twenty-eight separate interpreters. Speaking of the hindrances met with, he said he had been debarred in Bohemia from circulating Scriptures or Christian literature, and in some cases was not allowed to have public prayer or praise in the meetings. Referring to the work among Roman Catholics, Dr. Somerville read an extract of a letter received from Rev. Mr. Clarke, American Missionary, Bohemia, stating that since his visit to Prague the Free Church of Bohemia has welcomed to church membership twenty-three persons formerly Romanists. In Servia no permission could be secured for public meetings, but three private gatherings were held, and through these a better opportunity was probably afforded of reaching Servian hearts than if full liberty had been granted. An interesting item was the fact that four of the interpreters were converted Jews. Dr. Somerville spoke with gratitude of his interviews with Rabbis Lichenstein and Rabinowitz, and of the work they are doing among their Jewish brethren.

THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH.

The Assembly of this community has met as customary in Edinburgh, and there was the usual public pageantry in connection with the opening services, and the visit of the Lord High Commissioner, the Earl of Hopetoun. The new Moderator is Dr. Gray, of Liberton; he delivered no set address at the opening session, and the proceedings were largely formal. In the evening, at a temperance conference in connection with the Church of Scotland Women's Association, Professor Charteris put forward the notion that "the temperance platform" stood higher than the total abstinence platform. Rev. George Wilson, of St. Michael's, could not, however, agree with this. The Professor had also put in a plea for a modified compensation to the publicans as an equitable claim, but Mr. Paton, of St. Paul's, said the ministers and elders in the West were out-and-out opposed to compensation.

On Friday there was a long and acrimonious discussion as to the reception of a petition protesting against the "images" recently set up in St. Giles' Church; the Assembly decided by a large majority not to receive the petition, and therefore the discussion of the question on its merits was burked.

Delegates from the Continental Protestant Churches subsequently addressed the Assembly, and gave interesting accounts of the work of the Waldensian and other Churches.

AYAHS IN LONDON.—For more than sixty years suitable protection and help has been at hand for poor Indian women arriving in London. Latterly, however, the Home has not been adequately supported, although it is wanted as much as ever. Further information may be obtained from the Matron, 6, Jewry-street, Aldgate, E.C.

EDUCATION OF COLOURED RACES.

Increasing effort is being made to provide for the higher education of the coloured people of Canada. The Wilberforce Educational Institute was commenced as long ago as 1841, in a log cabin, six miles from Chatham, Ontario, and was subsequently established in that town. It is now to be considerably enlarged to meet the pressing needs of the day, being the only such institute free from race-prejudice. Rev. Josiah Henson, of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" fame, co-operated with the original founders, and took a lively interest in the development of the work. It is proposed to endow several Scholarships for promising pupils, but before carrying out their resolve, the trustees have sent the principal of the Institute, Rev. Henry M. Joseph, to England, to lay the case before the friends of education and religion, with a view to securing financial help.

Mr. Joseph is a coloured clergyman of the Church of England, and a successful educationist. He holds recommendations from Lord Lansdowne and Sir John Macdonald, and is very highly spoken of by the Bishop of Antigua. His present address is 32, Milman-street, Bedford-row, W.C.

DR. ZIEMANN'S WORK.

The German Luthardt Church Gazette recently had an article on "Christian and Ecclesiastical Life in Frankfort," which spoke of Dr. Ziemann's work as follows:—"At the beginning of this year a new Union was added to the old one as a branch of the 'Christian Union for the Elevation of Public Morals in Germany.' It was called into existence by the English physician, Dr. Ziemann, whose name has been well known for years in Germany. Dr. Ziemann with great simplicity, power, and enthusiasm set forth the evangelical doctrine of salvation. There were only three properly so-called evangelical addresses, his four principal discourses 'Against Immorality' were treated from the medical standpoint—but they were also in the highest degree edifying. A deep, vehement earnestness characterised them.

"It was thought that the announcement 'for men only' might attract the curious and frivolous, and some fear was entertained of a disturbance, but between four and five thousand men followed the speaker with the most eager attention and the deepest earnestness for four evenings, as he described the curse of immorality, and with the sharpest, most unsparing judgment denounced those who can speak of such things with smiling lips. He showed too the impossibility of deliverance of the bound by their own strength, and then pointed to the gracious help of Him who makes all things new. There were comparatively few directly religious words, the name of Jesus Christ being only twice mentioned, nevertheless one of our high-class schoolmasters said with perfect truth, 'I have scarcely ever heard a more powerful preacher of Christ.' At the close of each address the whole assembly broke into loud applause."

REV. F. B. MEYER will give a series of Bible-readings to young men at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, on the first four Fridays in June, at 8 p.m., on "Genesis, the Book of Beginnings." June 1, The Beginning of the Sabbath; 8, The Beginning of Sin; 15, The Beginning of Redemption; 22, The Beginning of the Separated People.

THE STRANGERS' HOME for Asiatics, Africans, and South Sea Islanders, last year received 380 men, of many nationalities. The figures and summaries in the last annual report show that the spiritual needs of the men were considered as well as their bodily comfort. The Home is situate in the West India Dock-road, Limehouse, and Mr. J. H. Fergusson is the hon. sec.

A MODEL WORKING MEN'S HOME.

The Victoria Home for Working Men, 39 and 41, Commercial-street, E., is in every respect a model institution of its kind. A really comfortable Home for men of the class which generally crowds the common lodging-house with its surroundings of misery and vice, it is highly appreciated by its hundreds of inmates. Those inmates are working men who, for the most part, have realised that it is possible for them to improve their position in life, and who have determined to make at least one more endeavour to move upwards rather than to sink to the very bottom in the social scale. As a rule, they avail themselves of the accommodation provided by the Home just when "ready to perish"; then, taken by the hand by Mr. A. Wilké, the general manager, they make a fresh start, and it is gratifying to know that in many cases that start has been rapidly followed by progress leading on to domestic comfort such as formerly seemed altogether unattainable.

Not only do men sleep on the premises, but every accommodation is provided for them to get their meals there, and some also find it possible to do their work in one or other of the spacious apartments. Bible-classes and meetings are held for the moral and religious instruction of the men, who show a very wholesome jealousy for the respectability of the Home. Drunken men are, of course, not allowed on the premises at all, and bad characters in general find the atmosphere quite uncongenial, and are soon weeded out. The Home supports itself—a very gratifying fact.

On Wednesday, last week, a meeting for praise and prayer was held at the Home, in commemoration of the first anniversary, and in celebration of the opening of a new wing with 200 beds, making a total of 460 beds. The ladies and gentlemen who assembled and went over the Home were greatly cheered by what they saw. The day also marked the fifth anniversary of the Emigrants' Home, an allied institution, which has been the means of much good among foreigners passing through London.

Lord Radstock presided over the meeting, and in the course of a few remarks, said that through the giving up of strong drink many of the men had become more amenable than formerly to Christian influence. He urged the importance of a testimony for Christ among the men—not preaching or speaking, but living and loving. Let the men see that they are cared for; they cannot help noticing that feeling of interest if it is manifested, and hence the need of God's grace upon all who work in the Home.

Mr. Wilké, in a brief statement, said that many of the men using the Home are small tradesmen, and mechanics, who owe their present poverty to untoward circumstances, and not to drinking habits. They greatly need that powerful support which is afforded by contact with Christians who do not feel themselves contaminated by such friendly contact. There are some excellent characters among the men, by whom swearing and bad behaviour are at once put down. Mr. Wilké also told some encouraging stories of men who had "gone against the wall," and were on the verge of despair, speedily regaining their feet on timely assistance having been given them.

Several friends offered prayer, and among the petitions was one that such a Home might soon be provided for the poor disconsolate women of London.

Mr. T. A. Denny intimated that any contribution towards the £900 debt upon the Institution would be welcome. The need for a library was also pointed out, and likewise for draughts and chess, so that the men may find amusement indoors. Mr. Wilké is also desirous of having a number of hucksters' carts to let to those who temporarily require such help.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL AND MEDICAL MISSION.

Last week I had the pleasure to preside at a meeting at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, at which a number of present and past students of that medical school arrived at a decision in regard to medical mission work, in the furtherance of which we desire to ask your kind co-operation.

Some of the students had received letters from fellow-students now in the medical mission field, from which it appeared that the Societies under whose auspices they had gone out were unable, from financial reasons, to supply them with the needed drugs and instruments; and on further inquiry, it transpired, that this lack of those appliances was very general, that in a number of instances the missionaries had to procure them as best they could, or go without them, and that their work was very gravely hindered in consequence. A small sum of money was at once collected and sent out to meet the immediate wants of an old Bartholomew man, serving his Master in the African mission field, but it became evident that much more than this was needed. Hence, under the auspices of the Christian Medical Association attached to the hospital, the meeting to which I referred was held.

At this meeting, Dr. Jukes, agent under the Church Missionary Society at Dera Ghazi Khan, on the borders of Afghanistan, North India, gave some striking instances of the success of his work of evangelisation as the result of successful surgical operations, and he told us that, owing to his securing on one occasion a modern instrument, the natives, suffering one special malady, and including a chief, on whose son he successfully operated, forsook their native doctors, and flocked to him from a distance of no less than 200 miles. Each patient had to be retained some weeks in hospital, and during this period the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour was preached to them, and gratefully accepted by some. But, together with this testimony of the potency for good of having the proper appliances for his work, we were told that he was obliged himself to obtain, through such friends as could help him, all his drugs and instruments.

Dr. Wilson, of the China Inland Mission, Hanchung, gave a very similar testimony. He explained that in the interior of China missionaries are to a large extent only tolerated "in sufferance," and that success in establishing a station often depends on success in treating one of the early cases of disease which presents itself. But to such straits has Dr. Wilson been put that he has had to buy old bands of steel and the zinc lining of old packing cases, transforming the former into instruments, and extracting the zinc from the latter for lotions and other remedies.

Abundant evidence is now before us to the effect that the medical missionary must be properly equipped in order that his labours may be successful in the highest sense, and it is certain that each such missionary will need some £60 a year for this purpose. I am thankful to say that we have decided at St. Bartholomew's Hospital that we will see that medical missionaries going forth from our school shall, if possible, no longer suffer want in this respect, and we have formed a local Medical Missionary Society for this purpose. A number of students and others have already promised to become annual subscribers, and my main object in writing this letter is to secure the assistance of former students of our hospital in the task which we have undertaken. Our Society has formulated its principal objects in two sentences:—(1) By remembering medical missionaries in prayer; (2) By assisting them with subscriptions, especially towards their drugs, &c.

We desire thus to keep in touch with those who have gone forth from our medical school, and we feel sure that many former students will desire to unite with us in upholding them in their labour of love, and will heartily endorse our decision that they shall lack no longer for those appliances which are so essential to their work. Through your columns we can best expect to catch the eye of our Christian colleagues. I may add, that all subscriptions should be sent to Mr. E. W. G. Masterman, hon. sec., St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

PRIEST-RIDDEN SPAIN.

Dear Sir,—My last letter told you how a friend had written promising to make up the sum needed to purchase the site. The pastor lost not a moment in doing his best to secure it. But the lawyer would not credit practically the assurance that very shortly the money would be sent from England, and refused to draw up a document. The landlady, however, agreed to wait a couple of weeks. The Romanists at once seized the opportunity. A deputation from the Society de St. Vincent de Paul and the Society of the Holy Cross, headed by the Rector of St. Peter's, the largest church here, called on the landlady and urged that she must not be guilty of selling the land for a Protestant Capilla. At the same time, they laid down the money to purchase the site, £400, and also £1600 to purchase a house and garden adjoining the site, thus effectually shutting the Protestants out on each side.

All we could do on hearing of it was to have united prayer, entreating the Lord to undertake for us. See how He is going to answer. There is a well-located site for sale. The price asked is £600. A friend in England suggests that we should go there to "beg for the hall." I cannot understand how it is that it should be necessary actually to beg the Lord's people to support his cause, when the enemies of his truth are so willing that in forty-eight hours £2000 are raised by the Romanists; and it has taken two years for God's children to raise £400.

So long as professedly consecrated Christians keep such luxurious tables, and fritter away their wealth in superfluous expenditure, missionaries from all parts have to go home every year or two to hold meetings to plead for and enable them to carry on their work, which must necessarily suffer more or less by their absence. The work here is prospering spiritually, and we do not purpose leaving it even to beg for the hall, trusting that the Lord will impress his people with the responsibility and privilege of upholding the cause of his Gospel in this priest-ridden land.

From communications received we find that Christians are concluding that other Christians are liberally supplying the means for the site and hall—a great mistake. "Am I my brother's keeper?"—Yours affectionately in Jesus,

Emily Lopez Rodriguez.

PROSTESTANT EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTE.—Of the great activity of the Roman Catholic propaganda at the present time there can be no doubt, and there is too much reason to believe that many of the young, as well as not a few persons of maturer years, are being influenced in a direction calculated to result not only in their own spiritual hurt, but also in a serious compromise of political freedom. The Protestant Educational Institute makes special efforts to counteract Romish aggressions and tendencies; and in addition to publishing manuals and tracts on the many controversies involved, it seeks to instruct the people, by means of popular lectures and educational classes, in the truths of the Holy Scriptures and the history of tha Reformation. The "Short Report for the year 1887," just published (from the offices, 38, Parliament-street, S.W.), shows in some measure the extent of the operations of the Institute.

CHRISTIANS IN CONFERENCE.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

On Bank Holiday, May 21, the usual gatherings of Christian workers in connection with the Evangelistic Mission took place at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, Pimlico, large numbers of friends responding to the invitations that had been circulated.

Sir Robert Phayre presided over the afternoon meeting, when several helpful addresses on spiritual power were given. Mr. Charles Inglis spoke forcibly on 1 Sam. iii. 19, 20, after which Mr. George Hucklesby read Eph. i. 18: "The eyes of your heart being enlightened," &c.; chap. iii. 20: "Now unto Him," &c.; Acts i. 8: "But ye shall receive power," &c. In these three Scriptures the power of the Spirit is referred to as working for the believer, in the believer, and resting upon the believer.

Mr. T. A. Denny, having delivered a brief address, introduced two ladies who are engaged in missions among the railway men in Switzerland, and who explained their work and its needs. Mr. W. R. Lane spoke from Ps. lxxxv. 6: "Wilt Thou not revive us again." One hopeful sign in these days is the desire for revival. If there is to be revival it must begin as an individual thing.

At the evening meeting, after a few words by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, Sir R. Phayre read from John xvii., showing the position of believers as the light of the world. Mr. Thomas Miller, referring to the words, "Christian workers," raised the question how far they were applicable to all present. Lord Radstock held that God makes no distinction between saints and workers. Obedience is Christian work. There is a danger lest we suppose that only those persons are workers who talk in a particular way, or go to meetings, or give away tracts. Some of the brightest saints are never seen on the platform at all. The Christ-life is in reality the portion of every believer.

Dr. Barnardo read and commented on the words: "Son, go work to-day in my vineyard," showing the principles which should guide Christian workers in their service. The meetings were in the highest sense profitable to those who attended.

UNION HALL MISSION.

On Bank Holiday happy services were held at Union Hall, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road. The morning conference of believers proved very refreshing to all; excellent addresses were given.

In the afternoon a large open-air service was held in Regent's Park, where crowds always assemble on these occasions. The singing brought a large company together, and the Gospel was earnestly proclaimed. At five o'clock the company adjourned to the hall for tea; and at six o'clock they again went to the Edgware-road and other streets adjoining, singing the Gospel hymns and quoting Gospel passages of Scripture to the thousands of people who came to the windows to hear, and to numbers who followed on through the streets.

A large company came together in the evening at Union Hall. Many old friends—some from distant country towns and others from gatherings in the Metropolis—gave stirring addresses. We praise God for the mutual help given and received through these gatherings.

I would ask the prayers of Christians for proposed tent work this summer, and for means to carry them on, as well as for the work of God in our six mission-halls.

THE INDIGENT BLIND VISITING SOCIETY does a good work in a quiet way, in East London. Needy men and women, who are not blessed with the power of sight, are visited and helped in various ways. Mr. W. Mead, St. Philip's Institute, behind London Hospital, will give further information, and acknowledge receipt of subscriptions.

MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY.

The fiftieth annual meeting of this Society was held a few days ago at Exeter Hall, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., in the chair. An abstract of the annual report was read by the secretary, Mr. J. R. Mackenzie. It showed that the free grants made to many institutions all over the kingdom have been highly appreciated.

The chairman commended the Society to the hearty support of the public. The work is of a quiet character, and mainly directed to reaching the upper, or richer, classes of the population, and this seemed to him a very necessary thing, as the heathenism of the upper classes is more conspicuous than their Christianity. So far as he had seen, the tracts issued by the Society were calculated, by God's blessing, to attain the object in view, as they were written in such a way as to be suitable for the perusal of persons of culture. Having referred to the prevalence of hurtful books and papers, the chairman suggested the posting of religious literature to hotels, a proceeding to which he thought many of the landlords would assent. The waiting-rooms and railway-stations of India also are sadly in need of a supply of reading matter of a good and elevating kind.

Rev. W. H. Barlow, vicar of Islington, maintained that there is greater need now than ever before for work such as the Society is doing. The tracts are based upon the simplest forms of Christian truth — upon the great vital principles which all must hold, whatever evangelical denomination they may belong to. Remarking upon the distribution of tracts, he said that there are two ways of carrying it on. One is a haphazard manner; the other is to select three or four thoroughly good tracts, and distribute those and those only. One of the most diligent distributors he ever knew gave away thousands upon thousands of tracts, almost all of them copies of one which he regarded as specially suited to the needs of the people.

Rev. George Hawker remarked that while on the one hand religion has suffered for the silence of those who believe it, on the other hand it has also suffered from the clumsiness and the obtrusiveness with which it has sometimes been presented. Quietly, through the post, the tracts published by the Society enter many houses in which such literature is by no means too common.

Mr. Campbell, M.P., in a brief address, said that for thirty and forty years he had regularly hailed the tracts, and he knew them to be welcome to other members of his household.

Rev. G. A. Bennetts also spoke. He could not understand how any Christian can be anything but an enthusiastic believer in Christian literature. It is the glory of our religion that it is a religion founded upon a book, and the religion of the Book should surely be one which believes in the power and place of literature in winning the world to God. He specially rejoiced in the work of the Society because it was unobtrusive in its proceedings. He knew of no practical means of reaching the cultured classes that for efficiency could be compared with that Society's operations. The tracts of the Society were, in his judgment, above all praise.

MR. J. B. WOOKEY has accepted the position of evangelist and deputation secretary to Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

THE GOOTY MISSION.—The report of the London Mission, Gooty, Madras, states that 1887 was a pleasant and prosperous year. For some time now the Mission agents have found the inhabitants willing and attentive hearers when preached to, and interested in the education of their children, though only two or three have been known to embrace Christianity. The Christians living in Gooty are men and women who have come from other towns and found employment there. Educational, zenana, and evangelistic work are carried on in the town and district by devoted labourers.

EVAN. CONTINENTAL SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the Evangelical Continental Society was held a few days ago in Grafton-square Congregational Church, Clapham, Dr. F. J. Wood presiding. The report, read by Rev. R. S. Ashton, secretary, showed that the year's work had been characterised by progress as well as the maintenance of old positions taken in countries which have long been regarded as abodes of ignorance and strongholds of error.

In an address surveying the field and reviewing the Society's operations, the chairman pointed to the great change which has come over the scene in Italy during the present generation, and declared the general outlook to be very hopeful. He could not help thinking that the day was not far distant when all Europe and India would be opened up for the circulation of the Word of God.

Rev. T. Eynon Davies urged united efforts to spread Gospel light over the region which is now occupied by the spiritual despotism of Romanism. As there is such a thing as peace with honour, so also there is a truce that may mean treason; but children of God could have no truce with darkness and spiritual ignorance. He maintained that, as an undenominational agency, the Society appealed to all lovers of Christ for sympathy and support.

The needs of Spain were spoken of by Rev. J. Jameson, of Madrid. Rev. J. D. Turino, of Genoa, gave details of work in Italy. Both communicated much that was interesting and cheering.

Rev. Dr. MacEwan and Mr. D. Matheson also addressed the meeting.

GARNERING IN LIVERPOOL.

The visitation of the large number of inquirers met with during Dr. Guinness' recent mission in Liverpool is being vigorously proceeded with, and the results have been very satisfactory; the greater number, so far as we can ascertain, are decidedly in the light. Three brothers and three sisters of one family have been led to decision.

At the first meeting for inquirers, a man, showing much emotion, asked if God could restore one who had been in the light but had backslidden, and if the craving for strong drink could be taken away. He had been a slave to the bottle, and it seemed as if he could not exist without it. God has removed this awful craving from him, and has given him a new heart; he is now enjoying fulness of light and freedom, and is regularly attending the meetings. He says he is not like himself; he feels more like somebody else. The change is a marvel to his former companions, and is having a very beneficial effect. He is also getting his relations and friends to seek the light. Another, whose pipe was his god, has been enabled to overthrow the old habit. He has determined to remit to the East-end Institute in future an amount similar to that he formerly spent in tobacco.

Another, an employer in the City, who benefited by the Mission, took the earliest opportunity of calling his clerks together for Christian counsel, the result being that five, out of some eight or ten, have given themselves to God.

We desire that your readers will pray earnestly for a continuous flow of Divine blessing in this great city.

Thomas Jameson, Sec. Y.M.C.A.

THE ST. PAUL'S REREDOS.—Already £27,000 has been expended upon the reredos in St. Paul's, and it is now proposed to spend £8000 more in side screens. The promoters of this architectural sacrilege (says Truth) do not seem to understand that their reredos is as much out of place in St. Paul's as a Punch and Judy would be in a Greek temple.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. J. T. Wrenford, vicar of St. Paul's, Newport, Mon.

The usual circular of invitation to the Keswick Convention, July 23 to 28, is issued by the conveners, Mr. Wilson, of Carlisle, and Mr. Bowker, of London. We give it in extenso on page 8.

The following has been sent, with the sum of £25, to a mission in London. It may lead to others adopting a similar course :—

> DEAR ——, I have much pleasure in handing you the enclosed draft in aid of your truly blessed work, and which kindly enter, omitting name, in lieu of legacy (Matt. vi. 19, 20). I have a strong feeling that it is more honouring to God, and in every way better, to give to the Lord's work as far as one can during one's life time, and I shall be glad if this were suggested to Christians who possess means.
> The Lord be praised for the great work He has privileged you to carry on for so many years past, and I believe there is "more to follow," and that you will yet, under God, see greater things. Outside the church the Spirit has been at work, but, oh! for a mighty revival in our churches now so worldly and dead. Do make this a subject of special prayer.

Several clergymen have issued an appeal for help towards "giving Sunday lectures addressed to artisans," in order "to show that religion and science are not contradictions, and that the Church of England is really a friend to real freedom of thought." The movement is the outcome of a conference, which is described as "a revelation to many of the strength of secular feeling in very many of the artisans of London." Those who go much among working men know very well that the indifference which many of them maintain in regard to such religious opportunities as are within their reach, neither warrants the charge of atheism, nor calls for the epithet of "secularist." There is certainly a widespread indifference, but it arises from various causes having to do with modern religious life, rather than from any definite hostility to the Gospel. Sunday lectures are not likely to succeed where the Gospel has failed. It might be as well, however, for something to be first attempted by way of earnestly presenting the old evangel of Love, without that regard for formalities and accessories which has so largely conduced to the present widespread indifference.

While there is much that is promising in the social state of India to-day, there is also much that gives reason for apprehension for the future. Among the auguries of good is the growing dissatisfaction of the people with old-time religious ordinances and sanctions; among the grounds of fear must be reckoned the indications that the heathen millions may soon emerge from darkness into something less than Christian light. By the report, just published, of the third Indian National Congress, which was held at Madras in December last, it is made wonderfully evident that the native races can, in spite of their great religious differences, meet upon a united and strong platform for the discussion of the many social and political questions affecting themselves. Great ability was shown in the deliberations upon reforms proposed at that Congress; all parts of India were represented, the delegates numbering over six hundred, not a few of them men of statesmen-like calibre.

Yet it is certain that in the higher as well as the lower classes of society in India, prejudice dies hard. This has been strangely illustrated lately at the Madras Christian College, a very successful educational agency, which is not conducted with the avowed object of making proselytes. The College is open to all who conform to certain religious rules, which include attendance at morning prayers and study of the Scriptures. It would seem that it is very exceptional for the intellectual training to result in spiritual enlightenment, for on a Brahmin student lately embracing Christianity there was a great commotion, and something like a mutiny among the 640 students of the College. The conduct of the students seems to show that the religious teaching given in the College has had but little effect upon them from the Christian standpoint, and it would appear desirable that the basis of the institution should be made more decidedly evangelical and missionary.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes' second lecture at St. James's Hall, on "The Battle with Unbelief," was an admirable statement and summing up of the Christian position. Admitting that the historical facts of our Lord's resurrection and other supernatural events in his history are the primary basis on which our faith rests, the preacher showed how these facts are well established by documents whose genuineness no critic disputes. At the same time the personal experience of every Christian whose life has been transformed by the power of Christ received through faith, is an evidence more potent than, and to an extent independent of, documentary evidence.

Gambling is a sin which the authorities are especially required, both by expediency and duty, to put down with an iron hand, in every shape or form in which it may appear, and the Canadian Legislature is setting, by its uncompromising attitude towards this degrading vice of gambling, an example which might with great advantage be followed by the nations of Europe. The inconsistency of laws which, while deservedly punishing the street boys who play at pitch and toss, leave wealthy horse-racers and stock-jobbers unmolested, has often attracted attention, and given ground to the complaint that there is one law for the rich, and another for the poor.

This will be abundantly remedied by the Bill for the suppression of gambling on the Stock Exchange, which has just been passed by the Canadian Legislature. It prohibits the conclusion of contracts for the sale or purchase of stocks, with the object of making profit by the rise and fall in price, and without the bonâ fide intention of acquiring the stock, and persons violating the law will be punished as common gamesters. It is well that the fact should be clearly demonstrated, that "speculating" on the rise and fall of stocks and shares is not removed in point of sinfulness one jot from the more specious forms of gaming, and the action of the Canadian Assembly is doubly welcome, as making their identity conspicuous, and as putting an end to a most reprehensible and degrading practice.

The grave news that the Government intend rewarding the Pope for his assistance in Ireland, by the foundation and endowment of a Romish University in that country, cannot fail to arouse serious apprehension in the hearts of all who have really the interests of Protestantism at heart. The step was not wholly unexpected in political circles, and, if rumour can be credited, it is only a preliminary step to the complete establishment of Romanism as the state religion in Ireland. Both steps must and will be stoutly resisted by the English people. They will be fully alive to the enormity of expending the public money in subsidising a form of belief which they believe to be at variance with true religion, morality, and common sense. The nation which was ready in former times to take up arms against the encroachments of Popery, will not be one whit more backward to-day, when their progress, if perhaps more subtle, is not less dangerous, and not less sure. England is traditionally and essentially a Protestant country, and she will not sacrifice her dearly bought liberties in order to enable a formidable and avowedly hostile power once more to raise up its head against her within her dominions.

We are glad to see that the widespread indignation aroused by the announcement of this project has elicited a semi-official contradiction. But we have it on a high authority that the execution of the scheme has only been deferred, and in no way abandoned, and it behoves all Englishmen who cherish the civil and religious liberties of their country to defend them against all encroachments which may be made upon them. The emissaries of Popery are ever mustering their unseen array, and there is no possible advantage which they will neglect to seize, should the occasion be given them. Protestants must stand manfully and prayerfully, as watchful sentinels upon the ramparts, and be prepared for immediate action at the first stirring of the enemy.

The increasing prevalence of intoxication among children, as evidenced by the statistics of recent Bank Holiday police charges, affords food for serious reflection and searchings of heart. The taste for strong drink is so essentially an acquired one, and so naturally repulsive to the untrained palate, that the parents of the children must be held largely responsible for this sad state of things. If parents would only perceive the criminal weakness, and the wickedness of accustoming their children to the taste of alcoholic beverages, such things would be impossible. Giving boys strong drink can do them no good at the time; it presents the vice of drinking to them in the seductive garb of a "manly" pursuit; and it exposes them as they grow up to a temptation which would not otherwise beset them. It is, indeed, a most lamentable augury for the future of our country that the rising generation should prematurely ape the degrading vices of their elders, and the soul-searching spectacle of a drunken child is one that might well make men despair of the hope and progress of their boasted civilisation.

Travelling in certain districts of the Holy Land will soon lose its element of romance, for, it is stated, that the sleepers, rails, telegraphs, and engines, &c., for the projected line of railway, between Jaffa and Jerusalem, have been delivered on the ground. In many respects, however, the improvement of the means of communication in Palestine will be an unmixed benefit to the residents; and so far as Western travellers are concerned, anything which increases the convenience and cheapness of an Eastern journey will result in adding to the numbers of those believers who take the journey to look upon the sacred spots hallowed by the footsteps of the Saviour.

It is not often that so high a tone is taken in State correspondence as that which runs through a letter from George III. to Lord Dartmouth in America in 1773, which appears in the last report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission. Returning a letter which the Colonial Minister had enclosed for his perusal, the King says:—

> It contains many very useful lessons to a young man, but I could have wished that its writer had put before his young friend the only true incentive to rectitude of conduct. I mean the belief in a Supreme Being, and that we are to be rewarded or punished agreeably to the lives we lead. If the first of all duties, that to God, is not known, I fear no other can be expected, and as to the fashionable word honour, that will never guide a man further than to preserve appearances. I will not add more, for I know that I am writing to a true believer, one who shows by his actions that he is not governed by the greatest of all tyrants, fashion.

The Congregational papers tell of a church dispute in a wealthy suburb of Birmingham, which is a scandal in that town. A minister wished, we are told, for the retirement from the Sunday-school of a teacher whose views of inspiration he regarded as erroneous. But others made common cause with the offender. We are incompetent to pronounce judgment in this case, but it suggests that when the "new theology" is in the pew, and not in the pulpit, there may be very serious trouble before the churches of this country. The contrary is equally true, and both dangers warn against the rashness that hastens to speak, instead of waiting in self-diffidence to think and pray.

The Council of the Y.W.C.A. are about to adopt special measures of instruction to counteract the sceptical literature to which young women in London are apt to fall a prey. It is to be noted that the scepticism which is the bane of the age is that which will not take the trouble to investigate evidence. Presumption, superficiality, and unwillingness to take pains to look at both sides, are working sore evils just now. Even professed theologians fall under the tendency. Immature treatises come out, which, while apparently intended to aid faith, in reality destroy it, and such ostensibly Christian writers, through their haste to print, are little better than recruiting sergeants for avowed infidelity.

Signor Turino, of Genoa, said, at the annual meeting of the Continental Evangelical Society, that infidelity in Italy is helping Romanism. People on the Continent begin to see that all social life is threatened by speaking against religion; and so, for fear of the anarchy which is coming, they bow down before the Pope. And this peril menaces England. Men and women lose their moorings; find themselves drifting like drowning men in a hopeless sea, and then, ready to catch at anything, will catch at so-called priests to find safety. Popery and ultra-Ritualism will reap the harvest of the seeds which rationalism and superficial scepticism are widely sowing

It is the wonder of history that at a period in ancient Rome of the highest civilisation and culture the chief amusement of the people was the spectacle of terror and bloodshed in the amphitheatre. A morbid craving for sensation at the peril of human life is almost the lowest abyss to which a depraved taste can go. What are we to say of sixty thousand people who at the Crystal Palace on Whit Monday found enjoyment in knowing that a woman, a mile and a half up in the air, was hanging to a balloon by her teeth? Last Saturday's Spectator very justly affirmed that for people to find amusement in an exhibition that places the life of a fellow-creature in jeopardy is intolerably immoral.

Mr. William Tallack, secretary of the Howard Association, has written to The Times, saying that he has received a letter from the Secretary of the Minnesota State Board of Prisons and Charities, which, whilst cordially approving of the emigration method of disposing of destitute children, urges the paramount necessity of care and discretion on the part of Boards of Guardians, emigration agents, and philanthropic societies, and the absolute need (as recently advocated in these columns) of preliminary training before emigrants are despatched. But every medal has two sides; and, as Mr. Tallack points out, England should, in justice to her own workers and taxpayers, decline any longer to be made a "dumping-ground" for Continental paupers.

> What is the use, he pertinently asks, of our emigrating a few hundred juvenile and adult paupers at great expense, if meanwhile thousands of penniless Russians and Germans are being landed in England to compete with the struggling working men, and to become a burden upon the already overweighted taxpayer? This process is like an attempt to empty a cistern by one pipe while a larger one is pouring into it at full stream.

Mr. Montagu Williams, the magistrate at Wandsworth Police Court, has again shown himself a true friend of the poor by refusing to allow a School Board commitment to be enforced against a woman with four little children who had been deserted by her husband, and, having been unable to obtain any work, could not pay the fines incurred for not sending her children to school. Upon investigation it was found that she had no food to give the children, but bread soaked in water, and two of them were without boots. The magistrate said that he would not have these poor people's homes taken from them for School Board commitments, unless it were proved that the law was being wilfully defied. Mr. Montagu Williams' example is worthy of imitation by other magistrates.

Although attempts to take a reliable census of the unemployed have not been very successful, yet in view of the increasing attention paid to the subject, any statistics which assist in arriving at a true estimate of the condition of the people are acceptable. An elaborate paper, lately read before the Royal Statistical Society, stated that out of a population of nearly one million in East London, more than one-third are to be classed as in a state of poverty. One per cent. only consists of very poor of the lowest class, about eight per cent. are in irregular employment, and fourteen per cent. in receipt of regular minimum earnings. However interesting such statistics may be, it must be borne in mind that it is not so much committees, registrations, or cut-and-dried reports that are needed, as active, personal, self-denying sympathy.

One of the most interesting of the gatherings of the Friends' Yearly Meeting, reported elsewhere, was the annual meeting of the members of the Missionary Helpers' Union. These "helpers" are children, who form branches in many parts of the country, and work for the native children of the lands where the missionaries are labouring. The local branches meet once a month to hear about the work of the missionaries, and to report on and continue their own work. They make every imaginable thing that can be useful to, or amuse, or interest the children abroad. It is a pretty idea this of uniting the children of this land with those of heathen lands by a common interest in their daily lives. Here the children delight themselves in making cuffs, socks, and all kinds of garments, in dressing dolls, threading beads, painting texts of Scripture, and a thousand others things, which they know will be actually received, welcomed, and enjoyed by the little ones in far-off lands. By these means substantial help is given to the missionary cause, the children "helpers" acquire a permanent interest in missionary work, and their knowledge and sympathy are enlarged. There is so much to be said in favour of this excellent plan that it ought to be adopted by every Sunday-school in the kingdom.

> Simla, May 26.
> The circular memorandum issued from the office of the Quartermaster-General in India on June 17, 1886, relating to the subject of prostitution, has been cancelled.

If the agitation begun by Mr. Dyer and continued by some of the religious journals in this country had done nothing else than secure this result, it would have been worth all the labour expended on it. The cancelling of this atrocious official document is, we hope, the real beginning of the end. Some of our readers may like to know that a special number of THE CHRISTIAN has been issued, containing a full report of the recent great meeting at Exeter Hall. Copies for distribution may be had from the publishers, 3s. 6d. per 100.

An article by Rev. E. Rainsford in the New York Churchman calls attention to the multiplication in Great Britain of Roman Catholic religious communities, but attributes the great increase chiefly to the antagonistic action taken by the French and Italian Governments towards monks, friars, and nuns, having driven large numbers of them to settle in England and Scotland. "In defiance of the law" the writer says, "they have acquired real estate with the funds of their property acquired abroad, or monies raised by lotteries, raffles, and other questionable methods," but "the supply is in excess of the demand." We are glad to be assured of this, for the Roman Catholic priests have so many accounts of the establishment of such communities in various parts of the country, and of the opening of missions in all parts, including Wales, that possibly we are inclined to look upon the invasion as larger than it really is. In any case, however, it is too large, and it is impossible to regard it without grave anxiety. It is against the law for a single Jesuit to be in England.

BIBLE STUDY AT NIAGARA.—We would again remind our readers of the Believers' meetings for Bible Study at this pleasant Canadian resort, to be held July 18—25. Able expositors of the Scripture will be present, and the subjects set down for consideration are of vital and perennial importance.

MR. H. VARLEY AT MELBOURNE.

My Dear Brother,—It may interest your readers to have some account of the work identified with my visit to the sunny South. I rejoice to say that I am feeling much stronger, and, so far as my chest is concerned, have not experienced any necessity for refraining from work since my arrival. The meetings have been crowded, and full of deep interest, the Sunday services in the Theatre Royal and in various churches in the city, possessing many features of grateful interest. In every place proofs of the reality and widespread issues of the work, permitted me ten years since, have poured in upon us, and surely our cup has run over, as the fruit of the great Lord's working became so signally manifested. The testimony has come from all sections of the community—Ministers, Christians, Churches, Brethren, Missionaries, and Salvation Army officers have contributed to the blessed tidings received.

I have been giving special Sunday afternoon addresses to men. It is said that hundreds went away last Sunday afternoon, after every available place inside the great theatre was filled. From the stage, on which large numbers stood the whole time of the meeting, the sight was very imposing, and the deep interest prevailing in the quiet hush of the great sea of faces gave cause for gratitude. More than a hundred have confessed Christ the two last Sunday evenings, and the prospects for the meetings yet to be held are full of hope. A deep spirit of prayer possesses many hearts amongst the scores of thousands in this marvellous city. There are many believers yearning for the salvation of men.

Ten years have produced astonishing results in Melbourne, so far as growth of population and the extent of the city suburbs is concerned. It is said that the numbers now approach 400,000, and an increase of nearly 20,000 yearly is going on. There is great commercial prosperity. Mining and land appear to afford an almost unlimited field for speculation and colonial enterprise. A bank manager told me that the clearing houses show no less an increase than £20,000,000 sterling for the first three months of this year. This represents, to a large extent, the incoming of enormous sums of money from England, and the extraordinary increase in the sale of land which is going on. In my judgment the prices are abnormal, and it certainly could not be matter for surprise if a very marked reaction should set in. Without question, this Colony presents an enormous area for millions of men, women, and children from the old world, who, should they come here, will find abundant room for legitimate enterprise and success.

There is an appalling amount of wickedness in this community. I spent part of one night this very week with Colonel Barker, who is at the head of the Salvation Army, in visiting the scenes where shame, debauch, and foul intemperance hold high carnival. The Chief Commissioner of Police granted us the company of an experienced detective, who gained for us access to houses which, indeed, are a disgrace to any civilised community. Splendidly furnished, and indwelt by young girls who are apparelled in all the costliness of "first-class shame"; it was nothing less than appalling to hear from Madame G., e.g., that these "houses were all hers, and that she had recently refused an offer of £10,000 for the block of land on which her houses stand." But, "Oh, no," she remarked, "I shall sell for more than that, and I shall not part with them at all, until after the Exhibition." To hear this daughter of perdition speak of her "high-class" habitués, and her "respectable houses;" to see her glorying in the sumptuous embellishments and furnishings of these highways to hell; to listen to her outspoken confidence of the great harvest she will reap during the time of the Exhibition; and then to see the awful fascination of the richly-attired sisterhood of shame; indeed, I shall never lose the memory of that dreadful night. No wonder young men and maidens come out to this city, and are never heard of more. No wonder suicide is rife, and young, fair life cut down amid disease and death.

Colonel Barker, in his Salvation Army rescue work, is doing brave and blessed service. In one small Home in Brunswick, a suburb of Melbourne, he and his devoted wife have received no less than 1015 of these unhappy women in five years. This one fact will give some idea of the fearful extent of this desolating scourge. Numbers of the young men belonging to the best families in Melbourne are constantly being drawn into these elaborate dens of sin and shame. They are, indeed, "cast down and slain" in the houses which God says "are in the way to hell." As we walked home in the early morn (2·45), and looked up into the bright azure, where countless stars poured forth their pure and glistening light, I could but say, "O Lord, how long? and when shall come the end of this dread carnival of death?" Oh, that we could have taken those fallen ones with us for rescue! But, alas! alas! they were literally glorying in their shame.

It will be asked, Can nothing be done? Alas! I fear but little. The great hindrance is the guilty complicity of numbers of Melbourne's wealthy men. The dreadful procuresses literally defy the police. One of them actually told the detective who was with me that she would "report him." The Press is criminally silent, and the Church, so called, is afraid of having her respectability touched. Like the Priest and the Levite, she holds her skirts, passes by on the other side, and allows the wounded and bleeding to perish.

The Chinese quarters are most revolting, and to see young English girls smoking opium, and lying in these dens, makes the blood boil. The places in which the Chinese live are beyond description for filth and vileness. I am utterly at a loss to understand how the conditions are tolerated. No wonder typhoid fever and baleful malaria brood over these "miserable huts and shanties." I am informed that, situated in the back streets of the very heart of the city, thousands of Chinese herd, and the rents received by the landlords from these cesspools of filth, vice, sin, and crime are enormous.

It is a great grief to me to write thus, but I am oppressed and sick at heart with that which I have seen over a large area in this goodly city. Perhaps in your influential paper my testimony may reach some who will bring influence to bear against these awful plague-spots in the Southern Metropolis.

Changing the subject, you will be interested to know that after a long and painful season of strife, the Presbyterians have secured the Scots Church in Collins-street, from the "down-grade' teaching of Mr. Strong. Common honesty should have led that gentleman ten years since to leave a church whose doctrines he no longer believed; and whose platform he was using to undermine the faith of the Gospel. I rejoice that our brethren shrunk not from "earnest contention for the faith ONCE FOR ALL delivered to the saints." Dr. Marshall Lang has been supplying Scots Church for some months with much acceptance, and is now returning to his sphere of labour in Glasgow. The new pastor has just arrived, and peace with loyalty to the Word of God will, I trust, prevail. A large building has been erected for Mr. Strong with a kind of doctrinal basis which may be described as "rationalistic Theism." It is called "The Australian Church." High sounding words, surely, but, unless I am greatly mistaken, the seeds of decay are in its polity. On Sunday morning last I took the round of several representative churches, with a view to note the attendance and character of service.

In Collins-street there are three principal churches. The Scots Church was crowded to the doors, some, no doubt, attracted by the fact that Dr. Marshall Lang was preaching his farewell sermons, prior to return. The Baptist Church (Rev. L. Chapman) was crowded to the doors. The Congregational Church (Dr. Ll. Bevan) was well filled. The Australian Church, which will hold from 1000 to 1200, had about 350 persons present. The ritual is a kind of medley, and the prayers which I heard were remarkable for such expressions as the "pure," the "bright," the "true," and the "beautiful." Certainly the preacher's ideas had nothing in common with the experiences I have described. For the purposes of winning souls, for warfare against sin, or the worship of men and women who know that they have been redeemed by Christ from the guilt and penalty of sin, I should certainly describe the service as a failure. To use an old simile, "It was neither fish, flesh, nor fowl; neither good red-herring." It is only fair to say that Mr. Strong was not preaching that morning. That the movement lacks stability is obvious enough to those who know and believe in the aggressive spirit of the "battle of the Lord."

I return (D.V.) by the Oceania, which leaves this city Friday, May 4. I hope to reach home by June 10, perhaps earlier, as this vessel is one of the fastest of the P. and O. fleet.

"JOB AND HIS FRIENDS."

In these days, when art and immodesty are so closely allied, and many of our noble galleries are to a certain extent marred by such association, it is a treat to visit such a painting as "Job and His Friends," by Mr. John Howes, now on view at 28, Conduit-street, W.

Though as yet but little known, this artist excels in his delineation of attitude, feature, and expression. With wonderful effect has he pourtrayed the emaciated form, covered by an all too ample garment, the hands wasted and bony, the eyes sunken, yet filled with a gleam of light as the patriarch declares, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." Around him sit the three comforters, and behind them stands Elihu, whose thoughtful mien at once suggests the opening words of Job xxxii. 6, 11.

The details, as remarkable as they are numerous, cannot be adequately described; they must be seen and studied, and cannot fail to instruct as well as please.

THE BOYS' BRIGADE.

The London Battalion of the "Boys' Brigade," numbering about 400 in twelve companies, recently had their first annual inspection in some fields placed at their disposal by Mr. Dunlop, of Church Farm, Hendon. The battalion was under the command of Major J. Alexander (late London Scottish Rifle Volunteers), and the inspecting officer was General Sir Donald M. Stewart. The brigade was started five years ago in Glasgow, where it has now enrolled over 3700. The object of the brigade is to promote habits of reverence, discipline, self-respect, and all that tends towards true Christian manliness, military organisation and drill being used as the means of securing the interest of the boys. The brigade is undenominational; various churches and missions (Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Wesleyan, &c.) each form a company, and these are joined in the brigade.

This movement has taken root in various places, such as Edinburgh and Manchester, and in the winter of 1886 St. John's Wood Presbyterian Church was the first in London to start a Company known as No. 1 of the London Battalion, and now there are twelve companies enrolled, with a likelihood of many more joining. To employers of boys for messengers and such like occupation the brigade will prove (as in Glasgow) a useful source for obtaining reliable boys, who have learned the first duty of a soldier—obedience. The president of the London Battalion Council, Mr. H. R. Arthur, of Mayfield, Burton-road, Brondesbury, or the hon. secretary, Mr. J. A. Robson, 4, Lanhill-road, St. Peter's Park, will be happy to answer any inquiries respecting the brigade.

OXFORD.—A very satisfactory feature of Oxford life just now, writes the correspondent of The Baptist, is the increased attention given to missionary work. Week after week, and Sunday night following Sunday night, representatives of various foreign missionary societies have addressed large and appreciative audiences in college halls.

FROM THE LAND OF MOAB.

Mr. William Lethaby, in a letter from Kerak (Kir-Moab), says :—

We are on the far side of the Dead Sea, at the top of the mountain to which Lot and his posterity repaired after the overthrow of the cities of the plain, four days' journey from Jerusalem, even when the road is open. We are living in one of the oldest cities in the world, where, since the Crusaders, no Western couple has resided, and which we were told we must not think of as a possible place of abode!

Before I write a little of the facts of our life and mission here, I wish to make one remark on the common thought that many illustrations of Scripture are far-fetched. As a fact, Farrar, Geikie, Harmer, Thomson, all the writers together, have not conveyed one half of the force of the argument for the old orthodox view as to the age and utmost credibility of the sixty-six books from Genesis to Revelation which a residence in the Holy Land conveys to an occidental. Rather believe that Milton was a New Zealander, or that William the Conqueror was the discoverer of America, than give credence, if you live in Moab, to any of the hypotheses which would make Moses half-way between a dupe, a braggart, and a myth. Try on any of the wild sons of the desert the close-fitting strait waistcoat of nineteenth century agnosticism, and you will soon see how supremely ridiculous they appear. Anything approaching to infidelity is not to be found, I believe, in a single Arab or native of these lands; nor, if he could read, and had the Bible in his hands, could such a thing be possible, when every page speaks to himself, in the most homely of all language, about himself and his forefathers.

In three ways the Lord has given us work to do: (1) For the body; (2) For the mind; (3) For the soul. By the help of a medicine chest sent by kind friends in Frome, and a £5 grant from the Medical Mission Association, through Miss A. R. Butler, we have been able to help literally in thousands of cases; since September 19 (twenty-four weeks of our second year) we have made up medicine, or visited 1062 times, and some of this work has been of the most responsible and difficult character—gunshot wounds, sword cuts, &c.

It is gratifying to old book-lovers and Sunday-school teachers to have the daily tuition of such boys and girls as come to us: with the knowledge of what our "city Arabs" are like, you may form some idea of what it is to teach the unsophisticated, half-civilised Kerak Arab boy or girl; yet, thank God, if friends coming here on an excursion will bring some English children's books, they will hear them read by boys who have gone through two or three reading books already, the last being the Book of Proverbs in English, each word being rendered into Arabic, and in most cases the parts of speech were distinguished.

We are encouraged also to know that some spiritual work has been done. Our special joy is that several copies of the entire Bible have been sold where never one was sold before, and near ninety New Testaments at a reduced price to the children. For more than a twelvemonth we have had an Arabic Sunday-school, after our English fashion, which has been and is being increasingly blessed to ourselves, and, we believe, to those who come—girls in the forenoon and boys in the afternoon.

Oh, there is a grand future here, and it may begin at once if the work is blessed with such labourers as are needed. My most earnest prayer is that right labourers may come, be they Methodists like ourselves, or Salvation Army officers, or Church of England English men and women labourers for Christ, and not for a church or a creed or a conglomerate of ecclesiastical notions. We want medicine; we want reading-books in English and Arabic; we want helpers for ourselves; but, above all, we want "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ," and the prayers of his people that "the burden of Moab" may not be made more burdensome, but that such labourers may enter the field as shall most simply and effectually sow the pure, the blessed seed of God's Gospel for Arabs here and beyond.

CITY MISSIONARIES AT BRIGHTON.

The place of resort chosen this year by the London City Mission for the "annual pic-nic excursion" of their men was Brighton, and at this favourite watering-place some 750 missionaries their wives and friends, spent a pleasant time on Tuesday, last week. The party reached Brighton about ten o'clock, after some couple of hours' ride through beautiful country scenery, which was gazed upon with eager delight by these self-denying labourers for God, who spend their lives amidst squalor and filth, seeking to cheer, comfort, and help the poor sin and sorrow-stricken inhabitants of the slums in the Metropolis. Notwithstanding that the weather was somewhat dull, the visitors thoroughly enjoyed themselves, and found plenty to occupy their time. Amongst the various places of interest visited was the famous "Devil's Dyke," some five and a half miles out of the town; from this eminence a charming view of the surrounding country is obtained, the spectator being able to discern some object in no less than six counties.

At five o'clock the company assembled for tea, beneath the dome of the Royal Pavilion (originally the stables of the royal residence of George IV.), which has a circumference within 20 feet of that of St. Paul's Cathedral. After a bounteous meal had been duly discussed, addresses were given by several local friends.

General Stileman presided, and briefly expressed his warm sympathy with the missionaries in their truly beneficent work. You are engaged, said he, in a great work; you have to teach and to preach; but, to be really successful in it, you must live the Gospel. I pray that God may richly bless each of you, and prosper your efforts to extend his kingdom.

Rev. Edward Storrow, a venerable Congregational minister, said he had intense sympathy with them in their work and knew some of the difficulties they had to encounter as he had himself been a missionary for eighteen years in one of the largest cities of India. He loved the work, and if he were a young man again he would not have the slightest hesitation in choosing his sphere of labour. He counselled them to preach the Gospel faithfully and earnestly, and then they might expect the blessing of God upon their labours. Mr. C. Cox, a missionary in Kentish Town, gave some deeply interesting particulars of work in his district.

Prebendary Snowdon Smith, an aged clergyman, wished the London City Mission abundant success in their work, leading souls to the Lord Jesus Christ, which, he said, should be the aim of all true Christians. A great stumbling block to the progress of all Christian enterprises in the present day is the spirit of denominationalism and individuality, and what is wanted is more of the power of the Holy Spirit in our lives.

Rev. J. G. Gregory, incumbent of Emmanuel Church, Hove, one of the most faithful of the evangelical clergymen in the town, heartily welcomed the missionaries to Brighton. He had for some years laboured in London, and had come a good deal into contact with agents of the City Mission, and thanked God from his heart for the work they are doing. He asked them in their prayers not to forget the Brighton Town Mission, which, although only a small child, is doing a valuable work; for along with its grandeur, he said, there is much vice and wickedness in this town. He hoped they would return to their labours from their day's outing at "London-by-the-Sea" refreshed, and with renewed zeal and strength to do their Master's work.

MARINERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

The fortieth annual meeting of the Mariners' Friend Society was recently held in Spencer-place Chapel, Moreland-street, Goswell-road. In the afternoon a Conference was held, at which Rev. W. H. Burton, of Dalston Junction Baptist Chapel, gave an address on "Fishers of Men." Other workers followed, with practical remarks.

Sir R. N. Fowler presided over a public meeting in the evening, when the secretary read the report, which showed that, ashore and afloat, a great deal of good work has been done. Besides Gospel services and temperance meetings, the Society organises relief for the needy, and keeps a number of ships' lending libraries replenished with books. These exertions by no means exhaust the list of useful functions filled by the Society. Miss Hedenström, of the Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home, spoke from personal knowledge of the importance of the work carried on. Addresses were also delivered by Messrs. G. Nokes, J. W. Dellow, G. Broad, and Revs. A. Styleman Herring, H. A. Fletcher, J. S. Poulton, and others.

OUR SHOW-PEOPLE.

Dear Sir,—As there are so many fairs, feasts, and races at this time of the year, may I ask Christian friends in every part of the United Kingdom if they will kindly arrange Gospel temperance amongst the show-people upon the Lord's Day, also in the large travelling shows and circuses? The Hon. Sec. of the Showmen's Temperance Union will be glad to supply a copy of the showmen's temperance paper, The Caravan, and a report of the Mission, by forwarding an address. Much is being said against this wandering class of people, but having travelled amongst them more or less for eight years, I have never seen the ignorance, dirt, and degradation equal to homes I have seen surrounded by Board-schools and mission-rooms.

What the show-people need is more Christian sympathy, and by this means we are, by Divine help, endeavouring to reach every travelling showman in the land. God has indeed blessed this effort to the salvation of many of this wandering people. We have no paid agency, are non-political, and unsectarian.—Yours in service,

E. Millington, Hon. Sec.

Lazerthorpe-grove, York.

OUR NATIONAL OPIUM TRADE.—On Tuesday, May 15, Rev. Goodeve Mabbs lectured at the Friends' Meeting House, Redland, Bristol. At the close a resolution condemning the trade was unanimously adopted. At a meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society, held at Bristol on May 16, after the missionary from China had referred to the evil done by this hateful trade, the Chairman, Mr. Jonathan Evans, J.P., strongly condemned the traffic in terms which elicited cries of "Shame" from a large audience.

YOUNG WOMEN AT THE EXHIBITIONS.—Miss Gough, Restaurant Branch of the Y.W.C.A., 14, John-street, Bedford-row, W.C., writes:—In reference to my letter last week about the Home for the young women employed in the Exhibitions, I am happy to state that four generous friends have promised £25 each. We are, therefore, very anxious to ensure, as soon as possible, the remaining £100, as the house is already chosen, and we are only waiting for the money to complete the necessary arrangements. It is most important to open the Home without delay.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN ITALY.—An arrangement has recently been made by me with Dr. Antonio Beltrami (evangelist of the Free Christian Church in Pisa), to give a course of lectures in the large hall, belonging to my schools in Pisa, with the special object of calling attention to the religion of Christ, as distinguished from that of the Church of Rome. At each lecture there has been a goodly number of young men—just the class desired. At Cisanello, on Monday evenings, my boys' school-room is well filled with country folk and their children, and an eager desire is shown to attend the meetings of Dr. Beltrami. S. H. Carruthers.

AMERICAN NOTES.

[From our Special Correspondent.]

The American Sunday-school Union is a powerful evangeliser in the remote regions of this land. As the Y.M.C.A. seeks the moral and spiritual good of young men, so the Sunday-School Union embraces in its kindly arms the children. Its salutary ministry is, however, felt in whole families, and parents have in numberless instances received the knowledge of salvation by its instrumentality. During the past year the Union, through its missionaries, organised 1052 Sunday-schools, with a corps of 6326 teachers. The children enrolled (not all little ones either) number 54,129. Of Bibles and Testaments 16,870 have been distributed, 31,666 visits have been made to families, and 9848 evangelistic addresses have been delivered.

The earnest, self-denying agents of the Union are planting Sunday-schools in distant States and territories, keeping pace with the march of emigration. A specimen of the work aimed at is seen in the following extract from a private letter just received from one of these itinerant missionaries: "I have been on this field about three months, and have worked in some forty evangelistic meetings. Have also organised six schools, and visited several others. Last Sunday I reorganised three schools, gave three Bible-readings, and travelled with my pony thirty-three miles. I slept in a little log house of two rooms, where a family of five lived, and where from my bed I could see the stars through numberless openings in the roof. Recently on driving a distance of twenty-five miles through a heavy rain to my appointment, not being familiar with the road, I went astray. I called at a house to inquire the way, and found there a man very sick. After talking to him of salvation, and prayer, his wife said, 'It was, no doubt, the Lord who sent you here.'" I give this extract in order to illustrate the mettle of these pioneers, and to indicate the grand work of the American Sunday-school Union, now in its sixty-fourth year of existence.

The American Bible Society has just held its seventy-second anniversary. It has been a year of remarkable success. The Board announces the completion of Dr. Hepburn's version of the Old Testament in the Japanese language. What a labour of love is this! The Society published during the year from the Bible House in New York, and in foreign lands, 1,504,647 volumes, comprising 420,242 Bibles; 661,373 New Testaments, and 423,032 portions of the Scriptures. Total publications of the Society to date 49,829,543 volumes.

Floating straws indicate the current. One of the lesser cities of New England proposes to build a one hundred thousand dollar theatre. When first mooted thirty years ago to provide such a house of amusement, the public frowned upon the idea, and the newspapers were filled with protests. This objection to a theatre was charged to the Calvinism or Puritanism which permeated the community. By an editorial of that city's chief paper we are now informed that the condition of affairs has wholly changed; the community and newspapers welcome the enterprise. From personal knowledge we believe this city to be far above the average in morals, culture, and religion. But because Calvinism and the Puritanic spirit has been supplanted by more liberalistic views, behold one of the results! Nevertheless, there are faithful evangelical preachers, and godly persons among her citizens who decry the coming evils. More of the intrepid and righteous Puritanism is however needed.

New York has had some very startling revelations, tragedies, and scandals of late. Meantime there is more earnest aggressive Christian work done in the city to-day than ever before in her history. Missions are constantly multiplying. Brave defenders of the faith are crying aloud. Many teachers are exalting the Lord and giving emphasis to the doctrine of the Cross. Conversions are numerous. The Word of God is diffusive as salt in the midst of corruption, shining as light in the intensifying darkness, smiting as a sword some of the gigantic evils. Anthony Comstock is closing doors of iniquity, while the Y.M.C.A. is seeking to allure young men from habitations of vice.

THE PEACE SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of this Society was held on Tuesday evening, last week, in the Finsbury Congregational Chapel, Finsbury-circus, Mr. Arthur Pease presiding over a large attendance. Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., who with one exception has always been present at the annual meetings of the Society, was absent through ill-health, but in a letter regretting his inability to attend, he said that he still believed the cause of peace to be "the cause of reason, of justice, of humanity, and of religion."

Special prominence was given in the report to the journey of the Secretary last autumn through the United States, in order to promote the success of a movement for the adoption of a permanent Treaty of International Arbitration between the United States and Great Britain. There is reason to hope that, after the ensuing Presidential election, this project may be favourably entertained by the Government and people of the United States, and then be offered to the British nation for its acceptance.

In a thoroughly sympathetic address the chairman directed attention to the present military state of Europe. He supposed that Russia, Germany, and France had the power to bring something like three million armed men into the field. Did that point towards the preservation of peace in Europe? It has been stated that France is so developing her military establishments that Germany will soon be obliged to declare war for fear that France should be in a better state to fight than herself. Indeed, the armies of France, Russia, and Germany are all provoking a tendency to war. It also appears that whilst the expenses of the standing armies of Europe and the war debt is annually nearly 400 millions, the annual military expenses of America are only about 20 millions. In the United States they have a policy which had been successful in something like sixty important cases—that of arbitration—and he had only recently heard that President Cleveland's arbitration between Costa Rica and Nicaragua had proved a complete success.

Mr. Halley Stewart, M.P., in moving a resolution in favour of a permanent Treaty of Arbitration between the United States and the United Kingdom, said that all the wars in which England had hitherto engaged had been wars of monarchs, statesmen, the House of Commons, and the House of Lords. Since the democracy of England has come into its inheritance, there has been no war, and he prayed God that the people of this country may be awakened by societies like the Peace Society to a sense of their great responsibility. Should any war in future take place, the responsibility will rest upon the people of England. For that reason endeavours must be made to educate the people of England, and he believed they were being educated.

Rev. Newman Hall, in seconding the resolution, maintained that the Christian Church ought to be the one and all-sufficient Peace Society. Every building for Christian worship should be a temple of peace, every minister should be a herald of peace, and every church member should be a priest and an example of peace; and if only the Church of God had done her duty, there would be no need for a separate Peace Society. If the Christian Church had done her duty, and if, from the archbishops, and bishops, and the humblest local preacher in the country, from cathedral and conventicle, the right protests had been uttered, he did not believe that there would have been a Crimean War, and he was quite sure that there would have been no Chinese, Zulu, or Soudan Wars. It was because the Christian Church did not speak out and use her legitimate influence that those terrible wars, which very few people were now disposed to defend, had taken place. The resolution was carried unanimously.

The Dean of Manchester moved a resolution condemning the recent attempt of alarmists to create a panic in the matter of the National Defences. He declared his belief that the cause of peace is the cause of righteousness, of justice, and of goodness all round, and "the effect of righteousness," for churches not less than for the souls of men, is "quietness and assurance for ever." Mr. Thomas Snape seconded the resolution, which was supported by Mr. Coffin, a citizen of the United States, and heartily agreed to.

FRIENDLESS GIRLS IN PETERSBURG.

A home for Friendless Girls of all nationalities has for some time been established in St. Petersburg, mainly through the instrumentality of two Christian ladies, who not only care for the spiritual and temporal welfare of those in the Home, but in a great measure support it by their earnings. During the past year about thirty girls, Swedish, Polish, Flemish, and Russian, passed through the Home; for many of whom situations were procured, and help of various kinds given. The ladies in charge had also the joy of seeing several of the girls brought to a knowledge of the Saviour, and made new creatures in Christ Jesus.

Mdlle. Grundberg is very anxious to extend the operations of the Home, by adding a cooking-school, classes for the practical teaching of washing, dressing, &c., and if possible a Home for Governesses. (Miss) J. A. Mill.

Newton Villa, Kirriemuir, N.B.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRISTIAN UNITY was strikingly exemplified at the Good Friday services held at St. Andrew's Church, Pittsburg, Pa. Eleven ministers sat within the chancel, six of whom were of various denominations, five being Episcopalian. Seven of the ministers spoke, and others conducted parts of the service.

ANTI-INFIDEL LITERATURE FOR CEYLON.—Rev. Henry Gunasékara, of the Church Missionary Society, Kandy, sends an appeal for tracts and pamphlets suitable for atheists and infidels. They can be very usefully distributed, he says, amongst the educated Singhalese youths, who are Buddhists, and practically atheists. They will more gladly read a tract in English than in Singhalese.

GIFTS AND THEIR CONSECRATION.—There are a great many "good Christians" who have persuaded themselves that they have no "gifts" with which to do spiritual work for the Master. Every series of evangelistic meetings demonstrates the utter fallacy of this position, since as one of the outcomes of such meetings scores of silent and inactive Christians find out that they have great gifts for service, and great joy in using them. It is not gifts that are lacking, but the consecration of them.—Words and Weapons.

THE ANTI-SLAVERY AND ABORIGINES' PROTECTION SOCIETIES held a combined meeting a few days ago, at which statements were made forecasting the probable fusion of the two organisations, whose objects are mainly identical. The recent decease of Mr. Chesson, secretary of the Aborigines' Protection Society was referred to as a very sad loss. While rejoicing at the gradual extinction of slavery in the island of Cuba, and at the passing of an Act of Emancipation by the Legislature of Brazil, whereby a million of bondsmen are likely soon to receive unconditional freedom, the meeting deplored the increase in the slave trade in Eastern and Central Africa.

THE FRIENDS' YEARLY MEETING.

In past times the Yearly Meeting was very different from what it is to-day. Then the Friends legislated and cared for themselves chiefly in a religious sense, though interested in the moral and social welfare of others. Now, while they sustain the same wide interest in the good of men, they are growing into an evangelistic body of Christians, and their altered feeling is manifested in the annual gathering. This gathering is perhaps unique in its deep religious, and social, and almost family character, carrying with it an immeasurable influence for good in its widest sense.

The Yearly Meeting proper is preceded by three meetings of the ministers, elders, and overseers of the church. These began on Monday, May 21, and were not only well attended, but deeply interesting occasions. Henry Stanley Newman was there finally accredited to pursue his mission of Gospel love in America. The need of devout daily family worship and the right culture of children were earnestly expressed. The certificates of ministers from abroad too were read, and their movements indicated as far as possible. At the Yearly Meeting are friends from Canada, the United States, Mount Lebanon, Australia, and Dublin, and the variety of interests that are represented and that cluster round it is almost endless. The young men's and young women's Christian Fellowship Unions held their annual meetings, which have been especially good this year.

The Missionary Helpers' Union annual meeting, on Friday, the 25th, was the largest and best yet held. Henry E. Clarke and Mrs. Brown, from Madagascar, Doctor and Mrs. Wilson, from China, Maria Feltham, and Dr. Bashara Manasseh, from Mount Lebanon, and J. H. Williams, from India, addressed the assembled Friends. At Bunhill Fields, owing to the growth of the adult school, the accommodation has to be enlarged, and on Saturday morning at the usual breakfast meeting, where Arthur Pease occupied the chair, and Henry S. Newman gave an able and stirring address on the adaptability of Friends' principles to the needs of men, Joseph Bevan Braithwaite, Jun., informed us that the £4000, needed for the enlargement was almost complete and that soon they could accommodate 1000 men, and hoped to send out detachments to organise new schools over London. The gathering was one of great promise and encouragement.

Contributors to The Friends' Quarterly Examiner, the Tract Association, Friends' Repeal Association, French mission work, and kindred organisations, all look to meet and have good times this year. In addition to these, what may be called the more secular meetings, such as the Friends' Provident Institution, and their joint efforts with others in the Peace movement, have been successfully held.

The Yearly Meeting itself partook of the tone and feeling of its surrounding and subordinate meetings. Hope and harmony prevailed. An increase in its membership and adherents; four new meetings opened; its adult schools increased and enlarged; home and foreign mission work extending, could not but awake feelings of gratitude to God, and anticipations of better times to come. This year the marriage rules have been simplified for the encouragement of Friends and others to use its simple and beautiful form. Australian Friends have been helped in the education of their young, and in building a new meeting-house in Auckland. The Licensing Clauses of the Local Government Bill and Licensed Sin in India have been petitioned against. Leave has been given to hold the annual meeting of the Adult-School Union in London during next Yearly Meeting, and the Home Mission Committee has been re-appointed for the sustenance and spread of Gospel meetings and evangelistic work in England. While we write, an enthusiastic Foreign Mission meeting is being held, with a crowded audience.

To-morrow (Tuesday) the question of crowning interest is to be discussed in a joint meeting of men and women Friends, viz., "The Indiana Declaration of Faith." We anticipate a solid and large-hearted discussion of great principles, in a liberal spirit, and with the kindest consideration for differences of judgment. The result we cannot forecast.

In the women's Yearly Meeting which has been well-attended and heartily united, the work of village evangelisation had a prominent place, and Bible study was strongly recommended. One of the most interesting features of the yearly meeting is the 9 o'clock Devotional meeting, held every morning, and intended more especially for the young. Doubtless much blessing is the outcome of these outpourings of the heart for best benedictions on all. The feeling of Friends with regard to this yearly meeting is that, so far, it has been the most hopeful for years, and the judgment has been expressed that the tide has turned towards prosperity and growth.

That there are contras is certain; and, perhaps, after the meeting has concluded its sittings, and results are better known, we shall be better able to indicate the lines on which growth and prosperity may be found, and weakness and decadence avoided or overcome.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

The one hundred and sixteenth annual meeting of the Christian Community was held on Monday evening, at Exeter Hall, Mr. F. A. Bevan, treasurer, presiding over a goodly attendance of supporters and friends.

An encouraging report was presented by Mr. J. Atkinson, secretary. The members of the Community number 337, and in workhouses, casual wards, lodging-houses, and mission halls the Gospel has been periodically proclaimed. The audiences have been cheering, and there have been many evidences of good being done. In the open air also much Christian testimony has been borne, and the preachers have met with no opposition. Some 321,884 meals were given away last year, and 159,937 tracts distributed.

The Chairman delivered an address full of sympathy with the work of the organisation. He emphasised the importance of the voluntary character of the efforts put forth, and maintained that evangelising casuals and other outcasts is an eminently Christ-like thing. Rev. Dr. Tyler spoke of the real value of the work, being followed by Rev. John Bond, who referred to the interesting history of the Community since its origin among the Huguenots in France.

Rev. T. Eynon Davies enlarged upon the spiritual advantage reaped by those who engage in such work as the Community promotes; and Rev. Peter Thompson touched upon the same point. The latter speaker referred to the fact that the Community was instituted under the patronage of John Wesley. He also claimed to be himself engaged in very similar work, and spoke of the many encouragements which he and his helpers continually met with. It gave him pleasure to refer to the voluntary nature of the efforts, and he asked why Christian people who have means of subsistence and resources at their disposal do not in larger numbers consecrate themselves and their talents to the work of the Gospel. He eulogised the Community, and wished its labourers continued and increased success and blessing.

THE BEST WAY to understand the Bible is to begin to put into practice those things which we do understand. If you want to know what faith is, just begin to walk by faith; if you want to know what repentance is, begin to give God's thoughts of you a place in your heart, instead of your thoughts about yourself.—Words and Weapons.

PROTESTANT COMMEMORATIONS.

On Monday last a series of meetings, by way of commemorating the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588 and the accession of the Protestant dynasty in 1688, was inaugurated in London by a conversazione at the National Club, Whitehall. Lieutenant-Colonel Sandys, M.P., presided, and there was a numerous attendance.

The chairman announced that there were representatives present from Canada and Australia. In the course of some allusions to the destruction of the Armada, he said that while the English sailors gallantly commenced the action, it was by an interposition of Providence that the Spanish fleet was destroyed, and it is desired to bring this fact home to the minds of the people.

Mr. A. Guinness, in a comprehensive statement, maintained that it is impossible to eliminate either politics or religion from the commemoration. He declared the object of the moment to be nothing less than to awaken the spirit of Protestantism, and to counteract the Romanising tendencies of the age.

Lord Robert Montagu warmly asserted that the party promoting this movement is in a minority. The aristocrats have all accepted Lady Salisbury's dictum that "Protestantism is vulgar and out of date," and adopted the Protestantism of Lady Salisbury, who went down on her knees to kiss Cardinal Newman's hand. The chief friends the Protestant party now has are amongst the working classes. One would have thought, he said, that the Government would have taken up this commemoration in a proper spirit, and, by showing the Divine interposition in favour of Protestantism, would have convinced the people that Protestantism is right. No one could have supposed, however, that the Government would have had a commemoration of its own, with a Roman Catholic Duke as president, and with a Roman Catholic Lord Mayor to call a meeting in London for their emasculated and eviscerated show, in which nothing was to be said about God, or Queen Elizabeth, or Protestantism. What then is left to talk about? The noble Lord completely disproved the statements of Professor Laughton to the effect that the alleged religious aspect of the Armada was unsupported by history; he quoted Papal as well as Protestant authorities in rebutting the Professor's assertions. In conclusion he urged all true Protestants, feeling the weakness of their minority, to fight bravely against the advance of Roman Catholicism. Commander Key, and Rev. W. Barras also addressed the meeting.

In our next week's issue we hope to give a report of the speeches at the various commemoration meetings.

OBITUARY.

MRS. JOSHUA KAYE.

This lady, formerly well known in the West of England as Miss Pooke, evangelist, died a few days ago at Bridgewater, aged 40. A friend writing in a local paper, says of her:—Mrs. Kaye has been a very successful evangelist, labouring in all parts of the country, very many of her converts are to-day rejoicing in Christ as a consequence of her labours. She was the seventh daughter of a Devonshire farmer, and began to preach soon after her twentieth year. After she settled in Sheffield she opened a large unsectarian Mission Hall, which seats about 1200 people, but she was never able to take much part in this work herself, as she had been a great sufferer for many years. The Lord has seen fit to call her, and her works do follow her.

MR. SPURGEON.—Contrary to expectation, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon was unable, through illness, to leave his home on Sunday last. He is confined to his room and is suffering severely from an attack of rheumatic gout in the knees. His place at the Metropolitan Tabernacle was occupied by his private secretary, Rev. Mr. Harald.

The Book World.

Talks to the Children.

Rev. John Byles, of the Congregational Church, Ealing, has published (2s. 6d. T. F. Unwin) a selection from his Sunday morning talks to the children in his congregation. They are marked by much originality of theme, and freshness of treatment. Poetry, history, "the daily round, the common task," and the teeming world of nature, are all impressed into the preacher's service, to carry home and clinch the truths and lessons of practical Christianity. For educated and intelligent children these talks are admirable reading.

TWO BIOGRAPHIES.

ATHLETE, PROFESSOR, MISSIONARY.

Few men of late have been more widely or more deeply mourned, on leaving the earthly scene, than was the Hon. Ion Keith Falconer when he died at his post in Arabia a little over a year ago. His Memorials have now been given to the world by Rev. R. Sinker, of Cambridge (6s. Geo. Bell & Sons), and they form a biography of singular interest. Mr. Sinker has entered fully into the spirit of his departed friend's life, and has produced a book that ought to stimulate every young man who reads it with the desire to consecrate whatever gift he may possess to the Master whom Mr. Falconer served so zealously and well. His skill as an athlete and a phonographer, his devotion to mission work in East London in connection with Mr. Charrington's Mission, and his self-sacrificing zeal for the evangelisation of the Arabs among whom he elected to settle as a missionary, are all sympathetically described. Whatever Mr. Falconer undertook he accomplished thoroughly, and though he inherited worldly position and plenty of this world's goods, his ambition was to lay all at the feet of Christ. May he have many imitators from his own rank in social life, and may this excellent record help towards that end.

A FREE CHURCH VETERAN.

A very different sort of man, though in many respects highly esteemed for his work's sake, was the late Dr. James Begg, of Edinburgh, the second volume of whose Memoirs has lately been published by Mr. James Gemmell. Dr. Thomas Smith has acted the rôle more of editor than of biographer, and the result is a ponderous book, somewhat in keeping with the quality of the man whose life it records. Those who have the time and the inclination to wade through these 500 odd solid pages, will not fail, however, to note the courageous fidelity of the man to his views of doctrinal truth and of Church polity. This volume begins with the Disruption, when Mr. Begg joined the band who sacrificed position, possessions, and prospects at the shrine of conscience and duty. He took an active part in all the after-controversies of his communion, and it is worthy of mention that he was a prominent figure in the Free Assembly gathering in Inverness, where that Church Council is now once again in session.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Homely Homilies. By Rev. J. B. Figgis, M.A. 1s. Jarrold & Sons. In this pretty little book there are some plain and forceful words on spending, borrowing, paying, giving, saving, and stealing. Sound sense adorns every page, and we trust that many young people will profit by counsels which so thoroughly commend themselves to every-day experience and Christian principles.

Bound in a volume, last year's issues of The Indian Female Evangelist form a useful contribution to missionary literature. Published under the auspices of the Indian Female Normal School of Instruction Society, the book contains a large amount of information on the past and present condition of Indian women, and records the progress of evangelical work amongst them. (2s. Nisbet.)

The Caribbean Confederation. By C. S. Salmon. 1s. 6d. Cassell & Co. Though written primarily with a political object, this book is calculated to greatly interest all who have at heart the welfare of the African races. The author has occupied responsible official posts on the Gold Coast and in the West Indies, and, coming forward, as he does here, as a champion of the political rights of the coloured races, he says many things which have an important bearing on philanthropic endeavours and Christian work.

The Philosophy of Voice. By Charles Lunn. Baillière, Tindall & Cox. If this book had not possessed considerable intrinsic value, it would not have reached a sixth edition. The action of the voice in speech and song is lucidly explained, and practical rules are laid down for self-culture.

The Lost Children (1½d. Partridge) is a narrative of facts which occurred at Grenelle, one of the poor districts of Paris, where the beneficial influence of the McAll Mission has been most deeply felt. It is commended to the English reader by Dr. Horatius Bonar.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

The converted Catholic evangelist, Rev. T. E. Leyden, has been preaching with great effect to crowded houses in the Boston (U.S.) Music Hall on Sabbath afternoons.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been holding a most successful mission at Canning Town in a large marquee. Many have attended these services, and at every meeting numbers have been spoken with personally about their souls, many of whom have trusted the Lord Jesus. Mr. Inglis is now preaching nightly at Cork.

The Chicago Evangelisation Society has been pushing its work. A corps of visitors and inquiry-room workers are continually at work. Two institutes for Bible study have been held the past year, and another is planned. A new building will be erected this summer, and Mr. Moody is expected in the autumn to inaugurate an evangelistic work that will then be kept up permanently.

Hyde Park.—Mr. C. Cook writes :—We have completed our first month of services here, and our workers have been greatly cheered. The singing of the "Old, Old Story" by our large choir and the preaching of the Gospel still attracts thousands. We are greatly encouraged, and are expecting even greater things. On Thursday last week thirty-five were baptized at Hyde Park Hall, confessing their faith in Christ, and a number of young converts are waiting to do so.

Miss Bessie Tyson, who accompanies Rev. G. F. Pentecost, has charge of the children's work, and is wonderfully gifted, holding the attention of the young people to the great truths of the Gospel with a steadiness and clearness which works wonders among them. She is a very careful and conservative teacher, dealing with the utmost thoroughness with those who stay to her after-meetings. She is a new force in this new order of "teaching evangelistic" work.

Camberwell.—Services conducted here by Miss Smith and Miss Bax have been greatly blessed. Among the many who professed conversion was a family—a father, four daughters, and two sons-in-law. At the children's services a little one found peace, and, going home, told her mother, a Roman Catholic, that she had given her heart to Jesus. The mother afterwards attended the meetings, and has now taken the child away from the Roman Catholic school, and is sending her to a Protestant school on Sundays and week-days as well.

Glasgow.—A series of special religious services in connection with the great exhibition now open in Glasgow are to be held on Sabbath evenings in St. Andrew's Hall. They have been arranged by an influential committee representing different denominations and are intended, like a similar series held in Edinburgh during the exhibition there, for the benefit of strangers as well as the resident community. The committee have been successful in securing the help of some of the most distinguished preachers of the day, including Principal Cairns, Dr. Alexander Whyte, Principal Oswald Dykes, and Dr. Matheson of Edinburgh. Dr. Whyte opens the series on Sunday next.

Epsom Races.—On Sunday last various members of the Open-air Mission, and London City Mission, were engaged in preaching the Gospel on the racecourse at Epsom, under the direction of Mr. Kirkham, secretary of the first-named Society They found the Sunday fair, which was recently petitioned against by a number of the inhabitants, in full swing. Surely, some authority exists for suppressing so flagrant a violation of the sanctity of the Lord's Day. But the preachers also report an increased spirit of hearing on the part of the people, and a marvellous diminution of opposition while the message is being delivered. The gipsies were missioned on Sunday evening, and entertained at tea by Miss Alexander on Monday evening.

Mr. Joseph Clarke, of the London Evangelisation Society, has been conducting meetings nightly in various parts of Breconshire during the past four months with marked blessing. Numbers have professed to have found the Saviour, and believers have been strengthened in their faith by Mr. Clarke's earnest addresses. He is now resting before beginning tent work.

Mr. Spencer Walton, who has just concluded a very successful eight days' mission at Blackheath, is about to pay an evangelistic visit to the Cape, returning about November. Should the way be opened he may return there next year, for the purpose of establishing a small Evangelisation Society, with colportage and Bible-carriage work, &c. Prayer is desired for help and guidance.

Mr. G. F. Cook has held a seventeen days' Gospel temperance mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, London. Mr. Cook is an earnest and effective worker, and has nightly held his audiences spell-bound. The scenes from his own life and experience are very touching. The public have shown their appreciation of his work by the large numbers attending his meetings. Over 600 pledges were taken.

Cumberland Hall, Bristol.—Mr. William Forbes has conducted a thirteen days' mission at the Hotwells, Bristol, in the newly-built Cumberland Hall. The meetings were well attended. It is believed that much good has been done among the unsaved, but it is chiefly among the Christians that blessing has been manifest. Mr. William Catlin held a short series of evangelistic services recently at the same place, which was owned of God.

Mr. Geo. C. Needham has closed his year's evangelism throughout the United States with a course of Bible lectures at Springfield, Mass. He will sail for Ireland, after the American summer conferences, to evangelise for some months in his native land. Thereafter he intends visiting missionary work in Continental Europe, and hopes to pay a visit to the Holy Land. Letters will now reach him at his home, Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mass., U.S.A.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey conducted services of song at the young men's meeting in Association Hall, Twenty-third-street, and Fourth-avenue, New York, every Sunday afternoon in May. Large audiences greeted him, and also at the Institute, where he made similar engagements for the Sunday evenings of May. At one of the afternoon meetings, Mr. R. P. Wilder, who was born in India, where his father was a missionary, told of the efforts to establish missions at various places, and of the successful results after much patient work.

Mr. Henry Thorne has concluded a nine days' mission in Carlisle. One feature of interest in connection with the work is the special blessing that has rested upon the members of a particular Bible-class, a large number of them having been brought to Christ. The teacher has worked faithfully among her scholars for long; now the reaping time has come, and sower and reaper rejoice together. Mr. Thorne's afternoon Bible-readings were greatly valued. Physically, Mr. Thorne was very unfit for his work, being much exhausted by his labours in Bristol and Glasgow immediately before coming here, but the power of the Spirit was manifest in the meetings, and many have reason to thank God for the mission.

Mr. Opie Rodway requests prayers for blessing on a series of services at Winstone, a dark village in Gloucestershire, to commence on Saturday. Pray for the salvation of many souls.

A Fortnight's Mission to West-end factory girls will be held in the Shaftesbury Institute from June 3 to 17, inclusive. Week nights at 8, Sundays at 7 p.m., conducted by Ned Wright.

Bridlington Quay.—Rev. W. Hay Aitken will occupy the pulpit of Christ Church, Bridlington Quay, for six weeks from the first Sunday in August. Rev. E. A. Stuart visited this well-known seaside resort last year. and preached at the same church. There is a Gospel ministry at all the churches in the town. All the ministers of the Gospel work in complete harmony.

THE CONFERENCE ON FOREIGN MISSIONS—Calls to united prayer on behalf of the Conference have been sent to the ministers of all churches in this country, and through the religious periodicals to the missions in America. 200,000 copies have been sent out in missionary magazines of the different societies in England, Scotland, and Ireland. Several months ago similar papers were transmitted by the Missionary Societies of Britain and America to all their agents in the mission fields of the whole world.

AN INQUIRY.

Mark iv. 12.—"That seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven." This latter part puzzles us, and if you could clear up the passage we should be much obliged.

TO INTENDING MISSIONARIES.

Sir,—Lest any of your readers should be on the point of starting for Matebeleland, South Africa, I think it well to inform you that I have received information (from a letter dated February 11 last) that the king of that country has forbidden the entrance of any fresh missionaries.

Yours, R. D. Browne.

FACTORY GIRLS' INSTITUTE.

Dear Sir,—We notice in your issue of May 18 an announcement that the above Institute was abandoned. We beg to state that it is not so; it is only removed from the "Welcome Hall," Culloden-street, to a position which is more central to the Girls' Homes—the Mission Hall, Augusta-street, Poplar. The Institute is still conducted by Mrs. Merrell and her helpers. Her address is 12, Plimsoll-street, East India-road, Poplar, E.

THE SALVATION ARMY AND BAPTISM.

Dear Sir,—With reference to the letter signed "A Zenana Missionary," in your issue of May 18, of course the question raised by your correspondent in regard to the baptism of our converts is one on which we can now speak with some authority, having had nearly six years' experience.

We consider that our position is quite as Scriptural as that of Z. M., for (a) we insist on all our converts having the one essential baptism of the Holy Ghost, and (b) Paul himself, though one of the Apostles, and though sent especially to the heathen Gentiles, boldly alleges that he was not sent to baptize, but to preach the Gospel, and thanks God that, though he spent a year and a half in Corinth and had hundreds of converts from idolatry, he scarcely baptized a single one of them.

We have, however, no objection to water baptism. What we do dislike is the controversy that it invariably entails. If Christians in general would only agree among themselves as to how, when, where, and by whom it was to be done, I venture to say that we should willingly adopt the use of it ourselves. But while the churches are torn with internal dissensions regarding infant baptism, immersion, sprinkling, ministerial and lay baptism, we feel that we have as much right to shelve the question as other evangelists.

There is a mistaken notion that among the heathen water baptism prevents the converts from backsliding. I am sure, from careful observation, this is not the case, and know in one district of hundreds who have been formerly baptized, but have since openly returned to heathenism. One leading missionary assured us that he had baptized forty converts, and could not lay his hands on a single one of them, all having relapsed, so far as he was aware, to heathenism.

We have, side by side, baptized and unbaptized soldiers and officers, and we would defy anyone to distinguish the one from the other in all the gifts of the Holy Ghost.

Z. M. is quite mistaken in supposing that our converts escape persecution by not being baptized. I could quote scores of instances to show that the contrary is the case.

Everyone admits that our tests of sincerity are far severer than those employed by any other mission. Not only is no inducement offered in the shape of money, houses, or lands, but our converts are expected to support their officers, attend daily meetings both in the open air and indoors, testify in public, wear uniform, abstain from drink and tobacco, and prove the truth of their professions by the holiness of their lives. Would Z. M. venture to apply these tests to his converts?

Yours faithfully,

F. De Latour Booth-Tucker,

Salvation Army, India.

LICENSED SIN IN INDIA.

Sir,—I am desirous of pointing out that licensed prostitution is not confined to India, but may be found in full operation in such places as Gibraltar and Malta; and of asking, Could not Mr. McLaren's motion on the 5th inst. be made to extend to all places in the British Empire where such legalised vice exists?—Yours truly, P. Putset.

Croft-terrace, Selkirk.

Allow me, as one of the public, and a regular reader of The Christian, to express my hearty approval of the course you have adopted with regard to impurity in India. No greater service can be rendered by the Press than by making public facts which can only be put an end to by public opinion.

I am thankful you take the line you do also respecting the prevention of cruelty to children.

(Archdeacon) D. S. Govett.

Gibraltar, May 22.

Dear Sir,—Noticing the letter signed "H. S. (M.D.)" on the seventh page of your last issue, I feel led to add my testimony to what your correspondent enunciates as to the C. D. Act not paying—putting aside all question of Christianity.

When quartered in 1859 at the Dilkoosha, just outside Lucknow, next to my own regiment—the Commanding Officer of my corps would not sanction the examination of the "bazaar women"; there was no C. D. Act in India then—lay another in which the examination was sanctioned by the C. O., and carried out by the medical officers. The number of men belonging to that regiment in hospital for certain diseases was quite up to the number of cases from my own—thus proving that inspection was not prevention.

To this effect I wrote to The Daily Telegraph a quarter of a century ago, when the question of compulsory examination was mooted, and then strongly inveighed against.—Truly yours, Mangalore.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of the 18th May, in an article headed "Christians versus God," you mention the case of General ——, who doubts Mr. Dyer's statements regarding the working of the C.D. Acts in India.

This is not strange to those who have much Indian experience in mission work. Christian men in that land, so full of heathen abominations, are naturally reluctant to touch these evils, and it is, of course, the policy of all in favour of these C.D. Acts to cover up their working as much as possible.

As a case in point. On my return from India, the other day, I met an old friend, General ——, who had been on military duty at the same station with myself for several years, and yet he did not know that the Acts were in full swing at that station while he was there, until I informed him of the fact, because he had expressed his doubts about the accuracy of Mr. Dyer's statements. I have also found missionaries of considerable experience who were quite ignorant of these Acts, though working their abominations at their very doors. I myself did not appreciate their evil working for some years, though the Lock Hospital was not far from my own mission-house. The well-sounding name, "Contagious Diseases Acts," covers a pit of corruption, and is thus very misleading. Another reason why these Christian gentlemen are so ignorant of this great evil is the fact that the natives even do not like to speak of these things to Christian Europeans for very shame.

After an experience of over twenty-two years, several of which have been devoted to a careful study of the working of these Acts in Burmah, I believe Mr. Dyer's statements to be facts, under rather than over-stated. He has not pointed out to us as yet, so far as I have seen, the tremendous influence to lower moral tone these Acts have upon all who have to do with them in other than a hostile attitude. To touch pitch is to get soiled; to have anything to do with these Acts is to suffer harm. I have known Indian officials to resign Government appointments rather than take duty under these Acts. I have seen so many pure-minded young men coming to India from pure English homes, gradually lowered in moral tone till they have been drawn headlong into the pit of immorality through the influence of these Acts, that I have cause to regard this part of their evil work as among their worst features.

These being the facts, I must confess that the hesitation of Christian men, when once the facts are before them, to join hands with the Master in destroying this gigantic work of the devil is a marvel.

We want more such men as Nathan, John, and the Prophets of old, who are not afraid to denounce evil wherever they meet it, among the high or low. Are we really the salt of the earth? Let us preserve the good and destroy corruption, else we have lost our savour. Christ went down to the lowest depths to save men. If we hesitate to follow, are we one with Him? I see no middle ground.

A Missionary from Burmah.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND IN JAMAICA.

Sir,—I have lately returned from a visit to the West Indies, and, having spent some time in Jamaica, I am anxious to correct a statement which appears in Mr. Froude's new work, and which must, I am sure, have been written under a misapprehension.

He says he "could not find that the Church of England in Jamaica either was at present or had ever been more than the church of the English in Jamaica."

I was there three Sundays, and on two of them I went to the same church that Mr. Froude visited, where the Governor and his family attend regularly, and which is frequented by many of the élite of Kingston, who have suburban residences in the neighbourhood. The church was well filled on both occasions, and my own observation quite confirmed what the rector told me, that (notwithstanding these exceptional circumstances) certainly four-fifths of his congregation are people of colour. He also showed me a list of the subscriptions to his church and missions (of which he has five), and I was surprised to find how large a proportion was contributed by the coloured people themselves.

But I also visited the little health resort of Mandeville, and there, on the Sunday, after morning service, the rector took me round to see the Sunday-school, which is held partly in the church and partly in schoolrooms and other buildings in close proximity to it. He introduced me to thirty-seven classes, at which there were between eight and nine hundred scholars present, all people of colour, of both sexes, and a large proportion of them adults.

Your obedient servant, T. R. Tufnell.

FROM MISS ELLICE HOPKINS.

Dear Sir,—I wish I could persuade some of my fellow-travellers, who may probably spend a few days in Paris on their way to summer resorts, to make an effort to go and see the work carried on by Miss de Broen for seventeen years among the Communists in Belleville, Paris, at 3, Rue Clavel. There, in the East-end of Paris, Miss de Broen and her faithful helpers not only live and preach Christ, but live the Christ-life among the poorest, who we cannot say have rejected Christ since He has never been made known to them in the simplicity and power of the Gospel. What especially strikes them is the reality of the work; the sick are healed in the Medical Mission, orphans are tenderly housed and trained, the aged women, many of them terribly destitute, are gathered into sewing classes. Daily gatherings are held for the tired wayfarers returning from their work, where they may hear of a "rest that remaineth."

On seeing all these works of mercy done without money and without price, even poor Louise Michel with her sore heart, led by the human misery she has witnessed to deny the existence of a God of love, said, "These are not mere words but realities." Entirely laid aside from all work as I am by illness, I should be only too glad if I could strengthen the hands of one who is fighting so brave a battle.

Earnestly thanking the readers of The Christian for their prayers on my behalf,

I remain, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

Percy House, Brighton. Ellice Hopkins.

THE OPIUM CURSE.—One of a party of missionaries of the China Inland Mission who recenly left England, writing home after arrival in China, says:—"There have been experiences decidedly painful, especially during the voyage between Singapore and Hong Kong, when the weather was so rough that all the portholes had to be shut, and the smell of the opium we were conveying from India to China was most overpowering. There is England sending to China opium and missionaries, contradicting each other! The Lord help us as a people to deliver ourselves from this terrible traffic!"

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, June 10.

THE DEMONIAC.—LUKE viii. 26—35.

THE Lord Jesus was manifested, "that He might destroy (or loose) the works of the devil" (1 John iii. 8). One part of the devil's work is to deprive men of liberty. (See our Lord's conversation with the Jews, John viii. 31—36). The demoniac of our lesson was enslaved in body and mind, as the result of Satanic possession. Note what is said of—

(1) THE DEMONS ("devils," ver. 27).—These demons were: (a) Numerous ("Legion,"ver. 30).—Many evil spirits were employed for the destruction of one man. (b) Unclean.—This is seen in their designation (ver. 29), their habitation ("among the tombs —an unclean place. See Num. v. 2), and their choice ("swine"—unclean animals. See Lev. xi. 7). There is an affinity in the unclean for what is unclean. (c) Persevering.—They kept at their awful work for "a long time" (ver. 27). "Other bishops," says Latimer, "may neglect their dioceses, the devil never neglects his." (d) Disobedient.—"Son of God most high" (ver. 28). Comp. the command not to make Him known (Mark iii. 12). The spirit of Satan still works in those who are led by him. (e) Afraid of Jesus.—"Torment me not." It would appear they thought the Saviour was about to anticipate the judgment for which they are reserved (Jude 6; Rev. xx. 10). Comp. "before the time" (Matt. viii. 29). Future punishment appears to have been an awful thing in the judgment of these spirits. (f) Cruel.—"Driven" (ver. 29). Comp. "cutting" (Mark v. 5). Those who cast off the fear of God must not be expected to retain much regard for men (comp. Luke xviii. 2). Satan is compared to "a roaring lion" (1 Peter v. 8), and is described as "a murderer" (John viii. 44). (g) Afraid of pain.—"Torment me not." Comp. "grievously tormented" (Matt. viii. 6). They tormented others, but shrank from being tormented themselves.

(2) THE DEMONIAC.—See here (a) A victim of Satanic influence.—"Had devils." Satan appears to have been permitted in our Lord's day to exercise a hurtful influence over the minds and bodies of men (comp. Eph. ii. 2). (b) A case of long standing. —"Long time" (ver. 27). Comp. "eighteen years" (Luke xiii. 16). A rooted devil is not easily routed. (c) Shamelessness.—"No clothes" (ver. 27). Naked, but not ashamed (comp. Gen. ii. 25, iii. 10). Shamelessness is often shameful. Some love to declare their shame (Jude 13), and some glory in it (Phil. iii. 19). See the counsel of Christ to men degraded by nakedness of soul (Rev. iii. 18). (d) A homeless wanderer, "neither abode in any house." The devil is the enemy of home sanctities. Contrast "go home" (Mark v. 19), and "piety at home" (1 Tim. v. 4). (e) A strange taste.—The man dwelt "in the tombs" (ver. 27). He allied himself with death. In another sense, all Satan's victims have done this (Luke i. 79; Eph. ii. 1). (f) One who had lost his individuality. The devil used his tongue, and spoke with it (ver. 28). Self-control vanishes when Satanic control prevails. (g) A dangerous person (Matt. viii. 28). Comp. Eccles. ix. 18.

(3) THE DELIVERER.—There was a legion of devils, but one Christ was more than a match for them all. Christ spoke with authority ("commanded." Comp. Mark i. 27).

(4) THE DELIVERED MAN (ver. 35).—Note (a) His position, "feet of Jesus." (b) His raiment, "clothed." (Comp. Rev. iii. 5, 18). (c) His mental condition, "right mind." Comp. "came to himself" (Luke xv. 17). (d) His desire, "That he might be with Him" (ver. 38). Comp. Phil. i. 23. (e) His commission, "Return to thine house" (ver. 39). He was indeed "a living epistle."

AN ENGLISH CHAUTAUQUA.—The Sunday School Chronicle hears that a summer meeting of University Extension Students, and others, is to be held in Oxford during the first ten days of August. Lectures are to be delivered, and there will be ample arrangements for the combination of instruction with pleasure. Accommodation for visitors will be obtainable at moderate rates. Dr. J. B. Paton (Congregational Institute, Nottingham), informs our contemporary that upwards of 1000 visitors mav be expected.

Sunday Afternoon, June 10.

JESUS RISEN.

IT is most difficult, probably to us impossible, to harmonise exactly, the four accounts of the Resurrection given in the Gospels. Dr. Arnold has said very wisely that "we should doubtless be able to reconcile, or account for, the present form of the narrative," if we only knew with exactness all that was said and done. There may be something in Mr. Glover's remark: "The blessed confusion of the morning has left its impress on our records." Teachers will probably find help in the following sketch of the events of the resurrection in the order of occurrence, as far as the seemingly entangled accounts will allow.

The entombment occurred a little before sunset on Friday. Very early on Sunday morning there is a great earthquake, the angel descends, rolls away the stone, and sits upon it. Seeing him, the guards faint away in terror. Of the Resurrection itself we know nothing, only that all was done with Divine deliberation and order. The grave-clothes were afterwards seen, folded up and laid apart, and the napkin that bound the head was found laid carefully aside in another place.

Meanwhile, the holy women (Mary Magdalene, Mary, the wife of Cleophas, Salome, the mother of James and John, Johanna, wife of Chusa, Herod's steward, and "other women") are very busy. They had kept Jesus in view from the beginning of his crucifixion, till they saw Him laid in Joseph's tomb. The burial had been very hasty, so they busied themselves preparing spices to complete the embalming as soon as the Sabbath was over. They were probably ignorant of the full provision made for this by Nicodemus. They start very early on Sunday morning. As they hurry along, they are troubled with the question: "Who shall roll us away the stone?" Arriving, they are amazed to find the stone removed. Mary Magdalene, concluding that the tomb has been rifled, and the body stolen, leaves the others to run and tell Peter and John. The women who are left enter the tomb, notice the empty space, and also the angel, as a young man clothed in a long white garment, sitting to the right of the space where Jesus had lain. They are frightened; but the angel quiets them with the words: "He is risen; He is not here; behold the place where they laid Him." He then goes on to quote the Lord's own prophecies of his death and resurrection (vv. 5—7; Mark xvi. 5—7; Luke xxiv. 5—8). They now run back, "with fear and great joy," "to bring his disciples word." In the way Jesus Himself meets them, saying, "All hail" (vv. 8—10).

Meanwhile, Mary has found Peter and John, who both hurry away to the sepulchre (see John xx. 3—10). They by and by return from the garden, deeply pondering all they have seen and heard. Mary, who had returned after them to the garden, is now left there alone, weeping before the sepulchre. Presently she stoops down, looks in, and sees two angels in white. They question her kindly; she replies, and then, turning herself, sees someone standing near. He repeats the angels' question, and she answers in passionate appeal, mistaking Him for the gardener. In reply He simply utters her name, "Mary," to which she answers adoringly, "Rabboni," i.e., "My Master" (John xx. 11—18). Meanwhile, the discomfited guards report to the chief priest; there is a secret gathering of the rulers, and a plot is laid to account for the disappearance of Jesus by perjury (vv. 11—15).

PROOFS OF THE RESURRECTION.—Abundant. Eleven appearances in forty days—to hundreds of people. Jesus touched by disciples, eats with them, and ascends before their eyes. The absurd attempts of enemies to disprove it only strengthen belief. The marvels that follow Pentecost proofs of reigning activity of the Ascended Lord. No event in history so well proved as Christ's resurrection.

TEACHING OF THE RESURRECTION.—That Jesus is the Son of God—that his death is accepted as atonement for man's sin—that He is mighty to save—that his people will conquer death, even as He did. Every Christian's hope rests on Christ's resurrection.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(1) Types of the resurrection.—(a) "Christ is the 'firstfruits of them that sleep.' According to the Levitical law, before the harvest could be gathered the sickle was to be put into the corn, and the 'sheaf of the firstfruits' was to be brought unto the priest, who was to 'wave the sheaf before the Lord.' This sheaf was to be offered on the morrow after the Sabbath, that is, on the Lord's Day, the day on which we celebrate the resurrection of Christ from the dead. What a wondrous figure of the resurrection of Christ! The waving is a sign of life, and He had life from the dead on the day after the Jewish Sabbath. The wave-sheaf, too, was an earnest, or pledge, that the whole field should be reaped, as well as a sample of the harvest." —Pilkington. (b) Observe the snowflakes as they descend in their dazzling whiteness from their home in the wintry sky. Before ever they touch the city streets the brightness of their purity is gone; and before long their beauty is utterly defiled. They are now changed into black, sloppy mud. Shall these rise again? See, the clouds break, the sunbeams shine forth, and the winds come out to help them. Soon the streets are clear and dry; the mud has gone. Where are the snowflakes now? There, up there in the sky; you may see them, if you will, in that white cloud that flits across it. The snowflakes have been drawn up from the earth, separated from all filth and stain; and now they are there in purity and beauty, a loving emblem of the resurrection of sinners saved by grace. (c) "A vase closely sealed was found in a mummy-pit in Egypt by the English traveller Wilkinson, who sent it to the British Muesum. The librarian, having unfortunately broken it, discovered in it a few peas, old, wrinkled, and hard as a stone. The peas were planted carefully under glass on June 4, 1844; and, at the end of thirty days, were seen to spring into life. They had been buried, probably, 3000 years, perhaps since the time of Moses."—Gaussen.

(2) Credibility of the Resurrection.—A servant had dropt his master's silver cup into a vessel full of aqua fortis. The cup was soon dissolved, and the servant thought it was gone for ever. Presently his master came, poured some strong brine into the aqua fortis, and so caused the silver to fall to the bottom of the vessel as a precipitate. This was melted and hammered, till it was restored to its original shape. It is said that a sceptical objector to the resurrection was once convinced of his error and led to acknowledge Christ through this illustration.

(3) The Resurrection an awful truth for all that do wickedly.—Dr. Moffat, the great African missionary, was preaching on the resurrection one day, when Macaba, a chief, notorious for his wickedness, called out:—"What are those words about the dead?—the dead arise!" "Yes," said Dr. Moffat, "all the dead shall arise." "Will my father arise?" "Yes." "Will all the slain in battle arise?" "Yes." Will all that have been killed and eaten by lions and crocodiles arise?" "Yes, and come to judgment." "Hark!" shouted the chief, turning to the warriors; "ye wise men, did your ears ever hear such strange news? Did you ever hear such news as this?" turning to an old man, the wise man of his tribe. "Never!" said the old man. Then, turning to Dr. Moffat, the chief continued: "Father, I love you much; but the words of a resurrection are too great for me. I do not wish to hear about the dead rising again. The dead cannot rise: the dead shall not rise!" "Tell me, why not?" said Dr. Moffat. "I have slain my thousands: shall they arise?" was the only answer.

THE GOSPEL IN CAMP.—Over 1000 militiamen from various parts of Wales and England will be assembled for the annual training at Brecon, South, Wales, by June 4. Every year the camp is visited by Christian young men with tracts and religious papers. Christian periodicals, tracts (illustrated preferred), and Gospel booklets, carriage paid, are earnestly solicited by Mr. J. W. Maskell, Brecon, South Wales.

YOUNG MEN AND MISSIONS.—The second annual meeting of the Glasgow United Y.M.C.A. was held last Wednesday, in the Christian Institute, Bothwell-street, Glasgow. The meeting was addressed by Mr. L. D. Wishard, from the American Colleges, and by Messrs. Cameron and Charteris, from the Congo. Mr. Wishard's address on the extension of the Y.M.C.A.'s to heathen lands was listened to with great attention; and the sketches by Messrs. Cameron and Charteris of African life and character created deep interest. The Society has made good progress in the past year, and we look forward to yet greater blessing in the year to come.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Rock suggests that the princely residences of the Anglican bishops should be utilised by the Church in some other way, such as orphanages, rest houses for over worked city clergymen, or divinity colleges.

The seventh annual meeting of the Church of England Society for Providing Homes for Waifs and Strays was held at Sion College, Lord Stanley, of Preston, presiding. Twenty Homes are now open, the number of children under the care of the Society being 799.

Cambridge is to be the scene of a remarkable episcopal gathering on Monday, June 18. On that day as many of the Bishops, home and foreign, who hail from the banks of the Cam as can be collected together for the purpose, have been invited to meet under the shadow of their alma mater for a conference, at which a variety of interesting questions will be discussed. A parallel conclave of Oxford Bishops may possibly assemble during the summer at the sister University.

A Ladies' Home Mission Union, in connection with the Church Pastoral Aid Society, is being formed. Its objects are: (1) To gain and diffuse information as to the spiritual needs existing in the Home Mission field, and as to the work of the Church Pastoral Aid Society therein; (2) Intercessory prayer on behalf of Home Mission work; (3) Effort for the spiritual good of our home population. An inaugural gathering will be held in the hall of Sion College, Thames Embankment, E.C., on Friday, June 8, at 3 p.m., when the scheme will be fully explained.

PRESBYTERIAN.

There are now four vacant pulpits in London—Regent-square, Belgrave, Highgate, and Canonbury.

Mr. W. Paton, of Swatow, has arrived in England on furlough; and Rev. J. A. B. Cook, of Singapore, is on his way home invalided.

Successful evangelistic services have been held by Messrs. Stark and Robertson, in connection with St. John's Church, Tottenham (Rev. D. Fotheringham's).

Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, of the Somers Town Presbyterian Church, admitted forty-one new members into the fellowship of the Church on Sunday evening last.

Although Dr. Adolph Saphir no longer holds a settled pastorate, in connection with the London Presbytery, his voice, as his health permits, will occasionally be heard in Metropolitan pulpits

Rev. T. J. Meyer, Presbyterian missionary to Jews in London, in the Mission Hall at Whitechapel, on Sunday, April 29, baptized two Jewish men, a German, and a Russian, on the profession of their faith in Jesus Christ.

Mr. Morton, of Caterham, has offered the Free Church of Scotland Foreign Mission Committee to pay the salary of a medical missionary and two native assistants for three years in any part of India, on condition that the Committee take up a new station. This offer has been thankfully accepted by the Free Church; so has a similar offer made to the United Presbyterian Church.

Miss Mann, late of China, has lately delivered several addresses in churches in the Birmingham Presbytery, on foreign missionary work, and her audiences listened with rapt attention as she has told of the need of women missionaries in China, and the success which has attended the labours of agents of the Women's Missionary Association. The interest in missions has been greatly deepened, and increased in the congregations visited, and several new branches, in connection with the Association, have been formed.

SALVATION ARMY.

Quiet and profitable meetings are being held in Kiel, Germany.

New and capacious headquarters have been secured for the American work in the city of New York.

General Booth has made a tour through Switzerland; enthusiastic and successful meetings being held at Zurich, Gressy, &c.

Belderok, the Dutch Socialist leader, well known in Holland, has professed to give his heart and life to God, and is working in the Salvation Army.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth (259, Mare-street, Hackney, E.) has several girls who have passed through her Homes whom she can confidently recommend, and for whom she wishes to find situations.

Captain Alice Veasey has commenced work in Bluefields, Jamaica, and writes:—"From our first night God has been with us in mighty power; our meetings have been crowded, and souls have sought and found salvation."

Although contrary to the letter of the Dutch law, the Salvation Army held its first open air procession in the town of Harlaam last week. Five hundred were present and the Chief Burgomaster and his constables regulated the proceedings.

At Cotmanhay, in the Derby district, work has recently been commenced amidst much opposition. At first, writes Staff-Captain Gilroy, none would come to our meetings, but since then over one hundred have professed salvation, nearly all of whom publicly testify to the power of God. Some of the worst characters in the place have been saved.

The Army has sustained a heavy loss in the sudden death of Colonel Weerisooriye, of India. In Commissioner Booth-Tucker's absence the Colonel was in command of the Army work in India, his devotion to the Saviour's cause and his self-denying efforts to bring salvation to his fellow-countrymen, had made his name a household word both amongst the nations there and in Army circles round the world.

Captain Smart, of Gujarat, has also passed away after a brief illness; he was a devoted soldier of the Cross.

METHODIST.

At Wirksworth a good work has recently been going on. At the services on Whit Sunday several persons professed conversion.

The Brixton-hill Mission Band were at Merton on Whit Monday, and had encouraging meetings at which a number of persons were led to trust in Christ.

The result of the Royal Naval and Military Bazaar at the Hôtel Métropôle has been a receipt of £7229, but this will be largely augmented by sales in the provinces.

Rev. J. M. Thoburn, D.D., the veteran missionary of Calcutta, at the Methodist Episcopal Conference in New York last week, was elected missionary Bishop of India and Malaysia.

Rev. W. Arthur, an ex-President of the Wesleyan Conference, has announced his determination to become a supernumerary. He has been a minister for fifty years, though of late only nominally in full work. Rev. E. Jenkins and Rev. Richard Roberts, also ex-Presidents, have requested a place on the supernumerary list.

The Wesleyans of West Cornwall met in large numbers on Whit Monday in Gwennap Pit. Ever since John Wesley preached here to awe-inspired crowds the Wesleyans of Gwennap have held an annual service. The service which was conducted by Rev. C. J. Black, Redruth, was in every way a success. Glorious weather, and the stirring and hallowed memories of the place, brought together an audience of at least 10,000 people. The ministers and members of the various churches were well represented. After nearly a hundred years the service is as fresh in interest and as largely attended as ever.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Samuel Pearson, of Liverpool, will commence his ministry at Highbury Quadrant Church on Sunday next.

The church at Richmond-hill, Bournemouth, intends to renew its invitation to Rev. J. Ossian Davies to accept the pastorate.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has visited Hope-street Chapel, Hull. His evangelistic services were attended by large numbers, and there have been very encouraging results.

The members of the "Mizpah" Band connected with Robertson-street Congregational Church, St. Leonard's, have commenced their outdoor services on the beach during the summer evenings. These meetings have been much blessed in past years.

It is suggested that next year the Congregational Union should hold its autumnal Assembly at Swansea, the birthplace of Rev. Griffith John, the chairman-elect. Mr. Griffith John is the third chairman which Swansea has given to the Congregational Union of England and Wales.

Rev. W. S. H. Fielden, secretary of the Colonial Missionary Society, left England last week on a visit to the Canadian churches. He will attend the annual assembly of the Congregational Union of Ontario and Quebec at Montreal, on Wednesday next, and other kindred gatherings.

On Tuesday evening a valedictory meeting, in connection with the London Missionary Society, was held in Park Chapel, Crouch End, to take leave of the following missionaries, who are proceeding to Central Africa:—Rev. T. F. Shaw, Mr. A. J. Swann and Mrs. Swann, Rev. Robert Hitch, Dr. C. B. Mather, Mr. W. Draper, and Mr. H. J. E. Hemans and Mrs. Hemans; and of Mr. A. J. Gould and Mrs. Gould, returning to Kuruman.

BAPTIST.

We regret to learn that Mr. Archibald Brown is much prostrated in health, though still preaching on Sundays.

During the ten years' pastorate of Rev. W. H. Burton at Dalston, 1042 persons have been received into membership, and £17,000 have been raised for various objects.

The Bristol Auxiliary of the Baptist Missionary Society during the year just closed raised £1811 10s. 4d. for foreign missions, in addition to £506 4s. for the Ladies' Zenana Mission.

An interesting report reaches us, says The Baptist, of the celebration, at Woolloomooloo, New South Wales, of the pastoral anniversary of Rev. A. J. Clarke, formerly a popular evangelist in this country. Fifty-eight have joined the Church during the year.

Rev. H. E. Stone, on Sunday week, commenced his seventh annual series of open-air services in the Forest Grounds, Nottingham, by permission of the Public Parks Committee. A large company assembled, and listened with close attention to the address.

Rev. C. B. Sawday, pastor of Vernon-square Chapel, King's Cross-road, W.C., will preach farewell sermons at the Agricultural Hall, Upper-street, Islington, next Sunday, and at Vernon-square Chapel the following Sunday. He commences his ministry at Melbourne Hall, Leicester, on Sunday, June 17.

At a large representative meeting in Leicester, on Friday last, Rev. F. B. Meyer was presented by the Mayor with a purse containing a cheque for £400, together with a framed and illuminated address, in recognition of his earnest and self-denying labours in the town during his fourteen years' residence. Addresses were delivered by the Mayor and five Aldermen, and there were also present, the Mayoress, the Town Clerk, seven Common Councillors, and a number of influential gentlemen and ladies.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Irish Colportage Association, in connection with the General Assembly, which has for its object the getting of ladies to do for home mission work what ladies have for some time been doing for zenana missions, has held its first annual meeting. It has already thirty-three colporteurs employed, and is doing excellent service.

During the past week Rev. W. H. Aitken delivered addresses to business men each day in St. George's Hall, Belfast. The meetings were largely attended by the leading merchants of the town, and the addresses were characterised by the preacher's characteristic earnestness and plain speaking.

It is stated that there are in Irish workhouses, or receiving outdoor relief, 1183 adult deaf mutes, and over 300 deaf mute children. There are also many deaf mutes in various parts of the country earning their own living. In order to convey religious instruction to as many as possible of these, a deaf mute has been appointed as a permanent missionary, and has visited Cork, Dublin, Belfast, and other places. A temperance society has been formed at Belfast, a savings bank has been opened, weekly Bible-classes have been established in several towns, and aged and infirm deaf mutes have been visited in their homes in Belfast and Cork.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. William Carey Upton, for thirty-four years pastor of the Baptist Chapel, Beverley.—Pastor L. Nagel, of Neuchâtel, well known throughout and beyond Switzerland, as a faithful minister of the Gospel, a zealous friend of missions, and an earnest advocate of the claims of the young upon Christian affection.—Mrs. Tucker, wife of Rev. John K. Tucker, rector of Pettaugh, Suffolk.—Mr. Thomas Stockwell, of Cheltenham, for many years a quiet witness for Christ, and father of Mr. T. H. Stockwell, editor of The Baptist.—Rev. J. Rees Owen, of Pembroke, a prominent minister of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Connexion.—Rev. Cornwall Smalley, for over twenty years vicar of Thurrock Parva, Essex.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The mantle of the eloquent John B. Gough seems to have fallen, says an American contemporary, on Rev. W. G. Puddefoot.

Mr. R. Coad has been conducting a temperance mission at the Ordsall-lane Temperance Hall, Salford. More than 100 pledges were taken.

The Wesleyan Conference Temperance Committee has forwarded to the Government a general protest against the licensing clauses in the Local Government Bill. The Congregational Union has done likewise.

The chief constable of Edinburgh has reported that some druggists in the city have been carrying on a Sunday trade in methylated spirits. The police are unable to deal with the traffic, from which much physical harm must result.

A memorial numerously signed by members of the Church of England, in favour of the direct veto, and against the transfer of liquor licence revenue to local authorities, has been presented to the Government and members of Parliament.

The Agricultural Department of the C.E.T.S. has obtained permission to place in the police-stations in various counties posters calling attention to the provisions of the Truck Amendment Act, making it illegal to pay wages, in whole or in part, in intoxicants.

Truth loudly complains that a cup of tea at a railway refreshment bar costs more than a glass of beer, although it can be conclusively shown that a cup of tea can be produced for less than a glass of beer. There ought to be at least equality in price between the intoxicants and the non-intoxicants.

Hon. and Rev. E. V. Bligh, writing to The Times with respect to the licensing legislation of the Government, says, "The ratepayers of England are to be congratulated that the proposal to tax them in order to compensate a newly created interest under the Bill appears to be abandoned, if, indeed, it was entertained, and to be impracticable even if it was not."

The new popular automatic machines have been pressed into the service of the temperance cause, and with the support of many eminent persons interested in that movement a company has been started to provide an unlimited supply of pure water for drinking purposes. It is proposed to establish at railway stations and other public places a number of automatic machines for the constant supply of filtered ice water at a charge of one halfpenny.

MARSEILLES.—The Director of the Mission Populaire Evangélique, Pastor Lenoir, of Marseilles, invited the street scavengers and sewer men to a literary and musical soirée on May 14. Gospel addresses were given in the happiest style, and listened to with attention to the very end. A New Testament and some flowers were given to each man.—Le Chrstianisme.

THE BIBLE IN JAPAN.—In February last, a meeting was held in Tokio to celebrate the completion of the Bible in Japanese. The translation was begun in 1872. The British and Foreign Bible Society with the Scottish National Bible Society undertook to bear the expenses of the Old Testament, and the American Bible Society those of the New. The result is very satisfactory; competent judges declare that it can be well compared with the English revised version.—Le Protestant.

THE EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA after receiving Pastor Zimmerman in audience gave him 500 florins for the construction of a new Deaconesses' House. Baron de Vey has just been appointed President of the Hungarian Magnates by the Emperor. The Baron, and also M. de Péchey and M. Tisza, Minister of Finance, are Protestants; the choice therefore is very displeasing to the Roman Catholic clergy. His Majesty has also conferred the order of Francis Joseph on M. Medicus, the oldest Pastor of the church of the Augsbourg Confession.

Forthcoming Meetings.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

Appeals.

MONS. A. BRUNEL, 3, Rue Tanger, Algiers, writes asking for French tracts for distribution among the people.

MRS. TIDMAN, Park-street, Blaenavon, near Pontypool, Mon., appeals for flowers, Gospel texts, books, &c., for visitation work in the hospital of that place.

MRS. PARSONS' ORPHAN HOME, Eastfield House, Walthamstow, is in great need of money to supply the needs of the little ones, rent and taxes also being at present overdue.

MR. WILLIAM MIDWINTER, The Park, Gloucester, asks for tracts, Gospel leaflets, &c., for distribution by a band of working men among the people in a poor parish in that city.

MISS MEREDITH BROWN, writing from the Shaftesbury Institute for Girls, 21, 22, 23, Harrow-street, and 15 and 16, Union-street, Lisson-grove, appeals for cast-off clothing, such as jackets, dresses, stockings, underclothing, &c., for the use of the girls.

POTTER'S BAR BAPTIST CHAPEL.—The centenary of this chapel will be celebrated shortly, when a bazaar will be held to clear off a debt in connection with a recent renovation, and to assist a fund for building a centenary manse. Help will be received by Rev. JESSE DUPEE, pastor; and articles for sale by Mrs. DUPEE, Laurel Villa, Potter's Bar.

EASTBOURNE Y.W.C.A.—Last year "West Down" Boarding House had to provide meals for 125 persons at once, many of whom had to be lodged outside. A second house, adjoining West Down, has been secured, and an appeal is made for funds for the necessary furniture and fittings. This new house gives a ground floor for a restaurant, and space for thirty-nine more beds. Help will be received by the hon. secretary, Miss BELL, Merlin, Eastbourne.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

JAPAN.—Three educated young men lately sailed to conduct evangelistic work in this country. They were sent by Mr. Moody.

INDIA.—Tidings from Kolapoor say that the manifestations of joy on the part of native Christians in seeing Mrs. R. G. Wilder and her daughter among them are simply wonderful. The ladies were absent in America for thirteen years, but Miss Grace Wilder, who was her late father's able assistant in conducting The Missionary Review, still talks Mahratta (or Marathi) like a native.

REV. JAMES SMITH, the venerable minister of the Baptist church, and a missionary in India of forty-five years' service, has been appointed to Simla. His field of work since his return to India last year has been principally in and around Delhi, where he formerly laboured for so many years. He utilises his time by preaching in the bazaars, and giving assistance to Dr. Carey, of the Baptist Mission, and also to the Union Church.

A CHRISTIAN JEWESS.—In the April number of the Réveil d'Israël appears a very touching letter written last November by a young Jewess 19 years of age to a missionary located in an important town in Russia. Some months ago a New Testament fell into her hands, this without any human means has led her to accept the Lord Jesus as the Messiah and her Saviour. She wrote begging the missionary to make some arrangement for her, so that she could be more thoroughly instructed in the way of the Lord. She was willing to give up loving relatives and friends, wealth and social position for the love of Jesus.—Le Journal Réligieux.

REV. J. TINSON WRENFORD,

Vicar of St. Paul's, Newport, Mon.

TO-DAY we have the pleasure of giving to our readers the portrait of a highly honoured and successful servant of God. For the long period of thirty-three years he has ministered in spiritual things with unabated zeal to the congregation of St. Paul's Church, in the thriving South Wales seaport of Newport; while at the same time he has taken a full share in the public religious movements of the time. To many Christian friends throughout the land the name of Rev. J. T. WRENFORD, of Newport, has become a household word.

Having chosen the vocation of a clergyman in the Established Church, Mr. Wrenford was ordained in 1849 to the junior curacy of St. Mary's, Cardiff. This was a large and populous parish, affording a wide sphere of varied effort, and the young curate went to work with a will. His post was no sinecure. With the full approval of the vicar (Rev. W. L. Morgan, afterwards Canon of Llandaff) he commenced additional services and cottage meetings, and did plenty of pastoral visitation. Not forgetting the material needs of his charge, he started a penny bank—one of the first in the kingdom—clothing club, &c. Being admitted to "full orders" the following year, he was promoted to the senior curacy of the parish, with that of Roath attached, and found an enlarged sphere for his activities. The late Bishop of Llandaff, Dr. Ollivant, manifested a warm interest in the labours of the young clergyman, and a mutual attachment was formed which continued till the good Bishop's death in 1883.

In 1855 Mr. Wrenford was offered the incumbency of St. Paul's, Newport, which, after due consideration, and with a strong sense of responsibility, he accepted. His first sermon to his new flock was on the apostolic confession, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," and he was not slow in proving his faith by his works. All kinds of parochial agencies were set on foot, and a band of earnest helpers rallied round him. The usual church services were supplemented by Bible-classes, open-air services, lectures to artisans, reading-room, library, and so forth. In short, no stone was left unturned in order to influence the people for good, and help them in the daily struggle of life. It may be mentioned here that in 1864, with the help of Christians of other denominations, an industrial rescue home for penitents was established, which has been the means of reclaiming many from an evil and miserable life.

Mr. Wrenford was not one of those who magnify good works at the expense of faith. He was strongly evangelical in doctrine, and taught a full, simple Gospel. And yet there was a lack in his personal experience that marred an otherwise joyful service. In "All for Jesus," one of the many excellent and practical booklets that Mr. Wrenford has written, he tells the story of this crisis in his spiritual history. He there describes how, after much mental conflict and distress at the want of happy certainty in his religious life, he was led to a definite, personal and unreserved surrender of himself to Jesus Christ. The result may be briefly told in his own words:—

> I rose from my knees rejoicing. "Jesus is mine," I could exclaim, "and I am his." The uncertainty was gone. The doubts and fears had departed. I had passed beyond mere "hoping" and "trusting," — at last, but surely. And now it was as though Jesus Himself were speaking to my soul, and I could hear his voice. I found I had, now, that "peace" which "passeth all understanding," and that "joy" which is "unspeakable and full of glory." Ever since that day I have been living a new life. "All for Jesus," is my daily, almost hourly, cry! and Jesus is so precious! I cannot describe the sweetness of his presence and fellowship. It is so real, so constant, so sustaining to the soul.

In a postscript to the latest issue of this little book Mr. Wrenford thus speaks of the immediate outcome of the access of spiritual vitality that came to him in that new era of his life:—

> The day upon which the Lord "lit up my life" was Saturday, February 11, 1871. I asked Him to set his seal upon his work in myself by blessing other souls on the morrow. He did so. Next day I preached to my people the same truth He had so graciously blessed to myself; and that very night anxious ones were led to Christ. From that day to this the work has gone on. Hundreds, yea, thousands of souls have since then, I have every reason to believe, found peace with God in St. Paul's, to the praise of the glory of his grace.

The blessing of which Mr. Wrenford speaks was not, however, confined to his own congregation. This period of his own reviving synchronised with the outbreak of a work of grace in the town of Newport that is quite noteworthy in the history of such movements. For some months before, a spirit of united prayer for revival had rested on some of the earnest Christians of the place, and the answer was not long deferred. About this time Rev. R. Aitken, the venerable Vicar of Pendeen, Cornwall, was conducting special services in Cardiff, with manifest blessing. Mr. Wrenford invited Mr. Aitken to come to Newport, which he did, and at the close of two weeks' services there was an ingathering of some six hundred converts, connected with nearly all the congregations in the town. These were but the first droppings of the shower. The special effort extended to various chapels in the town. Lord Radstock visited Newport, and was instrumental in fanning the flame of zeal. Later on, Rev. R. Aitken revisited St. Paul's Church, accompanied this time by his two sons, Rev. R. W. Aitken and Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken. Other workers followed, and the place was mightily moved. Writing in August of that year Mr. Wrenford thus sums up the result of the awakening:—

> Most marked and evident has been the result of God's work here upon a large portion of the population. The churches of Christ have indeed been revived. Christians are not now contented with the low level of a bare spiritual existence. The surpassing blessedness of the "higher Christian life" is sought—yes, and realised—by very many. The old condition, so far removed from that to which believers should attain, has become distasteful; and now, from the heart—gladly, gratefully, lovingly—proceeds the cry, "All for Jesus!" Nor can they who have received so much at the hands of the Lord remain inactive. "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" is the cry of many a willing worker; and, in a variety of ways, the desire to be useful finds welcome exercise. And more than, perhaps, at any time before, have Christians discovered that, notwithstanding all minor differences, they can "love one another, with a pure heart, fervently."

To the attainment of this blessed result, the zeal and influence of Mr. Wrenford, as the outcome of his own revived life, were largely owned of God. After a time his abundant labours caused a breakdown in health, and he spent seven months resting or travelling in England and Ireland. In the latter country he received much kindness at the hands of that catholic-hearted man of God, Mr. Henry Bewley, of Dublin. On recovering his health, he conducted Gospel services in several parts of the Green Isle, which were signally owned of God.

A friendship formed in 1873 with the late Frances Ridley Havergal proved to be one of the most pleasant and fruitful incidents of Mr. Wrenford's life. Some correspondence with Miss Havergal was the means of leading her into the same fulness of spiritual enjoyment he had attained. The details of this episode, so deeply interesting to all who value the memory of our gifted Christian poetess, are to be found in a little book, "Such a blessing," written by Mr. Wrenford. In the line of experimental truth his pen has been very busy, and more than a million and a half of his most useful publications have been sent out by Messrs. Partridge & Co.

Always keenly practical, as well as intensely spiritual, Mr. Wrenford has sought in various ways to unite believers in one common purpose for mutual help and endeavour. He initiated the "Union of 'All for Jesus' Disciples," an organisation which now has its members in all parts of the kingdom, as well as in India, China, Australia, America, and the European Continent. He was led also to commence a little association, entitled, "The Morning Watch," for promoting early rising and early communion with God; this has extended its influence, and has been much blessed of God in its outcome. Meanwhile the work of his parish has been diligently pursued in all its varied ramifications. Since 1885 he has held the post of local chaplain to the military troops at Newport Barracks, and he ministers in holy things to the patients of the local infirmary—an honorary work which is much valued.

During the whole course of his ministry, now extending to thirty-eight years, Mr. Wrenford has assiduously cultivated the kindest and most brotherly relations with fellow believers of every name, and this may account, from the human standpoint, for the rich blessing that has rested on his life-work. He is uncompromising in his adherence to Protestant and evangelical doctrine, and does not hesitate to lift up a testimony against the Ritualising and Romanising tendencies of so many of his fellow-churchmen. During Mr. Moody's visits to this country he actively co-operated, as far as circumstances enabled him, in the work of the famous American evangelist. Every movement for the promotion of temperance, personal and social, finds in him a staunch advocate.

In all these plans and activities he has found in his beloved wife a true helpmeet and fellow-worker, during their married life of thirty years. Mrs. Wrenford is superintendent of the girls' Sunday-school; she carries on mothers' meetings and district meetings; sustains a maternal society, and in other ways shows herself a true friend to the poor, and an exemplar of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. We are sure our readers will pray that both pastor and wife may long be spared to expend their consecrated lives for the good of those among whom their lot is cast.

THE LETTER MISSION.—From "Some Incidents in the Letter Mission in 1887" we learn that during last year fifteen correspondents found peace in believing, and two or three backsliders were restored to the joy of their salvation. The Mission has now 106 members, most of whom pray daily for a blessing on the work. Communications should be addressed—The Letter Mission, Clapham, S.W.

LONDON TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.—At the fifteenth annual meeting, held a few days ago, it was stated that every penny of the cost of the building (£56,000) had been paid. Through want of funds only about seventy of the beds can be occupied; it was resolved that efforts should be made to increase the income by £1500 a year, in order that the whole of the beds (120) may be filled. Mr. Handel Cossham, M.P., who presided, held that the results achieved at the Hospital prove that alcohol is not necessary in the treatment of disease. Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., commended the Hospital to generous support, as also did Rev. Jackson Wray, who remarked that he had slowly but definitely changed his views on the drink question, and nothing had surprised him more than to find how many had been influenced by his example as an abstainer.

A VOICE FROM THE GRAVE.

The following letter reached us by the post of Monday morning last. The earnest solicitude it displays for the evangelisation of Central Africa receives a singular addition of pathetic and even tragic interest from the fact that the heart which indited it has now ceased to beat on earth for the woes of the Dark Continent, and the hand that wrote it will write no more. We trust this letter, written only four days before the Bishop's death, will come to the Missionary Conference of next week as a message from the other world, calling upon Christendom to awake and carry the light of the Gospel to that benighted land, which has already claimed the lives of so many devoted servants of God from among all the churches:—

NEAR VICTORIA NYANZA.

Dear Sir,—In The Christian for October 21, 1886, page 18, I see an account of a meeting of the Freedmen's Missions' Aid Society. If you know the address of the secretary of that Society I shall be much obliged if you will very kindly forward this letter to him that he may let me know if that Society will assist me in getting from America Christian African evangelists to work here in this diocese; or if you can let me know who is likely to assist in this way, I shall be very glad if you will give me such information as you can.—I remain, yours truly,

Henry P. Parker, Bishop,
Eastern Equatorial Africa.

MR. CHESSON'S MANTLE.

By the death of Mr. Chesson the Aborigines' Protection Society loses its central figure, its moving force. He it was who made such a profound study of the Blue Books and other records and papers which contained anything affecting the interests of the natives of foreign countries, that he was more fully acquainted with every question concerning the aborigines than the officials of the Colonial or the Foreign Offices. He was, therefore, able to inform members of Parliament so fully and accurately, that by means of such information they have by questions and debates in the House of Commons often prevented the infliction of wrong upon innocent, harmless, and powerless peoples.

At the annual meeting of the Society, as we noted last week, it was stated that the Society would be merged in the Anti-Slavery Society. The objects of the two Societies are so nearly alike that such a course is probably the proper plan to adopt. But it is to be hoped that an effort will be made to secure the services of someone who will undertake the laborious task of reading the many Blue Books and papers, and of discovering the injuries of the aborigines by correspondence as well as from newspapers. This is too great a work to be added to the already fully engaged services of the very useful Secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society. It ought to be the peculiar work of someone, or it may never get done.

It is due alike to the memory of Mr. Chesson, and to the interests of the natives of countries where slavery does not exist, that this should be attended to by the Aborigines' Protection Society before it closes its separate existence.

HOT-HOUSE CHRISTIANS.

Last week's Methodist Times has a trenchant leading article on this subject, based on the recent "District Meetings." Says our contemporary:—

One of the most original and useful speeches was made by Rev. H. J. Sugden in the Newcastle District. He is reported to have said that "he had grown sick of going to appointments, and trying to stroke entirely sanctified people down the back. He wanted to get hold of the people who stand about the streets, and whose notion of a Methodist preacher is a very low one. He wished to get hold of their sympathy, but had been opposed in trying to do so by all the entirely sanctified people in the place. He felt restless with the thought that while we talked things that sounded good, instead of being the friends of publicans and sinners, we gave them the cold shoulder. They have no love for us, for we don't care about them; or, if we do, we somehow fail to show it."

Mr. Sugden speaks like a young man who has swallowed conventional formulæ, and cleared his mind of cant. He lays his finger upon the weak point in modern Church life. At this moment a majority of the people of England go to no place of worship. While we are fiddling and quarrelling about the tune, Rome is burning. The fundamental sin of modern Christianity is its anti-Christian selfishness. Too many church members imagine that the chief duty of Christian ministers is to dance attendance upon them, instead of going forth to seek and to save the lost. The perpetual demand for pastoral services of all sorts is a subtle and deadly form of selfishness.

Instead of whining for ministerial attentions, let them become ministers themselves, first to their own household, and secondly to their neighbours. The modern tendency to exalt the pastor above the evangelist is the greatest of all practical heresies. In the Church founded by the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost, the pastor occupied the lowest place. Apostles, prophets, and evangelists ranked above him. In those glorious days Christians were unselfish, and instead of supposing that the Church existed to strengthen and comfort them, they went forth to strengthen and comfort the perishing. The Church was founded not to protect sickly hot-house Christians from a breath of fresh air; but to evangelise the human race. It is an army to conquer the world and the devil, not an ambulance corps to carry about lazy Christians who ought to walk on their own feet. Every individual Christian ought to be a missionary. We are in great danger of spoiling Christians, by doing too much for them. Our pastoral nurses feed them when they ought to be feeding themselves. We wheel them about in ecclesiastical perambulators when they ought to be strengthening their limbs by vigorous exercise.

A great many Christians are fearfully overfed with services and sermons. They are perpetually devouring the finest of the wheat, and never doing Christian work. Of course they suffer from chronic spiritual dyspepsia. How could it be otherwise? Jesus Christ did not spend his time in listening to sermons and enjoying the means of grace. He went about doing good. He secured his own highest happiness by ceaselessly promoting the happiness of others. It is a terrible delusion to imagine that the world can ever be evangelised by ministers or by lay agents. Every Christian man and every Christian woman must take an active part in the work. On the day of Pentecost they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and they all began to publish the wonderful works of God.

ROME THE REAL BABEL.

Cardinal Manning is reported recently to have spoken of "the confusion and Babel of tongues for the last three hundred years in England," alluding, of course, to the Reformation and its results. It is strange that the Cardinal does not see what a strong argument against his own church he thus puts into the hands of those who follow out the line of thought suggested by his words.

There is no doubt a resemblance between the confusion of tongues at Babel and the ecclesiastical confusion which has resulted from the Reformation; but let the analogy be further carried out, and Protestantism has no reason to be ashamed of the result.

Confusion viewed in itself is, of course, an evil. "God is not a God of confusion" (1 Cor. xiv. 33, R.V.), and the confusion of tongues seems at first sight to have been a sad hindrance to human progress. Nevertheless, God sent it, evil as it was, as a remedy for a greater evil. He sent it to break up the unity of purpose and concentration of energy that man was using against Him in building the God-defying city and Tower of Babel. Let anyone read attentively Gen. xi. 1—9, and the analogy between literal Babel and Rome, the mystical Babylon of Rev. xvii., will appear very manifest.

God's command to man after the Flood had been to "replenish the earth"; this, of course, involved the spreading abroad of mankind, diffusion rather than concentration. Gen. xi. begins with the record of man's disobedience to this command, "They found a plain in the land of Shinar, and dwelt there." The next thing recorded is their mutual encouragement of one another in defying God's purpose of diffusion, by concentrating their energies to build a city and tower, "whose top may reach unto heaven," and they said, "Let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth"—the very thing God purposed for them in order to fulfil his design to replenish the earth.

Such organised rebellion against his clearly expressed will and purpose could not be permitted, and so the confusion of tongues was sent to destroy the unity of their combination against God. "Behold, the people is one, and they have all one language; and this they begin to do: and now nothing will be restrained from them, which they have imagined to do." This God-opposing unity and its possible consequences must be broken up, even at the cost of a confusion of tongues, which, evil as it might be in itself, was, at the least, productive of this good result, "they left off to build the city."

Very similar has been the history of Christendom. Diffusion was the thought impressed by our Lord upon his disciples as to their action when He should leave them: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." "Make disciples of all nations." "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me...unto the uttermost part of the earth."

We have reason to believe that these commands were at first faithfully carried out by the Apostles and their immediate followers, but in the third century a different spirit—that of concentration—began to show itself. Cyprian, "the father of Latin Christianity," as Dean Milman calls him, was the first who organised the Church into a huge ecclesiastical structure, and the mystical city—Rome ecclesiastical—with its mystical tower, whose top should reach to heaven—the Papacy (see Ps. lxxiii. 9, R.V.) then began to concentrate the energies of Christendom to work for the attainment of unity and a name and self-glorification, in the midst of which real Christianity all but died out, until God in his mercy came down at the Reformation, and confounded their God-dishonouring scheme, and broke up their boasted unity, the result of which is the confusion which Cardinal Manning so deplores, but which any intelligent Christian can see has saved us from the far greater evil of the enemy having prevailed to thwart God's purpose of the diffusion of Gospel truth, which during the dark ages of Rome's power, he had so successfully accomplished.

The diffusion of real Christianity, checked for so many centuries, has been one result, and no small one, of Reformation confusion. A missionary Conference is about to be held in London, at which about 100 different societies or agencies are to be represented, differing widely, no doubt, from one another on many points of church order and discipline, and presenting probably to Cardinal Manning's eyes a scene of sad ecclesiastical confusion. Yet may we not reasonably hope that the smallest and weakest of these Protestant agencies has done more to diffuse true Christianity throughout the world by preaching the unadulterated Gospel of the grace of God, than the Church of Rome has done for centuries, seeing that her extending her vast system of baptized paganism is not diffusing Christianity, but something very different, as Rev. xviii. clearly teaches.

Would that England would wake up to her responsibility as a nation, once so highly owned of God in bringing about the Reformation, and would heartily throw her energies into the object God had in confounding the modern Babel—viz., the diffusion of his light and truth throughout the nations of the earth. Viewed in this light, the approaching Missionary Conference is a most appropriate sequel to the late Protestant Commemmorations. H. E. B.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOME.—Mrs. L. Birt, superintendent of this excellent institution, writes:—"I have over ah undred boys and girls, rescued from want, and trained in the Sheltering Home for several months to habits of order, cleanliness, and discipline. They look splendidly; are fat, rosy, and ready to enter upon the country life of a farm. They are looking forward with much expectation to sailing off for the new land, where I hear from my co-worker (Miss Meiklejohn) 'homes are awaiting the wee ones, and situations are ready to be entered upon by the elder ones at once.'" Mrs. Birt further remarks that the Home is badly off for funds just now, but she hopes that by the kindness of friends, the party will soon be able to sail for Canada.

BIRMINGHAM GOSPEL TEMPERANCE UNION.—Five years have gone by since this Mission was organised, and during that period some 2000 meetings have been held directly under its auspices. Almost every religious and philanthropic society in the town has received help from the officials of the Mission; tens of thousands of homes have been visited by the workers, and many thousands of pledges have been enrolled. During last year, 518 meetings were held in connection with the Mission in the locality; during the summer 242 tent meetings were held, with encouraging results. Leaders of other temperance organisations have heartily co-operated with the Mission, whose various agencies, including mothers' meetings and police-court work, are in as active a state as ways and means will allow.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. George Everard, Vicar of Christ Church, Dover.

The many friends in this country of Mr. J. McGranahan will be gratified to hear that he is regaining health, though somewhat slowly, and is again looking forward to working days.

Our readers will find in our announcement columns an extremely interesting programme of services, in connection with the opening of Pastor Frank White's new Tabernacle in Talbot-road, Bayswater. We congratulate Mr. White on the erection of this suitable centre of testimony, and hope he may see it opened free of debt.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's sermon at St. James's Hall, on "The Heroism of Jesus Christ," from the text, "Who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame," was a worthy example of preaching Christ. That kind of preaching brings forth fruit, for "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me."

Next Sunday will be Hospital Sunday in the Metropolis. That admirable movement forcibly exhibits Christianity conjoined with practical philanthropy. It is hoped that the collections in churches and chapels will be substantial, and will afford an encouraging illustration of Christian benevolence. By contributions to this fund, many may "show mercy" on those who, maybe "wounded and half dead," are their "neighbours" in the precise sense of our Lord's parable of the Good Samaritan.

Last year a memorial in favour of religious liberty, prepared by the Evangelical Alliance, was presented to the Czar of Russia. It was referred to the High Procureur of the Holy Synod of the Greek Church, whose reply has just been received, maintaining that Western Christians are not in a position to judge the circumstances of Eastern Christianity. The High Procureur declares that in the Baltic provinces Lutheranism is identified with political projects, and argues that what has been complained of as intolerance is simply a course of action necessary for the defence of the Orthodox Church against the propagandism of sectaries. The explanation is as unsatisfactory as the apology is discreditable. If the Orthodox Church were less desirous of subserving political ends, it might have been more disposed to extend liberty to the much-persecuted Lutherans of the Empire.

The important Conference on Foreign Missions will begin to-morrow (Saturday) evening, when a welcome will be accorded at Exeter Hall to the delegates. The subjects to be discussed are eminently practical. Plans and methods, mistakes and dangers will be considered. No wise man can desire that the Conference should be wholly devotional in form, or that it should be turned aside from the masterly programme laid out. But we may express the hope that the Conference will be preserved from a mechanical tone, and that the spirit of wisdom will continually preside. To this end let prayer ascend from ten thousand closets and households day by day.

A prayer-meeting will be held in Room No. 6, Mildmay Conference Hall, this (Friday) evening at 7 o'clock, to seek for God's blessing and guidance in the Conference.

This Conference will date an era in the history of missions. It is, indeed, an Œcumenical Council of the truest sort; and will give an impetus to missionary enterprise which will have vast results. Amongst other matters, we trust that means will be devised to bring strong pressure to bear on all civilised Governments, and especially on our own, for the purpose of staying the disgraceful sale of drink to native races. We have alluded to this foul blot more than once, but we must reiterate our words until a strong public opinion is aroused, which will make itself felt. As long as the Christian public are apathetic, these monstrous evils will remain. But we all know, from recent experiences, that no Government can resist the determined appeal of the public conscience, when once thoroughly aroused; and who is to educate and lead that conscience but Christian people?

Take these testimonies. Rev. Horace Waller says that "the degradation of the wretched tribes of West Africa has reached a depth that is appalling," and testifies to having seen hundreds of native girls lying in a state of intoxication round the waggons of spirit-sellers. Dr. Clarke, speaking of South Africa, corroborates the statement, but uses the word thousands instead of hundreds. Mr. Moir, of the African Lakes Trading Company, writes:—"I have seen boys and girls of fourteen and fifteen getting their wages in rum." In fact, there are parts of the country in which there is practically no other currency. It is enough to arouse the most placid spirit to read that the merchants of Mauritius send their refuse rum, worthless in any other market, to the recently converted island of Madagascar, and, despite the entreaties of rulers and people, force upon them a trade which has done much to nullify the work of the Christian missionaries. Rev. Henry Duncan's paper on this subject in the Church of Scotland Home and Foreign Mission Record is deserving of attentive perusal; meanwhile, we can but cry, "How long, O Lord, how long!"

We remember that last year, upon the publication of one of those singular anomalies, a "religious novel," some exception was taken to the writer having depicted one or more of his characters, clergymen of the Established Church of England, as entering Roman Catholic Chapels on the Continent and taking part in the Mass. The thing was denounced as incredible and libellous; but, strange to say, our Roman Catholic contemporary, The Tablet, has recently made a complaint in reference to some "Anglican" clergy travelling abroad, adding that they—"enter the Roman Catholic churches, use the holy water, attend Mass every Sunday, join in processions when able, and sing litanies of invocation." Naturally enough our contemporary says that "astonishment and ridicule" are excited by such conduct, and, in reminding the offenders of the Twenty-second Article, &c., urges that Roman doctrines are either true or false, and that the purchase of a ticket to the Continent cannot affect them and render them true in a certain locality to persons who oppose them in another. It would seem probable that the author of the volume to which we have referred wrote from observation, and that he did not go beyond his facts.

There is an interesting article in The Westminster Review on Habitual Drunkenness, by one who has himself been a victim. It places beyond question the fact that dipsomania is really a species of insanity for which the only cure is the most stringent total abstinence, and that to prescribe for its wretched victims nothing more than "moderate drinking" is only a delusion and a snare. Just as the sight of blood is said to awaken all the savage instincts in a wild beast, so the smallest taste of spirituous liquors seems to revive all his terrible cravings in the miserable dipsomaniac. It is hopeless to attempt to eradicate the malady by gradual steps in the direction of temperance; the step, like that of obtaining salvation, must be taken once and for all.

The story of the terrible sufferings of this unfortunate man in his attempts to break loose from the thraldom of his fearful vice is almost as impressive as that of De Quincey in his struggles against the slavery of opium, and we would earnestly commend its perusal to any who still fail to realise what the curse of drink actually is, or are tempted to undervalue the strength of its fatal power over those who have once given way to it.

The judgments of Providence may be slow of execution, but they are none the less certain in their operation. Wrongdoers, be they nations or be they merely individuals, may rest assured that in the end retribution will overtake them. Such, at any rate, appears to be the case as far as the iniquitous opium trade, for which England is unhappily responsible, is concerned. When years ago the Chinese Government wished to relieve its subjects from the temptations of the terrible curse of opium by regulating its importation, they were forcibly prevented on the ground of the heavy loss which would thereby be entailed on the revenues of India. That is to say, we deliberately maintained a tainted source of income by force, without the smallest consideration of the incalculable mischief that was thereby being wrought upon millions of our fellow-creatures. After a time it occurred to the Chinese that if they could not prevent the noxious traffic they would be wise to reap the profits themselves rather then allow them to be absorbed by the foreigner. Accordingly the growth of the poppy was encouraged in China, and from recent statistics it appears that the Indian drug is being gradually but surely driven out of the market. Thus we may congratulate ourselves on having forced this hideous vice upon the Chinese without in the end reaping one penny of profit thereby. It seems as if men would never realise that in national as in private affairs righteousness is the only thing that really "pays" in the end.

The remedying of a neglect sometimes exposes us in England to the danger of rushing to another extreme. Twenty years ago we had done little in the way of systematic and secondary education for girls. Now a lady writes, in Murray's Magazine for June, that the high school programme is spoiling the health of girls, injuring their sight, bringing on nervous complaints and sleeplessness through overwork, and turning out a race of women with narrowed sympathies, and as pitiably incapable of setting about the ordinary business of life as nuns escaped from a convent. This is a heavy indictment, and deserves far more attention than it receives.

"It is almost incredible," says Mr. F. Peek, in his little book, "The Workless, the Worthless, and the Thriftless," "that in wealthy England, at the close of the nineteenth century, so much destitution should exist." A painfully significant commentary upon this is the fact, disclosed by a recent Parliamentary return, that during the year 1887 thirty-two cases of death from starvation, or of death accelerated by privation, occurred in the Metropolitan district. The majority are stated to have been people past the prime of life, whilst some were over seventy-five. These figures only refer to cases which came before a coroner's jury, and there is reason to fear that if all the actual instances could be tabulated, the total would have to be increased. With an elaborate Poor Law system, a network of Christian and philanthropic agencies, and the stupendous wealth of the Metropolis, surely not one of these deaths ought to have occurred.

The correspondent in Rome of The Daily News, in a letter describing the circumstances under which the recent Papal Rescript was issued, says that more than a year ago the Pope received an indirect invitation from the British Government to employ his influence and religious authority, the Government at the same time "holding out hopes of future arrangements." It is to the following passage of the correspondent's statement, however, that we would specially draw attention.

> The Pope still hopes for the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with England, and in the meantime trusts to obtain considerable advantages from the reform of the laws relating to public instruction.

These words, surely, can only refer to that Papal plot (the existence of which was indicated in these columns a few months ago) for securing such an alteration of our elementary education system as will enable Romanist and other denominational schools to receive State support equally with Board Schools. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. Let Parliament and the nation be on the alert against any such subtle proposal.

There are two important historical facts to be remembered in connection with the attempt to discount the religious side of the Armada Tercentary, and it is most desirable they should not be overlooked. On the side of the Spaniards the Duke of Medina declared that the object of the Court of Spain was the restoration of the Catholic Church in England, and the punishment of the heretical Queen and her apostatised subjects. From Rome, Cardinal Allen, in his "Admonition to the Nobility and People of England and Ireland," not only asserted that the war was made "for the execution of his Holiness's sentence," but also declared Queen Elizabeth to be "a heretic, and maintainer of heretics," and that all who took her part were "anathema, and cut off from the unity of Christ's Body." These utterances place the matter beyond dispute.

In some of the more remote parts of the British Empire the treatment meted out by the ruling classes to the native races is unworthy of a Government which calls itself Christian. A recent book, entitled "The Land of the Pink Pearl," written by a late circuit justice in the Bahama Islands, contains a serious indictment against the whites in that colony for their ill-treatment of the black people. These, he says, "are ground down and oppressed in a manner which is a disgrace to British rule." As an instance of the way in which the negroes are made to feel their inferiority, the author states that five coloured men who had the audacity to enter a Methodist chapel by the same door as the white men were turned out, and afterwards fined for brawling. It is further asserted that by the grinding truck system, which is in full operation in the colony, the working man is virtually kept in bondage to his employer. If these statements are true, they reveal a state of things which calls for immediate remedy. Is the old un-Christian theory that "a black man has no rights which a white man need respect" not yet exploded?

It is interesting to note that amid much that is disquieting in Ireland the cause of religion continues, in many places, to prosper. The year 1887 has been one of general prosperity, so far as the Presbyterian Church in the sister island is concerned, the reports which have been prepared for the General Assembly showing that there has been a large increase in membership, in Sunday scholars and teachers, and in charitable contributions. An addition to the total abstinence ranks of over six thousand six hundred members also has been made.

We commend to the attention of our readers a most interesting paper in the June number of Eastward Ho! on the subject of the "Homes for Working Girls in London." The paper is not disfigured by any aiming at effect, but is simply an ably written statement of the objects and aims of the admirable movement and of what has already been done. We trust that those who read the article will not forget that a little practical aid is worth a great deal of mere sympathy. It is important to note that the working girls who find shelter and protection in the existing Homes paid last year no less a sum than £2576 as "rent for bedrooms." It will be seen, therefore, that the movement is not altogether a charitable one, but goes on the excellent and commendable line of helping those who help themselves.

The vast concourse of people which attended the demonstration on Saturday against the Compensation Clauses of the Local Government Bill, their enthusiasm, and orderly behaviour, were a striking evidence of the depth and intensity of popular feeling against the Government proposal. There is no doubt that a change is coming over the views of our countrymen with respect to this question, and that legislators will not be able in the future to do as much for the publicans as in the past. It is most unfortunate that the present conflict is likely to be fought on party lines, and not on the real merits of the case. The question is a national one, and should be treated on broad national grounds. And the settlement, whatever it may be, should be based on those great principles of righteousness which are acknowledged by us all. In any case, it is surely impossible that the country should put into the pockets of gin-sellers and wealthy brewers sums of money that would be grossly disproportionate to the real capital expended; or, indeed, add anything to their ill-gotten gains.

It is impossible to hear without regret of the continued weakness of Mr. Spurgeon, to whom we offer our deep sympathy amid the varied trials through which he is passing. At the same time, we are glad to notice the indomitable courage and resolution which continue to animate him, as evinced in the current number of The Sword and Trowel. Recalling an incident in the early life of Isaac Taylor, in which his mother found him leaning against a mantelpiece, and musing on the many evils which had come upon Christianity, Mr. Spurgeon suggests that had he been living now, he would have had still wider themes for sorrowful reflection.

> What more can Satan do than he has already done? From the lowest foundation to the highest pinnacle he has sought to remove every stone of the temple of truth. Yet we are not inclined to lean much on the mantelpiece, but rather to put more coals on the fire, or use the poker to provoke a greater flame.

May the great preacher be spared for many years to perform this much-needed office.

We can only marvel at the wonderful record of work done during the past year in connection with the China Inland Mission. Though it is one of the youngest societies, yet it has raised as much as £33,717, being an increase of £11,000 over the previous year. And the area covered by the missionaries and native preachers is simply astonishing. What is this but an indication of the express blessing of God on the methods employed? Yet, not a coin has been solicited; not an appeal has in any form been made. Christians have been kept informed of the facts, and taught the joy and blessing that arise from self-denial; and this, by God's providence, has been the result. But take heed how you copy Mr. Hudson Taylor's methods. They are feasible on only one understanding. That the workers be clearly led to them by God, and that all their principles, plans, and undertakings, are submitted to Him, before they are put in practical action. We must work on God's pattern, if we would have God find the stuff.

HOME.

Dr. Pulleine, the new Suffragan Bishop of Penrith, is an addition to the list of teetotal bishops.

In 1882, 384 off licences were refused renewal for no offence by the holder, and without a penny of compensation.

Mr. J. Abbey, 9, Bridge-street, Westminster, will supply, free of charge, notices explaining Clause 4 of the Truck Amendment Act, for posting on church notice boards and other public places in the farming districts.

A public meeting to protest against the licensing clauses was held at the Blackheath Rink Hall. An amendment, which was proposed by a wine merchant and seconded by a Presbyterian minister, was defeated by a large majority.

A novel temperance crusade has been organised at Leamington under the presidency of the Mayor. About a score of temperance workers, who are cyclists, have formed a club in order to promote temperance in the surrounding villages. They ride out together, headed by a bugler; forming their machines into a ring, they have a right good open air meeting.

FOREIGN.

The high licence fee in Pennsylvania is £100, and it is closing hundreds of public-houses.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, Secretary of the London Missionary Society, who has lately returned from a visit to South Africa, urges that young men who have gone wrong should not be sent there, as they would be killed off immediately by drink.

The friends of temperance in Michigan have received a severe and unexpected blow in the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of that State that the Local Option Law is unconstitutional, owing to a defect in its title. Elections had been held in thirty-seven counties, and thirty-five of these were carried for prohibition. Under the decision of the Court all this work is lost, and no remedy can be applied until the next legislature assembles.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XIV.—The Sign of the Covenant.—Gen. xvii.

Three times over in Scripture Abraham is called the friend of God. In that moment of agony, when tidings came to King Jehoshaphat of the great heathen alliance which had been formed against him, he stood in the Temple, and said, "Art not Thou God, who didst drive out the inhabitants of this land, and gavest it to the seed of Abraham, thy friend, for ever?"

And the Apostle James, at the close of his argument about faith and works, tells us that when Abraham believed God, "it was counted to him for righteousness, and he was called the friend of God."

But, better than all, Jehovah Himself uses the title of friendship, and acknowledges the sacred tie between this much-tried spirit and Himself: "Thou Israel art my servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham, my friend."

And it would almost appear as if these two chapters, xvii. and xviii. of Genesis, had been written for this, amongst other things: to show the familiarity and intimacy which existed between the Eternal God and the man who was honoured to be called his friend. As, however, we read them, we must not suppose that there was something altogether exceptional and unique in this marvellous story. Without doubt it is a true record of what happened more than 3000 years ago, but it is surely also intended as a specimen of the way in which the Eternal God is willing to deal with true-hearted saints in all ages. To hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of his saints, God has been all that He was to Abraham, and He is willing to be all that to thee and me.

Let us peruse these ancient lines beneath the flood of light shed on them by our Saviour, when He said: "Henceforth I call you not servants, for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth, but I have called you friends."

The friendship of God is freely offered to us in Jesus Christ our Lord. We cannot merit or deserve it. We cannot establish a prior claim for it. We are simply his bankrupt debtors for ever, wondering at the heights and depths, the lengths and breadths, of the unsearchable riches of his grace. May we not say that one ultimate cause of this friendship is in the yearning of the heart of the Eternal for fellowship? But it must remain for ever a mystery why He should seek it amongst ourselves; the fallen children of Adam; the tenants of bodies of dust; the aphidæ on the tiny leaf, called earth, amidst the forest foliage of the universe.

Surely, if He had so desired it, He might have found, or if He could not find, He might have created, a race more noble, more obedient, more sympathetic than ourselves. Or, at least, He might have secured one which should not cost Him so dearly, demanding of Him the anguish of Gethsemane, and the blood of the cross. So, at least, we are sometimes prone to think. And yet it cannot be. That which is, and has been, must on the whole be the best that could be, since infinite love and wisdom have so ordered it. And perhaps none could be so perfectly the companions and fellows of the Son of God through all the ages as those who know the light, because they have dwelt in the darkness; who know the truth, because they have been ensnared in the meshes of the also; and who can appreciate love, because they have been in the far country, wasting their substance in riotous living, but have been redeemed by his blood.

But what a wondrous destiny there is within our reach! One to which the first-born sons of light might aspire in vain! At the best, they can only be ministers, flames of fire, hearts of love, excelling in strength, hearkening to his word. But we may be the friends of God; sons and daughters of the great King; members of the body of Christ; constituent parts of his Bride, in her peerless beauty and meetness for her spouse. As one writes such words as these the brain almost reels beneath the conception that flashes before it of the blessedness which awaits us, both in this world, and in those ages which rear their heads in the far distance, as lines on lines of snowy breakers rolling in from a sunlit sea.

Oh, friends of God! why do you not make more of your transcendent privileges? Why do you not talk to Him about all that wearies and worries you, as freely as Abraham did, telling Him about your Ishmaels, your Lots, and His dealings? Why do you not fall on your faces while God talks with you (ver. 4)? Life should be one long talk between God and us. No day at least should close without our talking over its history with our patient and loving Lord; entering into his confessional; relieving our hearts of half their sorrow, and all their bitterness, in the act of telling Him all. And if only we get low enough, and be still enough, we shall hear his accents sweet and thrilling, soft and low, opening depths which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, but which He has prepared for those who love and wait for Him.

But there are three conditions to be fulfilled by us if we would enjoy this blessed friendship: Separation, Purity, and Obedience, each of which was set forth in the rite of circumcision, which was given to Abraham for himself and his descendants at this time.

Circumcision seems to have been in vogue among the Egyptians and other nations even before it was taken up and adopted as the seal of the sacred covenant between God and Abraham. It existed previously, but it had never borne the interpretation with which it was now invested; just as the rainbow must have existed before the Flood, but only then was adopted as a sign by the God of Covenant-promise; and just as the immersion of new disciples had been long practised both by the Baptist and the Jews, before our Lord appropriated it and gave it a significance which opened up in it quite fresh depths of meaning and beauty.

We are all of us more or less dependent on outward symbols and signs; and Abraham and his children were no exception to this rule; and it therefore seemed good to God to carve in the flesh of his people an unmistakable reminder and sacrament of that holy relationship into which they had entered. A similar function, in the Christian Church, is met by the ordinances of Believer's Baptism and the Lord's Supper.

The rite of circumcision was rigorously maintained amongst the children of Abraham. Moses was not permitted to undertake his life-work whilst his son was left uncircumcised. Nor were the people allowed to enter Canaan until they had rolled away the reproach of Canaan, and had submitted to this rite on the threshold of the Land of Promise. The sanctity of the Sabbath might at any time be invaded, rather than permit the eighth day of a child's life to pass without the act of circumcision being performed. It is said of the child Jesus "that eight days were fulfilled for circumcising him." Paul noted the fact that in his own life, according to Jewish usage, "he was circumcised the eighth day." And no one could receive benefit through sin-offering or sacrifice who had not passed through this initiatory rite. So strict was the line of demarcation, that the Jew counted the uncircumcised as unclean, and would not eat with them or go into their houses. It was a formidable charge made against the Apostle Peter, on his return to Jerusalem from visiting in the house of Cornelius, "Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them."

It was concerning this matter that controversy waxed so warm in the early Church. The Pharisee party were quite willing for Gentiles to meet with them in Church fellowship, if they were circumcised as Jews, but not otherwise. They went so far as to affirm, "Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses ye cannot be saved." And, not content with affirming this in Antioch and Jerusalem, they sent their emissaries far and wide, especially visiting the churches which had been recently founded by the Apostle Paul's assiduous care, and insisting upon the circumcision of the new converts so soon as he had turned his back.

There was no compromise possible in this matter, and both the Council at Jerusalem and the Apostle Paul, guided by the Spirit of God, made it abundantly clear, both by circular letter and epistle, that circumcision was part of the temporary ritual of Judaism, which was destined to pass away. "If ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing." "In Christ is neither circumcision nor uncircumcision." "In Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything nor uncircumcision, but a new creature." And thus this danger was averted from the Church, which had been in peril of becoming a Jewish institution, a kind of inner circle of the Judaistic commonwealth, but which henceforth became the common meeting-ground for all who loved, trusted, and obeyed the Lord Jesus in sincerity.

At the same time, as in so many other Jewish rites, there was an inner spirit, which passed on into the Christian Church, and is our heritage to-day. St. Paul, the deadly foe of the outward rite, speaks of the circumcision of Christ, and says it is made without human hands, by the direct interposition of his Holy Spirit; and that it consists in "the putting off of the body of the sins of the flesh." Oh, blessed High Priest, this is what we need, take the knife in hand, and, though it cost us blood, make haste to set us free from the dominion of evil, and to constitute us the true circumcision: "For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh."

It is only in proportion as we know the spiritual meaning of circumcision that we can enter into the joyous appropriation of the friendship of God. But if we are willing, our Lord and Saviour is both able and willing to effect in us this blessed spiritual result.

I. Separation.—Abraham and his seed were marked out by this rite as a separated people. And it is only as such that any of us can be admitted into the friendship of God.

Blood-shedding and death, the cross and the grave must lie between us and our own past life; yea, between us and all complicity with evil. The only trysting place for Christ and his followers is outside the camp, where the ground is still freshly trodden by the feet of the exiled king.

There are times when we may be expressly bidden to abide where we were originally called of God; but this will be for special purposes of ministry, and because the darkness needs light, and the carcase requires salt. For the most part the clarion note rings out to all who are wishful to know the sweets of Divine fellowship: "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you."

This was the key to Abraham's life; and is the inner meaning of the rite of circumcision.

II. PURITY.—"Putting away the filthiness of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ." There is hardly a single grace dearer to God than this. To keep lily-white amid the defiling atmosphere. To walk with unspotted garments even in Sardis. To be as sensitive to the taint of impurity as the most delicate nostril to an ill odour. Ah, this is a condition of great price in the sight of God, and one to which He unveils Himself. "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God."

It can only be attained by the special grace of the Holy Spirit, and by our doing two things; first, in turning instantly from paragraphs in papers, or pictures on the walls which excite impure imaginations; secondly, in seeking immediate forgiveness, when we are conscious of having yielded, even for a moment, to this deadly and insidious sin.

III. OBEDIENCE.—For Abraham this rite might have seemed less necessary than for some in his camp. But no sooner was it commanded than it was undergone. "In the self-same day was Abraham circumcised, and Ishmael his son." Does it not remind us of Him, who said: "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." Instant obedience to known duty is an indispensable condition of all intimacy with God; and if the duty be irksome and difficult, then remember to claim all the more of the Divine grace; for there is no duty, to which we are called, for the discharge of which there is not sufficient strength within reach, if only we will put forth our hands to take it.

Of the secrets which shall be revealed; of the delights which shall be experienced; of the blessings which shall accrue to ever widening circles, through the friendship of one man with God, we have not space to speak. This, however, is true, that the soul laughs to itself (ver. 17), not with incredulity, but with the uncontrollable gladness of conscious acceptance and love.

CONTINENTAL SUNDAY-SCHOOLS. — DEAR SIR,—May I invite the attention of your readers to the important work being carried on amongst the young on the Continent of Europe by our Continental Mission. Seventeen missionaries are now labouring under the direction of Local Committees in helping forward Sunday-schools. Their labours are resulting not only in the establishment of many new Sunday-schools, but they are able to report that considerable numbers of the children have been led to give their hearts to the Saviour. I shall be glad to furnish full details to any of your readers who will favour me with application for same.—Yours very truly,

BY REV. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life."

X.—"I HOPE I SHALL."

I WAS taken one day to visit a woman of ninety-two years of age. Truly she was a wonderful specimen of humanity—a fine, tall, upright person, who rose from her chair, and came forward to receive us. She could see and hear as well as most people, and spoke freely of God's goodness towards her and her large family.

A very old-looking man was her son, and another man, who was grey, was her grandson. Besides him, she had many other grandchildren of a later generation.

I asked about her state of soul. She gave me a general answer about trusting the Lord, remarking, "I always trust the Almighty, I've no one else to trust."

I said, "I suppose you do not expect to live ninety-two years longer, do you?"

"Oh, dear no, I hope not," she replied.

"Then, are you ready to go if the Lord should call you?"

"Why, yes," she answered; "I must go then, I suppose."

"Yes, you must," I added; "but are you ready, and do you think you will go to heaven when you die?"

"Oh, certainly," she replied, "I hope so."

"Upon what do you build your hope?" I said. "Are you saved?"

"Saved!" she repeated, looking at me; "no, I cannot say I am saved, but I hope I shall be safe enough when I get to heaven. No one can be saved before that."

"But," I continued, "are your sins forgiven?"

"Sins!" she repeated. "Just think, what sinning can I do now? I have always been upright and straightforward all my life."

The old man, her son, verified this statement, saying, "Yes, indeed; very few are like mother."

"It seems to me," I said, "that you are both alike, and do not know that if your sins are not pardoned before you die they will never be pardoned; and if you die without the forgiveness of your sins it will be impossible for you to go to heaven."

"Well," said the old man, "I can't think like that. The Lord is a great deal too good to serve us so."

I replied, "The Scripture says, there is no repentance in the grave, and no forgiveness there. If I were ninety-two years of age, and my sins were unpardoned and my soul unsaved, I should be in continual fear lest death should come, and I be shut out of heaven altogether."

"I hope better things than that," said the old lady; "I hope I shall go to heaven when I die."

"Yes, indeed," muttered the old man, "I should think so too," for by this time he was getting uncomfortable.

Turning to the old woman, I said, "How long have you been hoping like this?"

"Ever since I was a little girl," she answered. "I was a good girl, I assure you, and grew up accordingly."

"Have you been hoping to go to heaven since you were twelve years old, do you think?"

"Yes," she said, "and earlier than that. I have always had a good hope."

"Then you have been hoping for eighty years, and are not saved yet. What a dreadful thing! Do you not think it is time for you to give up hoping, and take to something else more effectual?"

She looked somewhat alarmed, and said, "I don't know what I should do if I gave up hoping. I should sink."

I could not help saying, "The sooner the better."

"Oh, do not take my hope away," she pleaded; and the old man came forward to plead too. He said, "That's all the comfort we have, sir, to think we shall go to heaven."

"I wish, too, with all my heart," I said, "that you should both go to heaven; but you are not going the right way. You will never get there by hoping. It is by believing in Jesus Christ that you obtain salvation.

"It frightens me," I added, "to think that you old people should be going on so quietly upon the wrong road. You must stop to-night."

After a little pause, I continued, "If I were in your place I should be afraid to go to bed or to sleep, for fear of waking up in hell. I should not even like to sit by that fire, for it would remind me of a worse fire than that."

The old man began to cry; he was evidently alarmed, but his mother did her best to comfort and cheer him.

"We will pray about this matter," I said, "and ask God to show you both whether you are right, or whether I am."

So saying, I knelt down, and began to plead with God, asking Him to awaken and undeceive these souls. I said, "In thy love, O Lord, Thou hast kept them in life so far, now go on to be gracious to their souls, and, by the power of the Holy Ghost, open their eyes, and fit them for the heaven they have so long desired to enter."

The old lady seemed as secure and untouched as ever, so I left, secretly intending to visit them the next morning.

After the evening service the old man came tottering up to me, and asked whether I would come at once and see his mother again. "She is in a bad way, sure enough; I never see'd her like that there in all my life."

I hastened on as fast as the old man could guide me in the dark. On our arrival at the cottage, I found the old lady sitting in the same chair where I had left her. The fire had gone out, and she had not gone to bed.

"What is the matter with you?" I inquired.

She answered, "I'm a-feeling dreadful bad; you frightened me so about the fire—look there, it's out, you see. I daren't go to bed. What shall I do?" Then she began to cry, and her son did the same.

I said, "God loves you both, and sent his Son to shed his blood to wash your sins away, that you might go to heaven; but you are hoping to go to heaven without washing your sins away."

"I do believe Jesus died for me," said the mother.

"I am very glad to hear you say that," I answered. "Now, let us thank Him together for what He has done for you. That will show you believe it in your heart, instead of in your head only."

This mother and son were both ripe to receive the good news of salvation, and had no opposition to offer. Accordingly, they readily found peace, and rejoiced in the pardoning love of God. Notwithstanding their joy, the poor old lady could not forget the danger she had been in for so long "with that hoping."

"Yes," I said, "you were indeed in danger, hoping to get something in another world which you can only receive in this, or perish. Thank God, you have accepted his salvation, and now you may hope as surely as you will. God's hope comes after faith, but the devil tries to put hope before faith, that you may never truly believe in Christ, and consequently perish."

MR. DENHAM SMITH has again improved in his general condition, and is this week somewhat better.

DRURY-LANE WORKING GIRLS' HOUSE AND DAY NURSERY. — The report for last year reviews with much satisfaction the work done. Over fifty girls were received into the House, and 2646 infants into the nursery. The agencies include sewing and cooking classes, club for a young girls, and a temperance society, all of which have been appreciated by those who have used the Home. The Institution is situate at 73, Drury-lane, W.C., and Miss Powell is the superintendent.

The Compensation Agitation.

The great "Anti-Compensation" Demonstration came off on Saturday afternoon, under the most favouring circumstances, and was in every sense a success. As to numbers, it is declared by good authorities to have been equal, if not superior, to any public manifestation of feeling in London since the days of the great Parliamentary Reform movement. Some representatives of the daily papers, in reporting the proceedings, assert that little or no enthusiasm was shown, but we do not think that statement can be upheld. The mere fact of such a vast assemblage coming together on a sweltering hot afternoon indicated deep and enthusiastic conviction. During the course of the long and dusty tramp of the multitude from the Thames Embankment to Hyde Park, there was little opportunity for any outburst of feeling, except the occasional passing of a brewer's dray loaded with the death-dealing barrels; then the views of the crowd were unmistakeably expressed in groans and hooting. The police did all in their power to aid the demonstrators, and the long line of procession passed through London's centre without any unpleasant hitch.

The scene in Hyde Park was very animated, and here there was plenty of enthusiasm. In mingling freely with the dense crowds that surrounded the various platforms, one could not but be struck with the evident unanimity that prevailed. During the speeches, and the passing of the resolutions, there did not appear to be a single dissentient voice raised, and the only difference of opinion was seen when some cautious speaker sought to modify the strongly worded interpolations of the enthusiastic listeners. The speakers included such well-known persons as Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P., Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., Canon Barker, Dr. Dawson Burns, Mr. Joseph Malins, Mr. J. H. Raper, Lord Kinnaird, Mr. F. N. Charrington; and many others scarcely less known. If Mr. Ritchie, M.P., had been present, his ears must have tingled at the many uncomplimentary references to himself as the spokesman of the Government in announcing and defending the compensation clauses that have produced such commotion among the taxpayers of the country. For this demonstration was not simply a total-abstinence one; it was also a protest by the ratepaying community against having such an incubus thrown around its neck, and for such a purpose.

It is not possible for us to reproduce all the arguments used by the large number of speakers, but the gist of them may be summed up in Sir Wilfrid Lawson's observation that Mr. Ritchie's proposition is "one of the most extraordinary, the most astounding, and the most revolting that has ever been laid before the assembly of a free nation; and that, if the people of England do not resist it successfully, it may well be said that all British manliness has departed from this country for ever." Sir Wilfrid poured forth the vials of his satire on the proposal, and said the country must not be led away by the delusive talk of the publican through an extra license paying his own compensation. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes made an undoubtedly strong point when he told how Government employés are frequently dismissed from their situations in dockyards and other places, simply because the economic interests of the country seem to require the reduction of expenditure, yet no one dreams of offering compensation to these unfortunate men. It is only when a powerful body like the publicans is touched that compensation is mooted. A great many of the speakers put forward the claim that if there is to be compensation anywhere, it ought to be given to those who have suffered so much from the evils of the traffic. Mr. Hughes referred to the pertinent fact that in America the traffic has been swept away in many places by popular vote, without a farthing of compensation; but nobody in this country has hitherto declaimed on the iniquity of doing so. Mr. Caine, M.P., spoke very strongly with respect to what he called the "infamous clauses," and declared that if the Government were fools enough to make this a question of confidence, they might fall, so far as he was concerned. If Mr. Caine could induce fifty of his fellow Dissentient Liberal friends (who hold the key of the situation) to take the same decided stand, we should soon hear the last of this matter. Another point was made clear in the course of the speeches—viz., that if the compensation proposals are by any means carried, a powerful agitation will spring up for the repeal of such legislation, and will not cease till repeal is carried.

In his speech Sir Wilfrid Lawson paid a well-deserved tribute of thanks to Mr. F. N. Charrington, who he said has been the real prime mover in this great public protest. Mr. Charrington, we may say, has been nobly seconded in his endeavours by the hon. secretaries, Messrs. J. Hilton, S. Insull, and H. J. Osborn. These secretaries met on Monday morning last, and united in earnest thanksgiving to God for the success vouchsafed to their efforts in carrying out the Demonstration.

LORD RADSTOCK IN VIENNA.

A correspondent, writing to The Christian World, says:—

During the past few weeks, we have been having, in Vienna, a series of religious revival meetings. Lord Radstock has, during a visit to this city, held services in the large hall in the Echenbrachgasse, the meeting-place of the congregation forming the Scotch Free Church here. On two occasions he conducted the usual Sunday morning service, and spoke in English to the British residents in Vienna: but his great work, and, to judge by appearances, his great success, has been the evening meetings, where the services of an interpreter were brought into requisition to convey to a Vienna assembly the loving and very simple truths which Lord Radstock has, on his way from Russia, come to Vienna to teach. On the first evening the large hall was comparatively well filled, but the audience was composed to a great extent of English and Americans, who probably already knew Lord Radstock by name. On the following evenings, however, the Austrian element largely predominated; well-known Catholics, and very many Jews were to be seen, and the attention and quiet worshipful spirit displayed would have put to shame many an English evangelical congregation.

Night after night the same people came again, evidently anxious to hear more of the beautiful doctrine which their churches, Catholic or Jewish, do not teach: more of the loving Saviour, the tender Shepherd, and the Man Christ, the Friend and Helper of all the world—truths upon which Lord Radstock seems never tired of enlarging; and one may hope and believe that much religious awakening and thoughtfulness will follow these services.

It may interest those who in England are complaining of the restrictions imposed upon public meetings in that country, to learn how difficult it is in Austria to hold even a religious public meeting. Permission has first to be got from the chief of the police, and in Lord Radstock's case there threatened to be some difficulty in obtaining this permission, as the request described the meetings as religious services. Now religious or doctrinal services, excepting those licensed by the State, are altogether forbidden here, so at the last moment an official notice was received forbidding the assembly. Rev. F. Gordon saw everybody whose business gave them any authority in the matter, and at last, after much red-tapeism, obtained permission to hold the services, on condition that the meetings were not advertised as religious services, but as "Biblische Vorträge," or Biblical addresses.

A MISSIONARY HYMN.

Jesus, thy last command
We dare not disobey;
To preach thy word in every land,
Is our glad task to-day:
Lord, we and all we have are thine,
To share with Thee this work Divine.

Does not our brother's blood
Cry to Thee from the ground?
And o'er the earth, a mighty flood
Of sin and death abound?
And can we ever guiltless be,
Unless we rise and work with Thee?

O'er all earth's broad domain,
On every heathen shore,
We see thy finger, pointing plain
To each wide-open door;
And if we turn our eyes away,
Lord, wilt Thou own us in that day?

From India's peopled plains,
From Afric's teeming throngs,
From China's millions, come the strains
Of saddest, deepest wrongs;
Japan, and islands of the sea,
Lift up their voice, and cry to Thee!

And from thine ancient land,
From Jews and Gentiles all,
Crushed 'neath the Moslem's iron hand,
We hear the same sad call:
And if we shut our ears to-day,
Lord, when we meet, what wilt Thou say?

Baptize with holy fire
Each heart before Thee now!
Kindle fresh zeal and new desire:
With life our souls endow!
Then shall thy Church arise and shine,
And earth rejoice in power Divine.

REV. W. H. AITKEN IN BELFAST.

This eminent mission preacher opened a six weeks' mission in Belfast on April 23. He conducted services for one week at each of the four principal churches in town, with much success. God in a wonderful way bore testimony to the simple and faithful preaching of his word, and souls were nightly won for Jesus. The services during the last two weeks were held in the Ulster Hall—the largest public building in the town. Great congregations gathered to hear the message of love, and as the mission drew to a close the building was literally packed. It would not be possible to give an adequate idea of the blessed results. The power of Christ was felt at every meeting. The Spirit carried home the message, and in the inquiry-room could be seen strong men and women bowed in tears, little children with anxious faces, all seeking help as to the way of salvation.

Mr. Aitken's addresses on "The Spiritual Life" were richly enjoyed, and not a few have been led into greater liberty, and a fuller enjoyment of the privileges that belong to the believer.

The leading feature of the mission was the gatherings for business men held during the last fortnight for three quarters of an hour each day. On the first day a fair number gathered to hear the preacher, but the attendance daily increased, and on the final day there must have been 500 business men present. Few who were there will forget the closing moments of that solemn meeting, when Mr. Aitken contrasted the condition of the young man who came to Jesus, but went away sorrowful, with that of the Ethiopian Eunuch who "went on his way rejoicing."

Mr. Aitken was assisted very ably in the mission by Rev. A. R. D'Arcy, and in the after meetings by Mrs. Crouch, Miss Parker, and Miss Wynne.

WORKS ON ROMANISM.

◆◆◆

NOW READY.

By the REV. J. A. WYLIE, LL.D.,

Author of "The History of Protestantism;" "The Papacy: its History, Dogmas, Genius, and Prospects," &c., &c.

WHICH SOVEREIGN:
QUEEN VICTORIA, or THE POPE?

ABRIDGED EDITION of 100,000 Copies. Price Threepence, or 2s. 8d. per Dozen.
Special Terms for Large Quantities, for Distribution, on Application.

This telling Treatise by the veteran Protestant writer, Dr. Wylie, could not have appeared more opportunely than in the present year (1888)—when we are commemorating the TER-CENTENARY, or the three-hundredth Anniversary, of the defeat of the attempted Invasion of our country by the Spanish Armada; and the BI-CENTENARY, or two-hundredth Anniversary, of the Accession in 1688 of the Protestant dynasty to the throne of the United Kingdom.

"It would be difficult to discover a book of more interest, or one so completely filled with valuable historical data. Every line of the 106 pages is full of carefully sought out evidence upon the subject to which it is intended to be a trustworthy guide. The simple facts and data will certainly provoke thought and research upon a question that is growing each day into increased importance."
Isle of Wight Advertiser.

"As may be supposed, the publication is intended chiefly to draw attention to the fact that the throne was held on condition that the sovereign is of Protestant persuasion, and also to the necessity, for the welfare of the country, of the public seeing that those conditions which were enforced by our forefathers are kept up in their integrity."
Brighton Times.

"We don't know anything better fitted to promote this much needed enlightenment of the public mind regarding Popery than just the broadcast circulation of the admirable little three-penny book before us, the abridged edition of Dr. Wylie's noble volume, 'Which Sovereign,' &c. We are perfectly certain that the perusal of even this abridgment would open the eyes of very many to a state of matters of which at present they have no idea."—Perthshire Courier.

"We have received an abridged edition of the above work. It is ably written and replete with much curious and valuable information, and cannot fail to be a valuable contribution to this class of literature."—Shetland News.

COMPLETE IN ONE VOLUME. 1083 Pages.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Early Christian and Protestant Martyrs, in all parts of the World.

With Twelve Full-page Illustrations. Cloth boards, 10s. 6d.
Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 12s. 6d.

"As a complete edition of FOXE'S MARTYRS this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know."
Primitive Methodist.

"We are pleased to see the 'BOOK OF MARTYRS' well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of FOXE in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT an immediate sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap."—REV. C. H. SPURGEON in The Sword and Trowel.

"Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book; and we are specially pleased to observe that the aid of pictorial art has been invoked to attract to the volume the attention of the young. Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican ritualists to undo the blessed work that was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth, who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."
Christian Leader.

WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING? OR,
The Progress of England Rome-wards.

By the Right Hon. LORD ROBERT MONTAGU,

Author of "Recent Events—and a Clue to Their Solution;" "Reasons for Leaving the Romish Church;" &c., &c.

Price 2d. 12 copies sent post free for 2s.

"I had, therefore, to give up my dream of finding greater spirituality in the Church of Rome, and was led to return to the Church of England, to find it—or to find its Head and Bench of Bishops—evidently scheming to bring in and establish those Roman 'abominations,' those Pagan encumbrances to Christianity, which had made me fly from the Roman Church. This is the point which I desire to show: that the Ritualists, by Romanizing the Church of England, are, in fact, bringing us back to the Paganism of ancient Babylon." EXTRACT.

Soul-Winning in our Sunday-Schools.

By J. T. WRENFORD, Newport.

LONDON: S. W. PARTRIDGE & CO., 9, PATERNOSTER ROW.

ADDITIONAL
Sacred Songs & Solos,
WITH STANDARD HYMNS,

COMPILED AND SUNG BY

IRA D. SANKEY.

309 HYMNS AND TUNES; IN ONE VOLUME.

"This Volume of ADDITIONAL SACRED SONGS AND SOLOS includes a very winsome assortment of entirely fresh pieces, gleaned from authors and composers on both sides of the sea, with an excellent selection of old standards. There are no fewer than 309 hymns and tunes, being not so very far short of the number in the well-known 'SACRED SONGS AND SOLOS.' The two volumes are quite independent of each other; and nobody who appreciates the first will fail to obtain the second."—Christian Leader.

"There are 309 pieces in this volume, among which some old favourites will be recognised, while the new ones are worthy to take their places beside them."
Hampshire Advertiser.

"These songs and melodies are equal in sweetness to former ones; and are well adapted for family use and for social means of grace."
Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

THE HEAVY BUNDLE.

A TRUE STORY.

BY MR. JOSIAH SPIERS.

THE train stopped at last at a little country station, and a gentleman jumped out. He had only just crossed the station yard when he noticed a little girl about nine years old, who had also come by the train; she was carrying a bundle nearly as big as herself. He asked her where she was going, and found that it was about a quarter of a mile along the same road that he had to pass himself.

"But what a big bundle you have, my child; would you like me to carry it for you?"

"Oh, thank you, sir! If you wouldn't mind, I should be very glad."

So the gentleman lifted the bundle from her arms, and took hold of the little girl's hand, saying, "But are you not rather frightened to trust a stranger? Don't you think I might run away with your bundle?"

The child said she was not at all afraid of that, and looked very happy as she trotted along by his side, chatting to him the whole time, and telling him everything she could think of about herself and her friends, until they reached the house where she was to stay, when she took her bundle, gratefully bidding him good-bye.

As the gentleman walked on alone, he thought to himself, "That child has taught me a wonderful lesson of simple TRUST. She was quite content that I, a perfect stranger, should carry her bundle, and, with the utmost confidence, placed her hand in mine, that I might lead her along; and as we walked together, hand in hand, she talked to me of all that was in her heart."

A little girl of six once said to me, placing her hand on her heart—

"Oh, Mr. Spiers, I've got such a load here!"

Do the children who read this know what it is to feel their sins to be like a heavy burden that they cannot carry?

If so, listen to the voice of that most loving of all friends, who says, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest" (Matt. xi. 28).

That little girl trusted a perfect stranger; surely you will trust Jesus when He offers so kindly to take away your burden of sin.

Think of his great love wherewith He loved us; such great love that He died a dreadful death upon the cross to save us, and say to Him—

Jesus, Blessed Saviour, hast Thou died for me?
Make me very thankful in my heart to Thee.
When the sad, sad story of thy grief I read,
Make me very sorry for my sins indeed.

Then, having trusted Jesus to take away your sins, place your hand in his, and expect Him to lead you safely all through life's journey, to your Father's house above.

And mind, dear children, that you don't forget another thing that little girl did: all the way she kept talking to the kind gentleman who was carrying her burden; so, while listening daily to your Saviour's voice speaking to you in your Scripture portion, often talk to Him, and tell Him all that is in your heart.

Now the very same gentleman who carried the child's bundle was one day walking along on the sea-shore, when he met two little sisters of seven and nine carrying a basket of flowers, which they had been trying in vain to sell at the nearest town.

They asked him to buy a bunch of flowers, and, after a few moments, the two pairs of eager eyes noticed that he put his hand in his pocket to get some money. While doing so he saw the little child of seven point to the most beautiful bunch in the basket, and heard her whisper softly to her sister, "Give him the best."

When in Glasgow some years ago, a little boy four years old came one afternoon with his mamma to one of the services in the Queen's Rooms, and presented me with a most beautiful rosebud. I accepted his gift with real pleasure, and, not forgetting to say "Thank you," asked what I was to do with it.

Pointing to my coat, he said he wanted me to wear it in the buttonhole, and often during that service I found the boy glancing at the rose he had given me.

But what do you suppose would have been my feelings if the little fellow had worn it himself for a month first, until it was faded and spoilt, and most of the leaves had fallen off, and then, when it was useless, had offered it to me!

Oh, children, be like the girl who said about the flowers, "Give him the best," and like the boy who gave me the lovely, fresh-cut rose!

Although the Lord Jesus in his great kindness has said, "Him that cometh to Me, I will in nowise cast out," and even welcomes poor old sinners who have wasted their lives, and, like the faded rose, are scarcely worth having; yet what He values most, and would far sooner have, is the warm love of a fresh young heart, and the faithful service of a long life.

And is not Jesus worthy of the best? Indeed, does it not belong to Him by right of purchase? His great love led Him to pay a great price for our redemption, for He has bought us with his own most precious blood.

What is your heart's decision?
Will you give Him the best?

A good many years ago, I was for a week the guest of a lady and gentleman, whose only son, a young man over twenty years of age, was of a most surly, morose, and selfish disposition, which spoilt all the pleasure of my visit.

During the whole week he only uttered a few words in my hearing, and I was told that this was the wicked and ungrateful manner in which he usually behaved. He would sit in silence day after day during meals, not even saying "Thank you" when nice things were passed to him, and when he did condescend to say a word or two, it seemed more like a growl or a grunt! And yet the good father and mother were so kind, and were doing their utmost to make him comfortable.

The remembrance of that week gives me pain even at this distance of time, and one can scarcely help despising the mean, withered, and shrivelled-up soul that dwelt in that unhappy young man.

But what intense sorrow it must have caused his father and mother to think that this boy, on whom they lavished such kindness and care, never showed one bit of gratitude, but received all their loving attention without even saying "Thank you."

And don't you think, dear children, that the great heavenly Father's heart must be pained when He sees boys and girls that He has been so kind to, going on from day to day without caring a bit for Him; so mean and ungrateful that they have never loved Him, or even thanked Him from their hearts for giving Jesus to be their Saviour.—Our Own Magazine.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

THE twenty-first anniversary of the central services for South London was held in Hawkstone Hall, Kennington-road, on Tuesday evening, May 29. There was a large attendance of children, parents, and teachers, and the chair was taken by Rev. Henry Grainger. Mr. Tyler stated that these services were commenced by Rev. E. P. Hammond, of America, on Whit Sunday, 1867; since then it had been his privilege, in conjunction with his brother, to superintend them. During the past year 34 children had been received into the "Christian Band;" eight had joined the Church, and the membership of the Scripture Union was 150.

Earnest addresses were then given by Messrs. Lidstone, Pewtress, Pilkington, Sayer, and Hutchinson, interspersed with hymns from "Gems of praise." The earnest attention and hearty singing of the children were most encouraging.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith will be at Lausanne till June 24. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Assembly Rooms, Malvern, June 3–15; Skating Rink, Croydon, July 2—13. Mr. Martin J. Hall, Dundalk, May 29 to June 8. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Tooting, June 3—10. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Abinger, June 12.

THE BROUSSA ORPHANAGE.

WE learn with deep regret that the happy work carried on at Broussa is quite crippled in consequence of the sad famine all around, and also by the floods in Germany. Mr. Baghdasarian, writes:—"We can get no help here—our people are boiling weeds and eating them. The inundations in Germany have put an end to the help many gave us there.

WE SHALL STARVE

with all our children (over 100) if immediate help is not secured. We thank God for our mission work; we take the young and bring them under the influence of the Word of God, and many of them are changed; when they go to their own villages, they are the means of spreading the Gospel. Pray for us and ask God's children to help us, for we are in very great need."

Help will gladly be received by Rev. T. W. Brown, D.D., Secretary, Turkish Missions Aid Society, 32, The Avenue, Bedford Park, Chiswick, London, or Miss Denham Smith, 38, York-terrace, Regent's Park, London, N.W.

A GREAT NATURAL MARVEL.

THE YELLOWSTONE PARK, U.S.A.

BY REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

ON our way from California we stopped off for a week to visit the Yellowstone National Park, We were delighted and astonished at the wonders we saw. After six years' silence, the Excelsior Geyser recently commenced erupting about once an hour. When we saw it, it ejected a volume of water from thirty to fifty feet in diameter, and from two to three hundred feet high. In the eruption were stones from ten to one hundred pounds in weight. At this elevation of eight thousand feet above the sea, snow, on May 16, was everywhere visible.

The Yellowstone Park is in the heart of the Rocky Mountains, near the source of the Missouri river. It contains three thousand five hundred and seventy-five square miles. From the hotel in the Upper Basin one can look upon many of the most important geysers.

We spent one day among the richly coloured terraces formed by the mammoth hot springs. We were greatly interested in studying the marvellous processes by which these terraces are formed. One hardly knows whether to admire more the delicacy of their formation, or their exquisite colouring; the former resembles that of the finest lace, while the latter surpasses in brilliancy and beauty any chromatic effects we ever witnessed.

On Sabbath evening I preached to the soldiers in Camp Sheridan. About sixty men are stationed here by the United States Government, to protect the Park, and to see that none of the numerous wild animals in this tract of about sixty miles square, are killed. It was the first religious service that has been held for them during the past ten months. It was also attended by the people of the hamlet.

Last week, for four days, I held meetings in Spokane Falls, Washington Territory. All the churches and ministers of the city united most heartily in the work. When we could secure the Opera House it was crowded in every part. A goodly number professed conversion. Many more we believe were convicted of sin, and so it was decided to continue the meetings after we left.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, June 10, Acts xii. 13—25; Monday, June 11, Acts xiii. 1—13; Tuesday, June 12, Acts xiii. 14—25; Wednesday, June 13, Acts xiii. 26—41; Thursday, June 14, Acts xiii. 42—52; Friday, June 15, Acts xiv. 1—18; Saturday, June 16, Acts xiv. 19—28.

Protestant Commemorations.

So far as attendance and enthusiasm were concerned, the first public meeting at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday week, in connection with this event, was highly satisfactory. The Lower Hall was crowded, and, if the warmth of feeling shown in the meeting could be communicated to the nation at large, there would be little fear of Rome stealing a march upon us.

After praise and prayer, Lord Kinnaird, who presided, said that, from the outset of the proceedings, it was necessary to make it clear that this is a religious movement. Without attacking living people, we must proclaim our stedfast adherence to the principles of the Reformation. We are not ashamed to confess that we believe in the interposition of God, and we recognise his hand in the deliverance we are commemorating as much as when He interposed for the deliverance of the Israelites at the Red Sea. The object is, through these gatherings, to awaken public opinion with respect to the evils with which we have now to contend. Present and past experience proves that the Papal power remains unchanged; it is still a persecuting power, wherever it is allowed scope. There are many earnest Christians who do not appear to realise the strength of the foe we have to face, and in order to create sound views it is very important to scatter good literature on the subject. The mention of Dr. Wylie's name as a Protestant author was received with much applause, and the chairman proceeded to say that the best way to applaud him was to permeate the nation with the rousing books and pamphlets on this subject he has placed at our disposal.

Mr. A. H. Guinness, the secretary, told briefly of the inception of the movement, and said there had been large and enthusiastic meetings in the provinces, at Leicester, Falmouth, Portsmouth, Brighton, Lewes, Leamington, and many other towns. In places where there had been apathy, much prayerful interest has been awakened, and God has greatly blessed the meetings. Meetings are also arranged for Liverpool, Manchester, Bristol, Bath, Oxford, Cambridge, Gloucester, &c.

Rev. Wm. Haslam, the well-known author of "From Death into Life," who next spoke, said the real motive of the Armada was the crushing of the Reformation. The expedition received the blessing of the so-called "Vicar of Christ." Speaking calmly, he had no hesitation in calling the Pope the servant of the devil. However, the Papal execrations on this country made it not a penny the worse; and Spain, which he blessed, has declined in the scale of nations from that day to this. Let us be very zealous for the truth of the Gospel, which has made Great Britain what she is. In the early days of Christ, the devil sowed tares among the wheat; and the Romish Church has done the same by its doctrines of religiousness and ecclesiasticism, in place of spirituality; of human tradition instead of the Bible; and of priestcraft instead of personal faith in Christ. There was a time, said Mr. Haslam, when I fancied I was an absolving priest myself, though I did not know it; but since my eyes have been opened, it has been my joy to point sinners to the Lord Jesus Christ. With great fervour the speaker proceeded to unfold the Reformation truths of justification by faith, and the working out our salvation from, and not for, life, as contrasted with the perversions of Romanism. His fervid periods were greeted with ringing cheers.

Still louder applause greeted the rising of the venerable Dr. Wylie, the historian of the Reformation. After an apology for a weak voice and a Scotch drawl, he delivered the address on the Papal Rescript which will be found in extenso on succeeding pages. His utterances, so full of fire and feeling, despite the weight of years, were most warmly cheered.

In a very animated address Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston recounted various events in connection with the Armada and its destruction that plainly showed the interposing finger of God. Let us not hesitate to ascribe to Him the glory. Surely the day has not come when we are ashamed to confess the name of our God and to recognise his deliverances. He has put us in trust with the light of his Gospel, and let us beware of allowing it to be put out. On those countries where it has been kept burning the seal of God's prospering and protecting hand has been laid. When Queen Elizabeth came to the throne no country was so despised as England, and now our Queen rules a fifth part of the world. Let us learn to read and study the lessons of history. In proportion as God's Word is read and studied, any nation will prosper. Spain avoids the history of her past, and we see her degradation to-day. In modern naval warfare it is not the great battle ships that are to be feared so much as the hidden and destructive torpedoes. That is the kind of moral warfare we have to combat to-day. There are torpedoes even in the pulpits; men are there who, while professing one kind of truth, are secretly propagating another. As the action of the torpedo is neutralised by the presence of the electric light, so let us have the light of truth all around, in our homes and our hearts, and we need not fear the result.

Mr. W. E. Shipton concluded the speaking of the evening with some extracts from the history of the Armada period. One quotation was to the effect that "in all these events Christ showed Himself a Lutheran; it is most manifest that in all that voyage God showed no favour to the Spaniards for a single day as He did continually to the English." This utterance from a chronicler of the time seemed a very fitting termination of the evening's testimony.

The Aims of the Papacy.

On Wednesday afternoon there was a conference on the present state and aims of the Papacy, the object being to elicit suggestions as to the best means for combating the aggressive influence of Rome. The chair was occupied by Mr. George Williams, and the subject was looked at from many points of view. As might be expected, there were things said on which unanimity of feeling by no means existed among those present; but in matters of detail Christian consideration was shown, and hearty agreement was manifested on the really important aspects of the subject under discussion.

The Chairman having spoken briefly upon the prosperity which the country has enjoyed since Protestantism has predominated, Mr. W. C. Maughan, representative of the Scottish Protestant Alliance, advocated combined counsel and action by the various societies who have at heart the cause of religious freedom. He attributed the general apathy as to Rome's encroachments to the deplorable religious indifference which to-day widely prevails. This indifference is favourable to the Papal methods, which appeal to the senses. He urged Protestants to watch carefully the action of those clergymen who give so much attention to ornate services, and also to see that diplomatic relations with the Court of Rome are not resumed by this country.

Rev. A. A. Isaacs, of the Leicester Protestant Alliance, argued that Rome's action to-day is the same as ever; under the semblance of religion, the Papal power is practising those principles which have always characterised the pagan world. In reality the Romish church is a great political confederacy against the well-being and the interests of the human race. Declaring that Rome is moving onward in co-operation with Ritualism, which is Romanism in disguise, the speaker said that there are men occupying positions in the English Church to-day who are doing Romish work, and promoting the fusion of the Church of England and the Church of Rome. Lessons must be learned from Rome, and their must be a combination to maintain Protestantism, and efforts to secure for the truth those public positions which Rome labours to control. Then God must be besought, and his light and truth as revealed in the Scriptures must be made to shine. Rev. F. Hastings, of Tolmer-square Congregational Church, called upon Mr. Isaacs to give the names of men who while in the Church of England are obeying the Pope. The challenge was accepted, and in replying Mr. Isaacs related the well-known case of Rev. Luke Rivington, who had for years before his secession been an adherent of Rome, and employed in establishing Popish institutions within the bosom of the Church of England. It was only when his health incapacitated him from further carrying on the work that he openly identified himself with the Church of Rome. Mr. Isaacs mentioned another case that had come to his knowledge, of a clergyman joining the Church of Rome while incumbent of an English parish.

Rev. J. Kerr, of the Scottish Protestant Alliance, maintained that Rome is the enemy of Britain. She is entrenched in a political citadel, and possessed of great political power. He urged that she should be attacked by all British patriots as another kingdom, hostile to the public well-being. He suggested Christian activity, making use of various approved agencies.

Mr. Robert Scott spoke of the prevalence of Popish practices in the Church of England, and held that it would not be difficult to trace the evil to a partial reformation; hence the need of a radical reformation. He regarded it as high time the theory entertained by some, that the Established Church is the great bulwark against Romanism, should be abandoned, inasmuch as more is being done through the status, the resources, and the influence which the Church of England possesses, and the means which she affords in leading the nation to idolatry and away from God, than all other agencies put together. He commended to attention the practical advice involved in the formula "combination, organisation, registration," and urged conscientious adherence to the truths of the Protestant faith in combat with the great foe of Christ and Christianity.

Rev. Frank White contended that at the present crisis every Protestant minister ought to be a Protestant lecturer, warning the people against impending danger. The Word of God must have a greater place among believers, as no other weapon can be used in its stead. Rev. Dr. Jeffrey, of Glasgow, recommended prayer to God on behalf of the Roman Catholics of the land, multitudes of whom are better than their system; we ought not to be content with decrying Popery, but we ought to do something, not so much for proselytising Romanists as for bringing about their true conversion.

Persons from the audience being given an opportunity to speak, Rev. J. T. Gadsdun, of Camberwell, confirmed the statement that there are clergymen in the Church of England who openly follow Romish practices. He remarked that Lord Halifax, President of the English Church Union, which has thousands of members, has several times distinctly stated that the object of the Union is to unite the Established Church to the Church of Rome again. Rev. Charles Sterling, of New Malden, traced the evil to the concession of Catholic Emancipation. He believed the Church of England to be the great agency at present promoting Romanism in the country, and he had more than once acted in the sense of this belief. The Archbishops and Bishops have it in their power to eject the Romish element and save the Establishment. His own course was quite clear; if many more months roll by without some decisive action being taken, the days of his connection with the church as by law established must certainly be regarded as numbered. He valued the church, but he valued Protestantism still more, and would endeavour outside her pale to do a little to defend the liberties of Englishmen.

Commander Key, Colonel Sandys, M.P., and Rev. W. Frith also spoke. The last-named urged that Protestants should unite in their efforts, and said it would be well for Nonconformists to bear in mind that in case Romanism comes to the front, such toleration as the Church of England shows to Dissenters will no longer be experienced. Rev. F. A. Beeman pointed out that the martyrs died because they held the faith of Christ, not for having certain political opinions. Rome is desirous of again bringing about the same spiritual ignorance and tyranny.

In bringing the meeting to a close, the Chairman intimated that a lady present had made the very important suggestion that children should be instructed on the subject.

The Revolution of 1688.

"The Revolution" was the subject considered on Wednesday evening. Sir ARTHUR BLACKWOOD presided, and opened the meeting with an address, which was as politically sensible as it was spiritually earnest. At the outset, referring to the fact that Roman Catholics have actually taken part in a movement for the celebration of the defeat of the Armada, he said that he did not think it possible that such dust-throwing in the eyes of the people could take place with regard to the glorious Revolution of 1688. After some pointed historical allusions, Sir Arthur spoke of the Revolution as a great cause for thankfulness to God, and indicated the need for lessons being drawn from the past with a view to meeting present emergencies and circumstances. He expressed an earnest hope that by efforts such as these meetings, many people will be aroused to think upon the danger impending from Romanism, and then to act in order that the national religion and liberties may be preserved.

Rev. J. KERR read a paper on Romanism in relation to civil liberty. Before the Revolution religious liberty was not allowed; the Revolution fully recognised it. True, there is no express legislation proclaiming this liberty, but in the nature of the case there was no necessity for such legislation. We are not dependent for this liberty upon the will of sovereigns and legislatures; and for its exercise we do not require to produce a statute of permission. We possess and should exercise this right in defiance of all statutes to the contrary: we derive this right from Him who is above all statutes and thrones. A sovereign or state might as well assume to issue a proclamation permitting the subjects to breathe the air of heaven. But does the Papacy concede this liberty to all? Has it where it has had the power? Did James II., a disciple of Ignatius Loyola, permit it? Does Leo XIII. allow it? He does when he cannot help it! But he has eulogised the Encyclical of Gregory XVI., which states that "We cannot hold in too much horror this notion that every man ought to enjoy liberty of conscience." Does the Syllabus allow it, which denounces as the worst of errors that "every man is free to embrace and profess the religion that he shall believe to be true, guided by the light of reason"? And yet, in our controversy with Rome, we feel it necessary to guard this principle of personal freedom in matters of religion.

Having contended for the Protestant character of the national machinery erected at the Revolution, the speaker observed that at that time the nation was satisfied that a Roman Catholic was not qualified to rule. The principal reason for the disowning of the Popish and the welcoming of the Protestant sovereign was that the former could not rule an independent kingdom, whereas the latter could. Roman Catholics disqualify themselves for rule; those persons are self-disabled for rule in a free land who are not themselves free. A slave may rule a nation of slaves, if the nation will; and no nation but one of slaves would be ruled by a slave; but a nation of freemen must have a freeman as their sovereign. The rule of a freeman is better even for Roman Catholics themselves. Roman Catholics are not able, consistently, to avow an undivided allegiance to a Protestant sovereign. They must consistently assault and attempt to overthrow all that is Protestant in the Bill of Rights and Act of Settlement, which are the express terms on which Her Majesty holds the Crown and the present house holds succession over these realms. On several occasions, indeed, this assault has been delivered. When the sovereign ceases to be a Protestant, that moment the right to sovereignty lapses. We will not have upon our throne a subject of a foreign priest and prince—a priest, too, who cannot live in amity with the sovereign of a free Italy. In conclusion, Mr. Kerr urged the necessity for another Reformation, and called upon Protestants to labour to this end.

Mr. C. H. COLLETTE read a paper on the social and political reforms effected by Henry VIII. and how they prepared the way for the Reformation.

The third paper was read by Rev. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS. The destruction of the Armada, and the landing in England of William of Orange were depicted in graphic language, and the significance of each event was explained in the light of history and Divine providence. God with his stormy winds fought against the Spanish invader, and destruction was inevitable—even to the Invincible Armada. The reigns of the Charleses and Jameses were described in terms showing great power of historical interpretation.

The state of Britain at the time of the Revolution was set forth, as were also those events which led up to decisive action. The hand of God is evidently to be discerned in the issue. England beckoned to the brave Protestants of Holland, and they came. The winds which had scattered the Popish Armada favoured the ships of William as they sailed down the English Channel, and when they were safe in Torbay the winds blew again, and kept away England's enemies. The Protestants of Holland came to the aid of a nation in distress, and helped up the fallen flag of freedom. They said "England shall be free," and free she has continued for two hundred years. Thank God for it!

The Revolution was accomplished without bloodshed; it was the work of a people who valued the Word of God at its true worth. What a contrast with the French Revolution a century ago, which was the outcome of unbelief and anti-religion! Many thoughts arising out of these facts were put forward, and then the question was asked, What is the state of Protestantism to-day? Is it now what it was 200 years ago? We must answer that it is not. A change has come over it, and a crisis is impending. The Protestantism of England is seriously undermined; it is attacked both from without and from within, by Romanists and Ritualists. Rome means to direct the affairs of the British Empire. She is using our political and religious divisions to this end. As yet the law as to succession, passed in 1688, prohibits the way of a Papal king or queen to the throne, but Rome is trying to have the law altered in that respect.

The speaker maintained, with much power, that Rome is a political conspiracy, and urged that if diplomatic relations with England are to be prevented, Protestants must bestir themselves. To resist the aggression, they must, among other things, use the pulpit, the platform, and the press; the weapons of truth, the armour of light, the hour of prayer; send forth the Gospel, circulate information, and also instruct the children.

A few hearty words were spoken by the Dean of Achonry.

Closing Meeting.

The last meeting of the series was held in the large Exeter Hall on Thursday evening, when Mr. T. A. DENNY presided over a numerous and extremely enthusiastic assembly. The platform was filled by an array of well-known expounders of Protestant truth, and other public men. In his opening remarks the chairman expressed his view that for the last half century or so the English nation has been fast asleep. If the people are apathetic, too many of the pulpits are filled by men who vowed one way and are working in another. People ask: What is the good of raking up matters 300 years old? When Israel was delivered from Egypt at the Red Sea, God was continually putting the nation in remembrance of it. After all, three centuries is not a very long period in the history of a nation, and if God did great things for us then, surely we ought at fitting seasons to call it to remembrance, and thank Him for it. We have been silent too long; therefore the foe has gained an advantage. If we cannot sweep all unworthy men out of our church pulpits, we can at least educate our children in true principles. Much might be done through the press, but it is to be feared that it is in most cases pre-occupied. A great power rests with Christian women to exercise a right influence on these questions in the home. Mr. Denny quoted Cardinal Manning's famous saying about subjugating the imperial race of Great Britain; and he wanted to know how it was that people fraternise with the Cardinal on temperance and other platforms, and do not speak out the truth in his presence. Quoting further from the fulminations of the Cardinal and other Romish ecclesiastics, the Chairman declared that as for himself he did not feel a bit the worse. He was sure that many of our Roman Catholic fellow-subjects, especially the priests, need our pity and compassion; many are sick at heart of their system and would gladly come out of it, if they were not so hemmed in by difficulties and risks. This movement augurs well, said Mr. Denny in closing, for a resurrection of interest in Protestant truth; "and let me tell you, in confidence, we are going to resurrect."

Mr. A. H. GUINNESS having referred to letters of apology from many sympathising friends who could not be present, told of the enthusiasm that had been awakened up and down the land in connection with these Commemoration meetings.

A resolution, gratefully recognising and acknowledging the goodness of God in connection with the deliverance three hundred years ago, and also with the accession of a Protestant dynasty, was moved by Hon. P. CARTERET HILL. He regarded the domination of the Papacy as the greatest blight that could rest on any land. As showing the inherent absurdity of the Papal claim to Infallibility, Mr. Hill cited two Bulls, issued from Rome by different Popes, that were mutually destructive. The history of Romanism in those countries where it has been uncontrolled leads us to the inevitable conclusion that in no case has the Papacy conferred any benefit on those nations. Happily the Pope has not now the power to enforce his decrees. As to the effect of the Papal Rescript on Ireland, Mr. Hill quoted from a speech by Mr. Michael Davitt, declaring that the Irish people would not stand to be dictated to from Rome as to their political affairs. The same spirit of defiant independence has been shown in America by Dr. McGlynn, and it may be that this Rescript is a providential occurrence that will result in many Roman Catholics breaking the shackles that have hitherto bound them. At any rate, Englishmen must not submit to barter away their dearly bought liberties.

In seconding the resolution Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR said, the most serious part of the danger that now threatens our country from Romish inroads is the fact that the danger is not recognised. We are apt to forget in these days that God is the God of Providence and that He is still the Hearer and the Answerer of prayer. There is a popular idea that Rome has changed, but it is a profound mistake. Mr. Taylor cited some of his experiences as a missionary in China to show the difficulties arising there from the presence and action of Romish priests. These priests have claimed, in the name of France, to adjudicate in civil cases equally with the native magistrates, where the interests of Roman Catholics are concerned, and some terrible travesties of justice have taken place. We need to go out of England to know what Rome really is. As to our own land.

let us have faith in God and be faithful to his truth.

Another resolution confessing national unfaithfulness and supplicating a continuance of the Divine blessing was submitted to the meeting by Mr. Mark Knowles, and seconded by Rev. C. H. Wainwright. Both these gentlemen spoke in strong terms as to the erection of the reredos in St. Paul's, and condemned the apathy shown in the matter, not only by the ecclesiastical authorities, but by the rank and file of Protestants. Mr. Wainwright said he sometimes wondered as a country clergyman whether Protestantism had not died out in London altogether. With great fervour and animation he appealed to Englishmen to conserve Protestant truth, and the liberty to have an open Bible, which has made the nation great and glorious and free.

The third resolution was one resolving to uphold the Scriptural doctrines of the Reformation, and to defend against all aggression the Constitutional liberties of the nation, as secured by the Protestant accession to the throne. It was moved in a lengthy speech by Lord Robert Montagu, who took up in turn the distinctive truths brought into view by the Reformers, and the Romish errors they were intended to counteract. Speaking of the Papal assumptions, he described how the Pope claims supremacy over all nations and peoples, not only in matters spiritual but matters temporal. He claims the power of dethroning monarchs, and sought to put this power into exercise at the time of the Armada, but the English nation thought otherwise. "Canon law" is set above State laws throughout the world. His so-called "Holiness" claims to compel you to believe as he believes, at the risk of torture by the rack, the thumbscrew, and the stake. We are told now by a youthful professor of Modern History in London that there was no connection between the Armada and Protestantism. We prefer the view of Queen Elizabeth who struck a medal in commemoration and put on it the inscription, "God blew with his winds and they were scattered." Canon Gregory, of St. Paul's Cathedral, has recently spoken of "the danger of a Protestant reaction," and he has therefore counselled that the Ritualistic party should move slowly. But surely we we are not to be so craven as to stand still and see Roman Catholicism again entrenched in Great Britain and Mass said in St. Paul's. As to the reredos, said Lord Robert, the only good thing about it is that it is not far off from 18, Paternoster-row, where a storehouse of good Protestant literature may be found.

The resolution was seconded by Rev. Dr. Hugh Hanna, of Belfast, whose speech consisted of a clear exposition of the contrast between the sacerdotal idea and the true Scriptural idea of the Christian ministry.

On the motion of Colonel Sandys, M.P., and Mr. W. Johnston, M.P., a humble address was adopted for presentation to the Queen, congratulating Her Majesty on the Jubilee of her Coronation in 1838, rejoicing in the great principles of civil and religious liberty, for the maintenance of which her dynasty was called to the throne, and praying that she may long be spared as a defender of the Protestant faith. In the course of his speech Colonel Sandys read the Coronation oath taken by the Queen, in which she unequivocally declares her disbelief in transubstantiation, in the invocation of saints, and in the idolatrous sacrifice of the Mass. Speaking of the St. Paul's reredos, Colonel Sandys said he should like if they could, consistently with the law, place a couple of good six-inch hawsers round the idolatrous erection, and with that audience at the end of the ropes to say, "Now, lads, altogether." In a thorough-going "Orange" speech, Mr. Johnston said he looked forward to the grand day when the whole earth should be emancipated from the power of Rome, and the chorus would be sung, "Hallelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth"; but that song will not be sung till Rome has fallen.

In proposing a vote of thanks to the Chairman, Mr. Donald Matheson made the very appropriate and practical suggestion that all should unite in prayer to God for a revival of true and undefiled religion throughout the land.

SCATTERING THE SEED.

The Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures continues to use many available agencies in order to tell abroad the "Tidings of Great Joy," of salvation through Christ. And there are many indications of blessing attending this excellent work, some of them being well set out in the report just published. It matters not whether the seed is sown in Eastern or Western hemispheres, the Divine light is being followed by similar spiritual manifestations.

In the introduction to the report we read, "By far the best method of reaching Mohammedans is by the gift of a Bible or Testament, which they never destroy. They seldom purchase the Scriptures, but many most gladly accept the gift." There are many extracts from letters from all parts of Europe, several countries in Asia, North and South Africa, the West Indies, and Australia.

At Marseilles, a shoemaker once attended a meeting in the Gospel Hall, and received a copy of the New Testament. A short time afterwards he died of small-pox; during his illness he constantly begged of his wife "Read me something from the Book"—and he died with it clasped in his hands—the precious Book which had led him to his Saviour.

Some time ago, the man who acted as porter in Rev. E. Clarke's Mission House at Spezia, gave to his thoughtless nephew, leaving for America, a copy of God's Word, saying—"I have but little to give, but I give you my own Testament." The poor prodigal in America was reduced to great distress, and in his affliction began to read the New Testament; light entered his mind, and he became a true penitent, and a true believer. He is now an earnest missionary in South America.

Rev. M. S. Bergmann writes:—"I have had many cheering letters from Jews in Austria whom I was enabled, through the kindness of your Association, to supply with the Word of God, both Old and New Testaments, in Hebrew. In one town, several Jews are banded together in a locked room studying the Scriptures with which I supplied them; among them is the Rabbi of the place, who wrote me a most wonderful letter, in the salutation of which he had inscribed my name in gold letters."

Towards the close of the report we read:—"At the present rate of distribution from all societies in existence, even the annual increase of the world's population is not being reached—not eight million copies annually to a population of one thousand four hundred millions, this including Bibles, Testaments, and Gospels—so that millions are dying year by year who have never read the message of salvation through the blood of a crucified Redeemer. While different methods for circulating the Scriptures are being discussed, poor creatures are gone out of our reach for ever."

Missionaries and others declare that they are greatly helped in their work by the books placed at their disposal by the Association, of which Mrs. A. E. Robertson, 1, Oak Hill Park, Hampstead, N.W., is the hon. secretary.

STATE REGULATION OF VICE.—A large and enthusiastic "protest" meeting was held in the Friends' Meeting House, Hull, on the 30th ult. A special feature in this gathering was its wide representative character, persons of all creeds and grades being present. As the meeting proceeded and additional information was given, a silent horror seemed to take hold of the people at the almost inconceivably atrocious crimes perpetrated in the name of Great Britain, and under the sanction of official authority.

BIBLE SCHOOL FOR WOMEN, AMOY.

It is estimated by competent authorities that only one man in a hundred and one woman in a thousand can read in China. Chinese converts to Christianity have chiefly come from the uneducated classes. Until they learn to read the Bible, it is to them a sealed book. Hence the necessity and consequent rise of the Christian educational system. We have parochial schools connected with the churches for boys and girls. We have middle schools and theological schools to train teachers and preachers. But none of these agencies unseal the printed page to the adult converts.

The men could not go to school, if one were opened for them. The utmost daily diligence is required to provide for the family. If they learn to read, it must be by some special evening agency, or on Sundays. Visiting the chapels, one frequently sees a Chinaman helping his brother Chinaman to learn to read, before and after service on Sunday.

Many of the Chinese women are so cumbered with household duties that they must remain content to receive all their knowledge through other channels than by reading. Others could leave home, and get an elementary Christian training if the opportunity were offered. The younger women can leave their children in the care of the mother-in-law, the conspicuous personage in every Chinese family. The Chinese women are densely ignorant. What must be simplified for the men, must be even more simplified for the women. They are naturally very superstitious. Christianity, faintly understood, does not drive this out of them.

In the presence of these facts, the "Duryee Bible School for Women" was opened in 1884. It was at the suggestion and through the effort of Mrs. J. V. N. Talmage, of the American Reformed Mission, that it was established. It was opened with a twofold purpose: (1) To teach ignorant women how to read, and to give them a brief course in the fundamentals of Christianity. (2) To raise up Bible-women who shall become teachers in turn among their Chinese sisters. The women learn to read in two or three months. They learn the principal Bible stories. They give special attention to the Life of Christ. They memorise the Commandments, Lord's Prayer, and Creed as well as some of the most comforting and helpful Psalms, such as the xxiii., ciii., and cxxi.

The Christian ideal of home is set before them. They are taught the motto that "Cleanliness is next to Godliness," by precept and example. Anyone who has ever stepped into a Chinese house will know how much this is needed. During these four years eighty women have reaped the benefits of this school. Some of them have been fifty-four, sixty, and sixty-two years of age.

The number who can attend must always be limited. But a few months work a great change in those who do come. Mind is awakened. A thousand imaginary fears are dispelled. Christianity, instead of remaining a vague belief, becomes a living, comforting, inspiring reality. Every such woman is a light-radiating centre in her home, in her neighbourhood, and in the church with which she is connected.

Amoy, Fuh-kien, China. John G. Fagg.

MANITOBA.—Rev. Charles Quinney, Oak Lake, Manitoba, Canada, writes:—I have charge of five congregations scattered over a vast prairie. In the whole of my large district we have not a single church. Fortunately, four of the congregations have the use of school-houses, but the people at Oak Lake have to meet in a borrowed building, and and we know not how soon we may be deprived of even this privilege. The people do what they can, but they are chiefly settlers from England in the first years of struggle as farmers, and cannot afford to build a church without other help, £300 will build a church capable of holding 200 people, and already we have collected and promised more than half this amount, so that, if we can get about £100 from England, I think we shall manage.

THE SCOTCH FREE ASSEMBLY.

On Monday week a very important discussion took place at the Inverness Assembly on the subject of the Divinity colleges. Dr. Gibson, of Perth, in the course of his speech suggested that they should establish a day of prayer for colleges and students.

The most striking and thoroughgoing utterance of the sitting was that of Mr. Campbell-White, of Overtoun. He said: I trust we shall ever hold that the Free Church should have an educated ministry; therefore we have our complete equipment of colleges, and let us be thankful that we have at the head of each of these colleges men who, with the weight of learning, combine earnestness of purpose to bring the young men under their care to be faithful ministers of the Gospel of Christ. But we want to take care that our young men who enter our colleges to be educated for the ministry are men of the right stamp—converted young men. Some years ago a young man came to me, saying he had been advised to consult me whether he should enter the ministry. Going on to describe his motives for entering the ministry, he said the talents he had evidenced in the local debating society had led his friends to think that they should be devoted to the service of the Church! What steps are taken to see that every student entering our colleges gives satisfactory evidence of conversion? for if a student is not converted, and knows it, then the better for him and for the Church too that he should be stopped before he goes any further. Let me refer briefly to the system of teaching. I am quite aware from experience that University life tends to be chilling to spiritual life; but is the same experience not common in connection with the divinity course? It may be right for students of Divinity to study apologetics, but when they are led into regions of scepticism, doubt, and rationalism, when they are led over slippery places, full of pit-falls, and into an icy atmosphere, is it not necessary that we should see that they have a good foothold and sufficient warmth, and to give them the best guidance? Is not the system of our college teaching too negative, and not sufficiently positive? Is it not the case that in dealing with the eternal verities of God's Word that Word is more criticised than fed upon? If that be so, may not our colleges prove to be merely machines for undermining the authority of Scripture, rather than of presenting to the student's mind the overwhelming evidence in its favour? I know of cases in point which call us to look this question fairly in the face. Principal Rainy, in the sermon which he preached at the opening of this Assembly, spoke of dark times coming. How is our Church to meet them? Not certainly by subtle sermons and scholarly debates, but by positive training, which will impress upon the students the great questions of sin and its atonement, for if men are not so trained, how can they be in sympathy with the aim and object of the Church of God? If our students, as part of their training, were led more face to face with men and women anxious about their souls, and were taught to point them to the Saviour, would it not fit them all the more to be valuable ministers of the Gospel? Our professors require not only to be scholars, but men burning with love for Christ, so as to mould our students in such a way as to influence them in after life. The Free Church was born at a period of revival of the glorious Gospel; and if we are to do anything else than preach this Gospel, what is the Free Church's raison d'être? We had better cease to exist, and go back to be a creature of the State. If, laying aside the Word, we take up traditions, scholarships, or philosophy, then good-bye to the Free Church or any Church. If the ministers of the Gospel are to be the officers to lead the Christian Church to victory, I want fathers and brethren to remember that they must first be converted men, and that, so far as this Church is concerned, they must hold fast in the simple Word of God, and the glorious picture of the Cross.

Principal Brown, of Aberdeen, spoke at length of some remarkable cases of conversion that had come under his own observation.

On the following day the usual debate on Disestablishment took place, on the initiative of Principal Rainy, whose motion reasserting the demand for religious equality was carried by 467 votes, as against 80 in favour of upholding the legal connection between Church and State.

In the course of a discussion of the Highlands and Islands, Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Edinburgh, remarked on the fact that it was said some of the Highlanders were too gloomy in their religion. There were not many of them now, either ministers or people—that was to say men who had a deep sense of sin. That their Highland brethren were too experimental was often the shallow charge brought against them by the southerners. Why, in the name of Bacon, was the experimental method to be banished from religion? "They were too subjective" was another anathema launched by the well-balanced and correctly proportioned saints in the South against their Highland brethren. Subjectivity was the sum and substance of all error on the part of some people. Why, the Sermon on the Mount was the most subjective sermon ever preached.

On Wednesday an important deliverance on Home Missions was submitted by Rev. J. Wells, of Glasgow, who said there are 266 permanent centres of spiritual work up and down Scotland. Two of the chief departments of work are evangelism and house-to-house visitation. He commended quiet fireside evangelism. Harvest work lies around our doors, and every true-hearted harvester gains harvest wages. He had visited homes where Christian visitors have done mighty works. The Glasgow Presbytery has taken a great stride in Home Missions. During last winter, thirteen congregations in the East-end united in a scheme by which special services were held in rotation in all their churches. The work far surpassed expectation in the width and variety of its results. About 900 inquirers gave their names and addresses, and that does not represent the whole number. The ministers testify that their congregations are still enjoying a decided after-blessing, and they are to repeat the experiment next winter. A lady has provided a Home in Glasgow for ladies who wish, at their own charges, to devote themselves to the work of Christ among the poor. This lady has spent the winter in the Home, and three other ladies have already been attracted to it. She has also very generously gifted a furnished house in Edinburgh, that a similar Home may be opened their.

On Thursday there was an animated debate on "Ministerial efficiency." Principal Rainy was again to the front, and argued with much skill and cogency on the need of some form of church machinery for getting rid of inefficient and hopelessly unsuitable pastors. The mind of the Church as expressed through the deliverances of the majority of Presbyteries was in favour of something being done in the direction indicated, but ultimately the matter was again referred to the lower Church courts for consideration.

At the afternoon session much interest was aroused by the discussion of the report on Foreign Missions. The total number of foreign agents employed is 645, of whom 84 are European. The total revenue of the year was £83,000 odd. In the evening addresses were given by missionaries from Africa, Asia, the West Indies, and the New Hebrides. Dr. A. N. Somerville delivered a parting charge to the following seven young missionaries about to leave for their respective fields:—

Rev. John Watt, going to the Church's College in Calcutta; Rev. James Gardiner, going to Bombay; Mr. John Sandilands, medical missionary, going to Nagpore; Mr. William Murray, who goes as an artisan evangelist to Central Africa; Rev. William Gardiner, who proceeds to the Keith-Falconer Mission in South Arabia; Rev. John Thompson, going to Natal; Rev. A. P. Telfer, who, along with Rev. John Watt, goes to the Free Church College in Calcutta.

It was stated that Professor Lindsay is about to go on a visiting mission to the stations in India and Africa.

On Friday the Assembly took into consideration the report of the Committee on State Regulation of Vice. The exposure of the system pursued in India excited marked abhorrence and disgust. All the members had been furnished beforehand with copies of Mr. Dyer's letters. A motion by Sheriff Cowan, of Paisley, was unanimously adopted, declaring unqualified opposition to the C. D. Acts and all regulations founded on them, and the imperative necessity for their total repeal. It was agreed that a petition embodying this declaration and expressing the conviction that the peculiar horrors of the Indian regulations are only the natural outcome of Acts that are in their inmost principle immoral should be signed by the Moderator and sent to Parliament before the debate on June 5. The following deputation was appointed to press upon the Indian and Colonial Secretaries the views of the Church on this question—viz., Rev. Principal Rainy, Professor Lindsay, Mr. George Smith (Secretary to the Foreign Missions Committee), Mr. E. Stuart Gray, of Kinfauns, and Rev. John Dymock.

A WEEK OF PRAYER IN KOREA.

Korea has only been open to foreigners five years. Missionaries have been here but a little over three years, but there are already two organised native churches, with a membership of almost fifty, in this city. At the time of the Week of Prayer several of our Christians inquired as to the reason for the foreigners meeting every night of the week. When told, they seemed pleased with the idea, and suggested that at the Korean New Year the native Christians should unite in a week of prayer. Such a suggestion was hailed with joy, and arrangements were made accordingly. The Korean New Year began Feb. 12, and from that day to Feb. 20, inclusive, we met every night. For one half the meetings Koreans were appointed as leaders, the missionaries taking the other nights.

It was indeed a blessed season for us all. All seemed anxious to testify for the Lord and to unite in praying for a blessing. It did us good and gave us much encouragement to see their earnestness as they prayed for their country, their king, the other countries of the world, and as they asked God to bless the "foreigners who had come to teach them." We closed the week with the administration of the Lord's Supper, and all felt that it had been a blessed time.

The services stirred our men up to more activity. They have been continually bringing others to us. Our numbers are fast increasing, and, as we see the doors that are so fast opening to usefulness, we say, "Who is sufficient for these things?" From north, south, east, and west come requests for baptism. In the north alone there are over fifty applicants for baptism, and hundreds of adherents. Work is plenty on all hands, but labourers are few. Our hands are not tied by the Government, we are not fettered by the enemies of Christ; but our hands are tied and we are fettered by the Church of Christ not sending us help. While the Government is nominally opposed to us, it winks at what we are doing. The Romish Church is active here, with a strong force of missionaries. Though opposed to their doctrines, I must concede that some of the most reliable and trustworthy Koreans that I have met have been members of the Romish Church. They have a large following, and if the Protestant Church is not active, we shall ere long awake to find that we have a Romish and not a heathen people to convert in Korea.

THE PAPAL RESCRIPT:

A Bid for the Government of the British Empire.

By Rev. Dr. WYLIE, Edinburgh.

WE have all heard of the Rescript which the Pope has lately issued condemning the methods employed by the National League of Ireland—viz., "Boycotting" and the "Plan of Campaign." That Rescript professes to be a solemn judgment on a great question of National Ethics. That, at least, is the form in which it has been put before the world, and that is the character to which it lays claim. I venture to affirm, however, that its real character is different from its apparent one; that while professing to minister guidance to the people of Ireland, it, in reality, offers direction to the people of the three kingdoms, their rulers included. In a word, it is a bid for the Government of the British Empire.

Some will say this is to put a very uncharitable construction upon the matter. Why should not Rome make her voice to be heard on the side of law and order without incurring the suspicion of being actuated by sinister motives and selfish and ambitious aims? Why should we not weigh her in the same scales in which we weigh others, and in which we should wish ourselves to be weighed? We wish we were able to do so. Rome has herself to blame if we cannot. Her past history is singularly barren in acts of pure beneficence. Seldom has she espoused the just quarrel simply because it was the just quarrel. I know of no society of equal size with the Church of Rome, possessing the same vast influence and enjoying so many brilliant opportunities of profiting mankind and building up the world, to which, nevertheless, the world owes so little. Who kept Italy disunited for ages? Who was THE GREAT FOMENTER OF QUARRELS AND WARS in the middle ages, setting monarch against monarch, and kingdom against kingdom, that she might grow strong through their weakness? Who paved the way for the partition of Poland? Who kindled the war of the Sonderbund within living memory? and who instigated the raids we have witnessed just the other day in Madagascar and China? History points the finger in all these cases to Rome. And now when she suddenly assumes the character of an upholder of law and a healer of breaches; when she rushes in betwixt the English Government and the Irish party, holding aloft, not the torch which she carried to Madagascar and China, but the olive-branch of peace, we must be excused if we stand in doubt of her. Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes.

You will allow me to state my reasons why I am not able to think better of this Rescript, and why I look upon it as an insertion of the thin edge of the wedge in order to grasp the moral supremacy, and by consequence the political supremacy also, of our whole Empire. The first element in the question, and the first doubtless to be taken into account in the Vatican when the matter was there debated and decided upon, is the position of the Papacy as regards the British throne. Is it near it, or is it still a long way distant from it? This must have had an important bearing on the decision of the Vatican. Thirty-six years ago, in an assembly of her bishops in Dublin, Rome proclaimed that the throne WAS THE SUPREME OBJECT OF HER AMBITION, that this must be her final goal, and that her agitation could have no end till this goal had been reached. Ever since that day Rome has been occupied in ceaseless efforts to open her way to our throne. She has been manipulating our laws, she has been abrogating one enactment after another, and so removing everything which was a hindrance to herself, and a security to us. Not long ago she made a change in the oath of allegiance—a vital change, I take it. That change, in my opinion, removes the keystone from the arch of the Protestant settlement, and weakens and shatters the whole fabric, so that I am not sure but that, as lawyers say, you may drive a coach and six through it. Well, then, the position of the Papacy in Britain is that it is within measurable distance of the throne. You can easily see what effect this consideration must have had in the decision of the Vatican. Here are two parties, the English Government and the Irish faction. The question is, to which of these two parties the papacy will give the benefit of decision. If it back up the Irish agitators, will it not lose all that it has gained by the labours of these thirty-six years? Would it not be folly and madness to throw itself back, no one knows how far, when it is within sight of the goal? Whereas, if it take the side of the Government, may it not, by a service so opportune, reach its goal at a single leap? And, if that does not happen, will it not make a long stride toward it? The case is a clear one. The politic thing is to let the little Irish party shift for itself, and meanwhile to take part with the British Government, and fight on the side of the biggest battalion.

The second consideration in the question is the state of parties at this hour all over Europe. The eyes that look forth from the Vatican see further, and pierce deeper—much further and much deeper—than do the eyes of ordinary politicians. They see not only all that is going on in the earth, they see all that is going on under it. Their eyes pierce to the forces that are working at the foundations of human society. These forces to them are naked and open. They know how the current of opinion sets in all countries; and they can guide it to their own ends. They know that there is A WAR OF SPIRITS AND PRINCIPLES raging at this hour in Christendom, and that that war gathers strength and fierceness from one day to another. They see in this great commotion a tide in the affairs of the world, which, taken at the flood, may carry them to fortune; but if they let the flood recede, they shall lose their venture, and all the rest of their voyage may be amid shallows and quicksands. Rome makes haste, therefore, to improve the crisis, by presenting herself to the nations as a heaven-sent arbiter of their quarrels. She sees that AUTHORITY IS FALLEN IN THE EARTH; that there is no daysman, and she assumes the office by posing as a great moral power which works for law and righteousness. Addressing herself to both the Governments and the populations, parted at this hour by a deep gulf, Rome says to them: Accept of my mediation, I will soon close the gulf that divides you; I will soon hush the din of your jarrings and contentions. You see how equitable my decision has been in this Irish quarrel, and how willingly the clergy and their flocks have acquiesced in my sentence. Your Protestantism is a weak thing; it cannot do for you what I am able to do for you. Your Protestantism has no common centre where its forces may rally and unite and work together; it has no great mouth, no one pre-eminently grand organ, through which it can speak with authority and power, and be listened to by the masses; it has no such means of compelling obedience as I possess. My anathema makes kings tremble on their throne, and terrifies unruly and rebellious nations into submission. Take the religion that can govern the masses: that is what you need at this hour. Take the religion that is best for both worlds. Take mine.

That is the language of this Rescript. That is its language, in the first place, to the Government and people of Britain; and that is its language, in the second place, to the nationalities of Europe.

WITHOUT CONSCIENCE.

Another consideration to be taken into account is that Rome pursues her aims, whatever they may be, with the full consent of her conscience. This gives an unfettered freedom and force to her action. The grand maxim that guides her policy is "the greater glory of God." Translated into fact, that means "the greater good of the Church." These two things are one and the same, as seen from her standpoint. She is a Divine vicegerency; she stands at the head of human society: so does it appear to her. She is here to govern the world absolutely and infallibly in both spirituals and temporals. That may appear to us a scheme of GIGANTIC AMBITION AND SATANIC WICKEDNESS; and the accomplishment of it would inevitably sink the nations into intellectual and moral vassalage. But not so does it appear to her. She deems it righteous and holy; and, were she to desist from the prosecution of it, she would prove herself an apostate from her grand mission, and would uplift her deepest and strongest principles. She is fighting, she believes, for God's ordinance of governing the world; and whatever the blood that may be spilt in that conflict, and whatever the misery and ruin it may entail on individuals or nations, that will not give her a moment's concern, nor have the weight of a feather when weighed against the far more exceeding and lasting weight of happiness and good her triumph will bring with it to the world. That is how Rome views the matter; her cause is the one holy cause on earth, and she fights for it with a courage, a hopefulness, and a force which such a consciousness only can inspire. Little do those who say that Rome is changed imagine that in so saying they are offering her an insult when they think they are paying her a compliment.

Once more: let us think what scope and verge, what a boundless latitude of action, Rome's moral standpoint gives her. Her moral standpoint, I have said, is "the greater glory of God," that is, "the greater good of the Church." This opens the whole world as a field for the exercise of her arts and policy. Her methods have now been matured and carried to the highest possible perfection. Her policy is at once cautious and bold; subtil and practical; and while not overlooking the matters of the passing day and hour, with a terrible sagacity and prepares for victories to be won long after those who have planned them shall have been sleeping in the grave. Statesmen of towering genius have arisen at times in the management of secular kingdoms, but it has been the rare felicity of Rome to be favoured with such statesmen all along. And what gives them exceptional facilities in steering the bark of Peter is that they have a code of morals so exceedingly elastic in deciding points of policy, that they are not troubled with the niceties and distinctions which beset the deliberations of those who must walk by the old Decalogue, which does not expand and contract like that of Rome, but retains the same unbending stringency as when given from Sinai four thousand years ago.

When the pilots on board Peter's bark are called to decide such a question as that on which the Pope gave his decision lately, it is not necessary that they should go into the abstract right or wrong of the matter. The ethics of the question do not lie there at all. No doubt a Commissioner was sent to Ireland. Months were spent in investigations, and a report was sent to Rome of what was well known before; but all this, I venture to say, was to cast dust in the eyes of the people of Britain. The point to be determined was whether it was better to back up a strong government or to back up the Irish party. That settled, the point of duty was settled; the right line of action was settled; for manifestly it was "for the greater glory of God"—that is, "the greater good of the Church"—that Rome should triumph with the strong than that she should be defeated with the weak.

Well, then, after long hesitation, forth comes her decree. A Protestant would have gone straight to the Decalogue, and, finding that it condemns murder and robbery as sins, he would have made up his mind at once. But infallibility works slowly: after years, we say, of investigating, and weighing, and debating, Rome has at last stamped her condemnation on boycotting and the Plan of Campaign. Well, then, Rome has placed her solemn judgment on record that to force one to support an organisation of which he disapproves is a sin: that to break engagements and stipulations one has freely entered into, or so to isolate a human being as to inflict starvation or death upon him, is a sin. Most people will agree with Rome, although it is not quite a new discovery in morals. It is as old as the Ten Commandments. But, we ask, Has not Rome in issuing this decree laid herself open to the rebuke: "Wherein thou judgest another thou condemnest thyself"? Who was the first inventor and and who was the first to use that mean and cowardly weapon of destruction—boycotting? These are no new things in history: they were largely resorted to five hundred years ago. I sympathise with Mr. Parnell when he modestly declines the honour of being accounted the author of the Plan of Campaign. No; verily he is not. It has a more distinguished parentage. It was in full swing ages before he was born. Nor is Ireland the land of its birth. These things are of Catholic origin. We owe these humane inventions to Rome! Perhaps she did not think of that when she issued her decision. It is a fact, nevertheless. Unless history be a fable, she was the great boycotter of the middle ages. Only she gave the art an ecclesiastical name: she called it excommunication, and accompanied it with some curious rites of dread and sacred significancy, known as "bell, book, and candle." It was boycotting, nevertheless, and boycotting of the most terrible description. The person who was thus "boycotted" was severed from all living; no one durst give him a morsel of bread or a drop of water. Even the last refuge of the miserable was denied him—a grave.

And as regards the Plan of Campaign, Who is ignorant that this plan was practised for ages by Rome, and on a scale of vast magnitude and frightful severity? When a landlord or a monarch was suspected of what Rome was pleased to call heresy, straightway this identical machinery—the Plan of Campaign—was put into operation against him, to effect his submission, or else his destruction. All the ties that bound tenants to landlords, and subjects to their sovereign were at once broken.

BARGAINS, STIPULATIONS, COVENANTS,

all were annulled. Christendom was under the Plan of Campaign for ages. Scarce is there a kingdom in Europe which has not had at one time or other to hold up its torn treaties, and protest in the sight of Heaven and before the world, against Rome which had not scrupled to throw oaths and promises to the winds, for "the greater glory of God." John Huss had a safe-conduct to Constance and back; nevertheless, the Court of Rome would not permit the Emperor Sigismund to keep his plighted faith; and despite his safe-conduct, Huss, as we all know, was burned. And not only so, the men who burned Huss put the whole Plan of Campaign into a single short formula, when they decreed that "By no law, natural or divine, is faith to be kept with heretics to the prejudice of the Catholic faith." What was the St. Bartholomew massacre: what the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes: what the Irish massacre of 1641: but the Plan of Campaign on a magnificent scale and superlative but appalling grandeurs—a scale which the Irish Nationalists have never even dreamed of rivalling, and which throws the boldest of their attempts utterly into the shade? What were the thirty persecutions of the Waldenses, which resulted in the devastation of their lovely valleys and the destruction of their noble nation, of which there were counted only four hundred survivors? What but the Plan of Campaign, carried out with a

and with deeds of so horrible a kind that they will not bear recital.

And now it pleases the Pope to condemn, when practised by others, what he himself claimed a monopoly of for ages. We must suppose that the Pope has repented, and that when he wrote his Rescript condemning the Plan of Campaign he was clad in sackcloth and sat in ashes. But let us make sure that his repentance is genuine. Divines tell us that there are some who repent of the sins of others, but not of their own. They have floods of tears at their command when it is their neighbour's transgression, but not a tear nor a word of condemnation when it is their own transgression. Divines tell us, too, that there is a legal repentance—a repentance which does not spring from hatred of the sin, but is inspired by the hope of advantage. I should like to know what the Pope is to have for the help tendered to the Government, and

WHAT THIS RESCRIPT IS TO COST THE NATION.

I am not in the secrets of the Cabinet, far less am I in the secrets of the Vatican, and do not know what may have been whispered behind the folded doors of these two council chambers. But it has not been the wont of Rome to bestow favours on Governments without expecting equal if not greater favours in return. Time, which brings all hidden things to light, will bring this also to light. Meanwhile, we wait.

There is one other point on which I should like to say a word. There is an attempt at this hour by both parties to distinguish betwixt politics and religion. This it is thought will extricate them from the dilemma into which the Rescript has brought both. Rome may allow her underlings to set up this defence, but she herself dare not. It is heresy. In her ethical category politics are unknown as a distinct department of morals. Politics are comprehended in morals. The teaching of Rome is that every action a man does is moral or immoral, and, therefore, every action of man is subject to the infallible direction of the Pope. Irish Catholics are as much bound to take their politics from Rome, as they are bound to take their religion from Rome. They must do this, or throw off the yoke of Rome altogether. I am waiting with no little interest to see which alternative they will choose.

There was a time, according to the legend, when the horse roamed the wilderness without restraint of curb or rider. In an evil hour for himself he permitted man to mount him. From that moment his freedom was at end. Rome is coquetting with us for the same end. Ireland is the stirrup by which she hopes to mount into the saddle of the Empire. Once installed in that lofty seat, and her irons spurs in our flanks, we shall bitterly rue the day when we exchanged British liberty for Roman direction. Better, a hundred times better than carry such a rider, go to the Lollards' pit and be burned.

HER BRIDLE IN OUR MOUTH,

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

The annual meetings in connection with the twenty-second anniversary of the China Inland Mission were held on Tuesday, last week, in the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. They had been preceded by gatherings for prayer, and accordingly proved successful in the highest sense. "Glory to God" was the key-note of the entire proceedings; it was alike the grand motive, and the glorious theme. Mr. George Williams presided over the afternoon meeting, which opened in a right hearty manner.

A truly cheering statement concerning home affairs was made by Mr. B. Broomhall, secretary. The income during last year was half as much again as in 1886, the amount being £33,700. Twelve months ago prayer went up to God for a hundred more labourers. Those prayers were answered in devoted and qualified men and women entering the field. By meetings held in various parts, and publications widely circulated, interest in the work had greatly increased. Among new developments, Mr. Broomhall mentioned improved arrangements for the training of candidates for mission work, the opening of a Home at Cambridge for such candidates as may wish to have the educational advantages afforded by a brief stay there, and the fact that land has been bought on which to erect much-needed additional rooms for various purposes in connection with the organisation. These buildings are not to be erected with Mission money, but with funds specially given for the purpose, when forthcoming.

PRINCIPLES AND TESTIMONY.

In the course of a few remarks, the Chairman described the year as a remarkable one, in the prosperity of which he saw cause for much rejoicing. He expressed his great interest in an organisation so truly catholic in its spirit and principles as the China Inland Mission, and so wholly consecrated to the Lord in courageous testimony.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, director of the Mission, spoke of the work in China. He began by praising God, went on to relate incidents magnifying his holy name, and closed an address all aglow with gratitude, by again extolling the Father of Mercies. "What hath God wrought!" was a joyful exclamation, uttered with loving awe and thought upon in humbleness of spirit. After acknowledging the goodness of God in providing workers of such excellent character and capacity as the hundred who recently went out, and also in supplying all the money that was needed for carrying on the work, Mr. Taylor said that twenty-two years have now passed since, with others, he sailed (May 22, 1866) from London to China to found the Inland Mission. Then there were no Protestant mission stations in ten or eleven of the provinces; to-day, there are five hundred more missionaries in China than there were then, and this without counting missionaries' wives. The Mission staff numbers 294, including over fifty missionaries' wives, most of whom were missionaries before marriage. The work of the Mission is carried on in fifteen provinces; in a sixteenth it is itinerant, but constant and steady. There are resident missionaries in sixty-four stations; there are sixty-five out-stations, and 110 chapels in which the word of God is statedly preached; and the native helpers number 132. Some of the workers are self-supporting, or supported by native Christians—probably between twenty and thirty. Having given further details, showing among other things that during last year 551 souls were added to the Church, and altogether considerably over 4000 persons have been converted during the entire twenty-two years through the instrumentality of the Mission, Mr. Taylor spoke of the blessing which the Training Institution at Gan-k'ing has proved to the now famous "hundred," and asked for the continued solicitude of Christians at the Throne of Grace.

Dr. Wilson, from Han-chung, delivered an address on medical mission work, as carried on in the interior of China. The foreigner is greatly suspected by the people, and the first thing for the Christian settler is to live down prejudice by showing that his purpose is a benevolent one. In the meantime, endeavours are made to instruct those who avail themselves of the hospital or dispensary treatment. Later on, when the community realises the value of the stranger's services, it may decide to recognise them in some way. Dr. Wilson was so honoured, some twenty-five of the leading citizens waiting upon him with a tablet which he was expected to kneel down and worship in return for sundry spoken compliments. Then was, of course, the time for an explicit testimony for the God of heaven, and it was made clear to the distinguished natives that the missionary could only adore the one true God in whose service he had taken up residence far away from his home and kindred. A hymn of praise to the Almighty for medical and other mercies was then suggested by the missionary, and the representative Chinese responded by singing with him in the spirit of the well-known stanza beginning, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." Dr. Wilson told with joy of the evident appreciation of medical missions in the country, and explained some of the methods used in preaching.

GOD POINTS THE WAY.

Rev. E. O. Williams, M.A., late vicar of St. Stephen's, Leeds, who is about to leave for China, was the next speaker, and his address made a marked impression upon the audience. It was the simple story of how he came to determine upon a missionary career after having for some years been engaged in home work. God recently brought to his memory words which he heard twelve or fourteen years ago while at Oxford University, that we should not ask ourselves the question, "Why should I go to the heathen?" but rather, "Why should I not go?" Another thing that lately struck him was an extract from a letter written by the late Dr. Schofield. Some said to the doctor, "Do you believe, Dr. Schofield, that you have really got a call from God to go to China?" Dr. Schofield went out; and when he saw the needs of the millions, and the openings for work, he wrote back and said he believed the right answer to give to the question was to ask another, thus: "Do you believe you have a call from God to stop at home?" These two considerations have been used of God to alter Mr. Williams's course of life; and, the change having been decided upon, the way has been made wonderfully plain. Attending a Conference at Wakefield, Mr. Williams was pressed with engagements. Desiring to accompany a friend to a meeting elsewhere, he entered the Conference hall to get his hat. Just as he was fetching it, a few minutes' quiet was requested; it was the close of a consecration meeting, and the presence of God's Spirit was very manifest. Those present were urged to ask God to use them for his glory—to put them to whatsoever use He might wish. They were told that if they wanted to be filled with the Spirit, they must put themselves entirely into his hands. That brief period was a very solemn one. Two missionary meetings followed, and at the close an opportunity was given for those to declare their mind who were willing to go abroad, if God wanted them. If the transaction in the morning meant anything, he himself was willing to go, if God wanted him, and therefore he could not keep his hands down. He declared himself willing, and the way has since been made perfectly plain.

A vigorous address was delivered by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. He testified his profound thankfulness to God for the principles of the China Inland Mission, and expressed a sincere desire that the churches would take them to heart. He urged reliance on God to provide for the carrying on of his work. The hindrances of the Church are not outside but within. God can fight the devil; the point where the devil gains his victory is in un-Christlike Christians. For the Church to devote her strength and eloquence to getting together money to carry on God's work, is to incur great peril; it indicates a notion that the rich man is worth more than the good man, and wealth more than piety. There is human nature in this, but what the Church wants is more of Christ's nature. The more than questionable methods which have been adopted by some to get money for religious purposes were shown to indicate a spirit far different from that of Apostolic times, and God was praised for raising up such a standard as the China Inland Mission, whereby testimony is borne to the fact that the cause of Christ is laid upon the whole Church, and that no man discharges his duty who does not take his part. Mr. Pearse said, with much earnestness, that when he thought of the Mission's way of laying hold of men in the freshness of their life and in the warmth of their enthusiasm, he almost wished he could be a young man again, in order that he might be loosed from other claims, and leap forth into opportunities which a Mission like this offers, to those who are desirous of doing something worthy of service for the Lord Jesus Christ. In conclusion, he made some cogent remarks upon selfishness, and urged his hearers to whole-hearted work for God.

A CALL FOR WORKERS.

The evening meeting was presided over by Mr. T. A. Denny, who spoke in high terms of the Mission and in eulogy of its devoted agents. There would, no doubt, be more blessing on the exertions put forth, were it not for the great discrepancy between the missionary's teaching and the Englishman's life. The Chinese may certainly be in some measure excused, if, in view of the opium traffic and the patronage of drink and nameless sins by the English nation, they say, "If these are the outcome of Christianity, I think I am better without it."

Rev. F. W. Baller, from Gan-k'ing, gave a deeply interesting account of the mode of life of "the hundred" who are in course of training. The Institute is a Home, not a College, and its regulations are all framed in the spirit of earnest piety. A large number of the party have been under Mr. Baller's care, and he was glad to report that they had made remarkable progress in their preparatory studies. With regard to the Chinese language, he incidentally said that two mistakes are current respecting its acquisition—one that it is very easy, another that it is very difficult. The fact, however, is that no man or woman of ordinary capacity and with a purpose need be at all discouraged; for, living in China, the difficulties may be most certainly overcome. He added that it is necessary to have a native teacher, as it is well nigh impossible to learn the language properly without imitating the natives. During the past twelve months there has not been a single cross word in the Institute; all are animated with one spirit, and have one desire, and, consequently, differences of opinion are not allowed to stand in the way, or impede the work of Christ. The new comers make it their business to distribute tracts and so forth, even before understanding anything of the language. In conclusion, Mr. Baller said that he was certain that, in a short time, much fruit would be seen of the seed that is at present being sown in China.

Mr. G. B. Studd thanked God for having directed his steps to one of the mission houses, where the Lord Jesus graciously met with him. He spoke of the pressing needs of China, and said that as workers are treading on each other's heels in England, where half the people are Gospel hardened, it would be well if the claims of China were more considered than they are, now that doors are being opened on all hands.

Dr. Grattan Guinness gave expression to his great sympathy with the work of the Mission. He praised God for thrusting forth labourers, and urged those to whom a call might come not to hesitate in obeying. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor followed with a statement as to Christian progress in China, and an exhortation to his hearers to discern the will of God in relation to the heathen world, and their opportunities of spreading the light. Again he acknowleged the great goodness of God in encouraging those who sought to discharge their duty in the work of evangelisation.

Rev. GEORGE NICOLL, from China, spoke of the apparent activity of Roman Catholics in some parts of the Empire. Rev. G. W. Clarke, who has travelled a great deal in the Empire, referred to the value of woman's work. He had, however, never seen a Romish sister of mercy in the interior. Rev. Samuel R. Clarke, of Chen-tu, enlarged upon the spiritual desolation, and declared that he had never met with a missionary who regretted going to China.

The very impressive proceedings were brought to a close with prayer by Mr. R. Radcliffe, who earnestly petitioned for more labourers to be sent forth into the harvest, and for the lifting of the veil which at present hangs over many of the nations of the world.

Friends of the Mission will be interested to learn the fact mentioned at the meeting, that the well-known Mr. C. T. Studd was recently married to Miss Priscilla L. Stewart, also connected with the Mission. The marriage ceremony was conducted by a native pastor at H.B.M. Consulate, Tientsin, a couple of Chinese Christians being wedded at the same time.

SUMMER REST FOR CITY TOILERS.

"WHERE shall we go this summer?" is now an oft-repeated question with many. But in our great city there are many to whom change of season brings little change of scene! To them there is the same work-a-day life of toil and hardship. None command our practical sympathy more in this respect than the factory girls, of whom there are nearly 300,000 in the Metropolis, at work from 8 a.m to 7 or 8 p.m. Months of rest are needed to restore the shattered frames and exhausted energies of those suffering in health from semi-starvation and over-work, but thankful would they often be to secure a fortnight's change, or even a day in the country. More than a few days' absence from work often means loss of place in a workroom or factory, and this is generally to be borne with the additional trial of a comfortless home, or a wretched lodging.

The Y.W.C.A. Convalescent Sick-Aid and Holiday Department reaches every class, from teachers and shop-assistants to factory and laundry girls. This department represents now the Factory Helpers' Union, as well as for the Y.W.C.A. It is in communication with the local workers of both agencies, who know the girls personally, and who recommend the most necessitous. Four hundred and forty-five of these tired workers were sent away last summer to our Y.W.C.A. and other Convalescent and Cottage Homes. Their gratitude was most touching, and many are now reaping the benefit of those happy days.

For the necessities of the work this summer help is desired either by money contributions, by providing free invitations for teachers, shop-assistants, work-room girls, &c., for a few weeks' stay at private country houses, or by putting deserted farmhouses or village schools near London or other manufacturing towns at the disposal of the department rent free. The Hon. Sec. is Miss F. M. Fraser, 30, Onslow Gardens, London, S.W.

SWITZERLAND.—A Bible-reading will be held every Tuesday, at three o'clock, at Mr. Cheyne Brady's, Châlet Feuz, Grindelwald, Switzerland.

CITY YOUTHS AT THE SEASIDE.—A summer camp is to be pitched on the sand hills at Ansdell, near Lytham, in connection with the Boys' Refuge, Strangeways, Manchester. Boys will be given a week under canvas, and while enjoying the advantages of sea-bathing, they will be under military discipline and drill. These are conditions likely to afford the lads much pleasure, and likewise to contribute to their future good. Mr. Henry Charlton, Blackfriars, Manchester, is the treasurer.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

THE twelfth anniversary of this Mission was celebrated on Tuesday evening, last week, at the Mission Institute, in Henrietta-street, Covent-garden. This is a handsome building, admirably adapted for its purpose, and provides, amongst other advantages, a playroom for the pantomime children; a large room for the older girls, fitted with buffet; a gymnasium for the boys and youths of the theatrical profession; free lending libraries, &c.

The meeting last week was attended by a large number of friends and supporters of the good work, and was a happy one throughout, the room in which it was held being gaily decorated with flags and bunting, and presenting a lively aspect. After some singing and prayer the first item on the programme was the unveiling of a bust of Macready, the eminent tragedian, whose widow, it may be mentioned, takes a deep interest in the work of this Mission. This was to have been done by Mrs. Kendal, the well-known actress, but she, being unable to be present, the ceremony was performed by a pretty maiden of twelve years of age, who, in the course of a neat little speech, which she had evidently taken some pains to compose, said: "I am sure Macready House is a very suitable title for this building, as the name of the great actor is a household word in the profession, and his career of Christian kindness, integrity, and high principle, in public life and in private, as a father and a friend, is worthy of remembrance." It was pointed out that Macready's efforts to reform the stage proved a failure, and that, on his retirement, he came to the conclusion that the regeneration by God's Spirit of individual actors and actresses was the only true work. He devoted his after years to works of Christian benevolence, the last words written in his diary being "God be merciful to me a sinner," "Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief."

After this, Mr. COURTHOPE TODD, founder and director, gave some interesting information concerning the operations of the Mission. It is conducted in a thoroughly catholic and unsectarian spirit, and aims at reaching with the Gospel every theatrical employé at home and abroad, and Mr. Todd said he considered this one of the most hopeful branches of Christian work. During the past twelvemonth the Institute had been made use of by more than 54,000 members of the theatrical profession, including persons of all nationalities. In this country there are said to be 60,000 persons connected with the stage. Many who have attended the Institute have been led to the Saviour, and much good has been effected in cases of rescue and preventive work; and Mr. Todd said he could look back on the past twelve years with thankfulness and gratitude to God for the blessing He has bestowed on the work.

The address of Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES was mainly an earnest appeal for funds to clear off the debt of £2300 remaining on the building. He said the ultimate object of this house was so distinctly Christian that they must depend almost entirely for monetary help upon Christian people. There is no class of persons so needing Christian help and counsel as those whom this Mission seeks to influence. The more anyone objects to the theatre himself, the more he ought to influence for good those engaged on the stage.

After a few words from Mr. W. C. Collins, one of the workers, who heartily backed up Mr. Hughes' appeal, Rev. S. F. Cumberlege, rector of St. Paul's, Covent Garden, presented Bibles to two little girls for regular attendance at the Institute, and the meeting closed with the National Anthem. During the evening a choir of little theatrical children sang very sweetly a number of Gospel hymns; and solos were rendered by Miss Mary Morgan, R.A.M., and the Misses Amanda and Lauranah Aldridge; the two latter are old members of the Institute.

THE HOMESTEAD, SANDGATE.

THIS latest addition to the Convalescent Homes in Sandgate of the London Samaritan Society was formally opened on Saturday last. Delightfully situated in its own grounds at a little distance back from the high road and the sea, the house is in every respect suitable and well appointed. Its advantages are exclusively at the disposal of women and girls, and it has accommodation for fifty-two patients.

Like the other Homes of the Society, this receives patients from all parts of the country, and it is to be hoped that its abundant resources will be availed of by very many to whom a sojourn by the sea will prove a timely blessing. The excellence of the management of all the Society's Homes is well known, and there are ample reasons for believing that The Homestead will be as useful as its sister institutions.

Sir Charles Keyes presided over the proceedings on Saturday. In a brief statement, Mr. J. J. Jones, director, gave an account of the work. In every development nothing is done until the money is all in hand, and so this latest Home is opened entirely without debt. The four Homes provide for 185 patients, men, women, and children, and it is just likely that another house may soon be secured in Bournemouth, and the work still further extended.

Lady Keyes having declared the Home opened, Mr. J. Lowles, trustee of the Spurstowe Charity, Hackney, mentioned that returned patients speak very highly of the Homes of the Society, and the kindly attention they receive therein. Rev. Russell Wakefield, vicar of Sandgate, intimated his appreciation of the Institution, and his desire to support it in any way in his power.

Details of the several departments of the Society's work are given in a pamphlet, "A Brief Narrative," recently published, and obtainable from Mr. John James Jones, 98, High-street, Homerton, London, E., to whom all communications should be addressed.

EAST LONDON.—The East London Evangelisation Society and London Lodging-house Mission held their annual meeting in the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, last week. In the course of the year the Society's agents held 734 services in various chapels and mission halls, and 820 Gospel services were held at lodging-houses in Spitalfields, Ratcliff, St. George's, Westminster, and Limehouse. During the winter months free breakfasts have been given to 1500 destitute persons, and 1,196,340 tracts were distributed in the streets and lodging-houses. After one free breakfast at Westminster, twenty-five men signed the temperance pledge, and of these all but one had kept it. Thirteen young women have been rescued from a life of sin, and placed in Homes, or restored to their parents, and three men have been started again with a small stock of saleable goods. The Society has no paid agents, all being voluntary workers, and representing all denominations of evangelical Christians.

EXPULSION OF REV. J. JONES FROM MARE.—Last week Lord Salisbury received a deputation, consisting of directors of the London Missionary Society, several members of Parliament, and representatives of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the Baptist and Wesleyan Missionary Societies, relative to the expulsion from the Island of Maré (Loyalty Group), South Pacific, by the French authorities, of Rev. J. Jones. Lord Brassey and Dr. Wardlaw Thompson having spoken, Lord Salisbury, in replying, said he was sure all people who are interested in the spread of religion and the maintenance of religious liberty would feel that much sympathy is due to Mr. Jones. He was convinced there could be no wish on the part of those who constituted the French Government in Paris to bear hardly, merely on the ground of religious differences, on gentlemen who had done and borne what Mr. Jones had. His lordship assured the deputation that, representing the question as a matter of friendliness, Her Majesty's Government would very earnestly urge the French Government to put upon paper what they accused Mr. Jones of.

BELIEVERS AT DUBLIN.

The "Meetings of Believers" at Merrion Hall seem to increase in interest and profit each succeeding year. A fresh voice was heard at the gatherings held last week—namely, that of Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow; and very helpful his words proved to be.

Another special feature was the presence of Mrs. Grattan Guinness, Miss Macpherson, and Miss Gurney, who were invited to tell of the work which the Lord has given them to do. Amongst others from a distance were Lord Radstock, Revs. W. Fuller Gooch and J. Wilkinson, Dr. Anderson, Dr. McKilliam, Pastor Rohrbach (Berlin), Messrs. C. Faithfull (Marseilles), Henry Groves, Shuldham Henry, Russell Hurditch, Charles Inglis, W. R. Lane, J. McVicker, T. Miller, &c. Much sympathy was felt for Miss Macpherson in her anxiety for the safety of the s.s. Sardinian, which had a large company of her little ones on board, and had lost its propeller; and it was with great relief that the tidings arrived on Thursday morning that they had reached Halifax in safety.

A very noticeable characteristic of the meetings was the large number of soldiers present, a silent but forcible testimony to the excellent work of Miss Fry amongst them.

A reception and prayer-meeting was held on Monday evening, May 28, and here, as well as at the subsequent early morning gatherings, the power of prayer and fellowship was strongly felt.

TUESDAY.

A letter was read from Mr. Denham Smith, whose classification of the occurrence in Scripture of the word "Nevertheless" bore a touching interest as coming from his sick chamber. Telegrams of sympathy were dispatched to him and to Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, replies to which were subsequently received.

The morning topic, "Spiritual Life in its Relation to the Present Times," was opened by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, who read John vi. 53—71. The great distinction between the children of God and the world is that they possess spiritual life (1 John v. 12). This does not merely consist in a place on the church roll, nor in outward profession, nor ritual, nor knowledge, nor even high morals, but it is life. This life is spiritual, because it is begotten of the Spirit of God, and is the life of our spirit bringing it into living contact with God. This spiritual life is our choicest possession, because it is God's choicest gift, it is "the life which is life indeed" (1 Tim. vi. 19, R.V.). Its fulness and force are essential to our joy, and our power for service (John x. 10). Its preservation and growth should employ our constant thought, be our first aim. It is because of its extreme importance that our spiritual life becomes the chief object of attack from the world, the flesh, and the devil. It is the key of the position; let our spiritual life begin to wane, and conformity with the world and sin are sure to follow. The "last days" of our dispensation are specially linked with "perilous times," on account of the spiritual declension by which they are marked. A low ebb of spiritual life inevitably leads to a full tide of temptation, and incentive to evil.

To-day we have to face especial dangers and difficulties in relation to Spiritual Life. These are: (a) Spiritual decline (Matt. xxiv. 12.; Rev. ii. 4; iii. 14—16). (b) Worldly conformity (Luke xvii. 26; xxi. 34), in spite of our Lord's declaration that his people are to form an unworldly community (John xvii. 16, 18). (c) Apostasy from the faith (1 Tim. iv. 1—6; 2 Tim. iv. 1—4), which comprises the exaltation of intellect at the expense of the spiritual truths of the Atonement, Inspiration, Regeneration, and, indeed, Spiritual Life itself. (d) False spiritualism (seducing spirits) and a transcendental form of presenting the spiritual life, such as extreme and erroneous views of sanctification, &c. (e) The elevation of externals, as found in the Ritualistic and Romanising tendencies of the day. (f) A decreasing sense of the "exceeding sinfulness of sin," by the substitution of such euphonious terms as "misfortune," "human weakness," "errors of judgment," &c. (g) A weakening of faith in God and in Christ as the direct and supreme workers in every sphere (John v. 17). Elimination of the supernatural wherever possible, substituting "Natural Law" and secondary causes for God Himself.

To meet and conquer these perils, are necessary: (a) More intimate acquaintance with God's Word. (b) Closer communion with Christ Himself. (c) More of the unction of the Holy Ghost. (d) More definiteness, firmness, and boldness in our stand for God and his truth (Acts iv. 31).

Following this, Dr. Anderson read Rev. iii. 7—13. While the evils which marked the seven churches differed in each, they were in every case in the current of thought and action prevailing in the particular community in which the churches lived. This suggests a reflection of immense importance in relation to our own times, viz., that Christians cannot be unaffected by the social, commercial, political, and philosophical characteristics of the day. These include the low standard of honour and morality in society, the grasping after wealth in trade by dishonest means if otherwise unattainable, the struggle for political power by means no matter how reckless and unprincipled.

Then, with regard to the main waves of thought which mark the science and philosophy of the day, the writings of the acknowledged leaders of science are chiefly characterised by a supercilious attitude towards those who have gone before them; a spirit of blind credulity in accepting conclusions in the line of their own theories, and an obstinate scepticism as regards everything which is outside the sphere of demonstration and experimental proof. Christians cannot be untainted by these characteristics of the time.

Again, there is a loosening of our spiritual relationships; a want of solemnity and high principle in Christian work, grasping after results even by questionable means; and, finally, a decline of faith in Holy Scripture, which is the chief and the saddest characteristic of the Christianity of the day.

Unbelief is generally the result of a leak, as it were; sometimes a seemingly trifling one. Some, for example, turn from the testimony of God as the natural consequence of rejecting Christ, and comfort themselves with partial conceptions of sin. The rival heresies of the non-eternity controversy have been the beginnings of unbelief with thousands. Evolution, again, has made havoc of the faith of thousands of Christian men, although the theory is admittedly unsupported by a single shred of direct proof, and the "science" of the last quarter of a century has tended to refute the objections which earlier scientists urged against the Divine account of the creation.

Christianity rests, not on the facts of the ministry and death of Jesus, but on the person of Christ as Divine. It is not that He died and rose, but that He who thus died and rose was the Son of God, and that He now sits upon the throne of God as man.

Let us see to it, that what the Epistle of Peter calls "the living and eternally abiding Word of God," shall be more and more a light to our feet, a lamp to our path, and the food of our souls; that we may learn increasingly to prize it as "more precious than thousands of gold and silver." And if any are conscious that unbelief has already begun to undermine their spiritual life, that the leak is already sprung, see to it, and turn back to God before it is too late.

Mr. Henry Groves continued the subject, and in the afternoon gave a Bible-reading on the Temptation of Christ.

In the evening Mr. J. McVicker epitomised the Second Epistle of Corinthians, especially noticing the "wonderful parenthesis" from chap. ii. to chap. vii. 2.

Dr. McKilliam spoke from Rom. vi., vii., dwelling upon the necessity and conflict caused by the presence of a sinful nature in the believer, which also manifests the power of God in its conquest. Lord Radstock also spoke.

WEDNESDAY.

Dr. Elder Cumming opened the morning session by a very practical and searching exposition of Matt. v. 1—16, showing (1) Our Lord's picture of the ideal Christian life. (2) Man's failure to manifest it. (3) Christ's remedy for that failure.

The keynote of the "Sermon on the Mount" is blessing, which is promised nine times. It begins with poverty, and ends with persecution; but each is attended with blessing. Poverty, tears, meekness, and hunger are the inward characteristics of the "blessed life"; mercy, purity, peacemaking, and persecution are the outward.

(1) Poor in spirit describes the man who has had such a sight of himself that all the pride is taken out of him. Then follows (2) mourning over what he has seen in himself. (3) Then meekness, or willingness to accept the Lord's remedy. (4) Then hunger and thirst, the realising of a great want, the intense longing after righteousness. Having thus been put right ourselves, we turn to others, and (5) mercy is the natural outcome of a holy life. But this can only be effectively carried out if (6) purity of heart be preserved—an inward growth, commensurate with outward work; and (7) blessed are the peacemakers, those who declare the Gospel of peace to men, and bring them unto God. This sort of life cannot remain exempt from (8) persecution, which is twofold in character; first, "for righteousness' sake," then "for Christ's sake." A holy life is of itself obnoxious to the world, and becomes still more so when lived for the sake of the "despised and rejected of men."

Such a life our Lord goes on to liken to Salt and Light. Salt has two uses: (1) To keep from corruption, (2), to give taste to that which is insipid. The Christian is placed in the midst of a society which is going to corruption and decay. The only power that can save it is individual Christian life; and that life has a savour and an influence which, though undefinable, is nevertheless potent, and produces unmistakable effect.

Light also has two uses: (1) To discover, (2) to guide. The world is full of sin, which must be made manifest; and plunged in darkness, which can only be banished by the shining of the Light of the World, even as the tabernacle itself had no light but from the golden candlestick. And by this light alone can we be guided through the world.

The difference between Salt and Light is that the former must come in close contact with the decaying substance. Light does not, but shines from afar. Our Lord speaks of the salt as losing what it once had—typifying the backslider; while the light, covered with a bushel, may denote a man whose light has never shone forth at all.

The Christian who has lost his savour is no good in the world, even if he does "no harm." He does not "go in" for things of this world, perhaps, nor does he delight in those of the world to come. He is no use for either. The Christian whose light is hid fails in the very object of his existence. Do you shine as a light in the world? "Oh, the world is so very large that my small light produces no effect at all." Let us take a smaller circle then; do you shine amongst the body of believers with whom you associate? "No, I am of a retiring nature, and do not like to bring myself into prominence." Take a smaller circle still then; do you shine in your home? Do your relatives, your children, your servants see the light? "Well, you know the home is a very difficult place in which to let it shine, because every act of one's life is so watched and criticised that I am afraid to make an open profession." Taking then the smallest circle of all; does the light shine brightly in your heart? Is every corner "open to the eyes of Him with whom we have to do?" "Oh, do not speak of my heart; it is the darkest place of all. I am so conscious of sin and failing and shortcoming that I am sometimes afraid to look within at all." But no effort is needed to let the light shine; the effort, if there be any, is to prevent it from doing so. It is natural for it to shine; and it will do so unless it be covered over.

Now, what is the Remedy? This comes after the breaking down with grief at failure, after the meekness at his correction and the putting away of sin in obedience to his will. Thus the Lord puts the hunger and the thirst in the right place, and obedience to all the conditions brings the blessing attached to each, if we yield in the way and in the order which He points out.

Mr. J. Barton, of Dundalk, considered seven passages bearing the words, "Here am I."

(1) Isaiah (chap. vi. 8) readily responded to the call, "Who will go for us?" when he was assured of his fitness for the errand.

(2) Joseph obeyed (Gen. xxxvii. 13) though the errand on which he was sent was a disagreeable one.

(3) Samuel, on hearing the voice (1 Sam. iii. 4), ran to Eli, as the first impulse directed him; and Eli wisely directed him to God. It is right that young Christians should look for teaching and guidance to those older in the faith; but these, in their turn, must point them to the Holy Spirit as the Great Teacher.

(4) Moses (Exod. iii. 4) was a man of great promise, and zealous for God and his people But his zeal was misguided: he slew the Egyptian, and God removed him from active. service for forty years. Thus this most likely man was banished in the prime of his life. What bad judges we are of the circumstances in which God can use us. Oh, for the waiting spirit! "Rest in the Lord; wait patiently for Him." Now, Moses was unwilling to undertake the work.

(5) David (2 Sam. xv. 24—26) is not here called upon to serve, but to suffer; as if he said: "If I never see the throne, or Jerusalem, or the sanctuary again, here am I. Rebelled against by my own son; forsaken by my intimate friend; exiled from home, people, and friends, here am I." This enabled him, when Shimei cursed him, to say, "Slay him not, for the Lord hath bidden." This takes away all bitter, personal feeling; he looked beyond the instrument to the agent—God.

(6) Abraham (Gen. xxii.) followed the guidance of God in offering Isaac, even though it broke his very heart-strings. Are we as ready to give up objects of affection to God, if called upon?

(7) Jacob (Gen. xlvi. 2) was about to go to Egypt to embrace his long-lost, well-beloved son Joseph, and God comes to him in his joy, and gives him a word of comfort.

Lastly, but above all, we have the willingness of Christ to do his Father's will (Ps. xl. 7), "Lo, I come."

Mr. Hurditch followed with some remarks upon Practical Religion from 1 Tim. vi. 6—14, and James i. 16—27; and Mr. G. F. Trench fitly concluded with the prayer, "Let not one stand out; try us and prove us whether we have taken thy yoke or no."

In the afternoon a helpful Bible-reading on "Practical Aspects of Faith" was given by Mr. Fuller Gooch; after which Mr. Wilkinson compared the four attributes of "the Righteous Branch" with the aspects in which the four Evangelists view the life of our Lord. Thus Jer. xxiii. 5 corresponds with Matthew's view of Christ as the Jew, the King of Israel descended from David; Zech. iii. 8, with Mark's view of Him as the Servant; Zech. vi. 12, with Luke's view of Him as the Son of Man; and Isa. iv. 2, with John's view of Him as Son of God. These characteristics of the Evangelists are further illustrated by their respective use of the word "Behold" as applied to Christ. Matthew gives "Behold your King"; Mark, "Behold my Servant"; Luke, "Behold the Man"; John, "Behold your God." Thus is the New Testament enfolded in the Old, and the Old unfolded in the New.

Mr. Wilkinson then showed the probable identity of "the angel of Jehovah" (Judg. xiii. 9) with Christ: (a) vv. 11 and 22 show that He was both man and God (b); ver. 18 (margin) gives his name as "Wonderful," as in Isa. ix. 6; (c) his manner of address can be traced through the Old and New Testaments: "Abraham, Abraham"; "Moses, Moses"; "Samuel, Samuel"; "Martha, Martha"; "Simon, Simon"; "Saul, Saul"; and, as we recognise the voice and manner of our friends, may we not fairly consider these as uttered by the same voice which at last declares itself in "Why persecutest thou Me?"

These little talks were much enjoyed, and a good old woman present unconsciously expressed the feelings of many, when, as Mr. Wilkinson remarked that he had not intended to speak at all, she whispered audibly to her neighbour, "I'm very glad he did, aren't you?"

The subject for the evening was

which was opened by Mr. Wilkinson. Before discussing debated points, it is important to see on what points Christians agree. All sections of the Church believe that Christ is coming again; most believe, in accordance with the assurance given in Acts i. 11, that He will come again "in like manner" as He went into heaven, i.e., personally, literally, visibly, "with clouds." So that the principal question which divides the various schools of thought is merely one of time. There are three great landmarks which are to guide us in ascertaining the time of his coming:—I. The cessation of war; II. the destruction of the Antichrist; III. the conversion of the Jewish nation.

I. Can there be fighting in the Millennium? If not, it must cease before. Under what circumstances will war cease? In Zech. xiv. we read that all nations shall be gathered together to fight, and his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives. The events recorded in Rev. xix. immediately precede those in chap. xx., and those in chap. xx. immediately follow those in chap. xix. Now, in chap. xx. we have the Millennial reign of the Lord. In chap. xix. there are three points: (1) The marriage of the Lamb, (2) the heavens open and Christ returning, (3) war waging when Christ arrives. That is, universal war before universal peace; and, as there can be no war during the Millennium, this denotes that Christ's coming is pre-Millennial.

II. Whether the Antichrist be considered as a principle or a person, or a principle headed up into a person, all regard it as a power arrayed against God, which will be destroyed "by the brightness of his coming"; and as it is impossible to think that the Antichrist will live through the Millennium, that "coming" must precede it.

III. Under what circumstances will the Jewish nation be converted? When the "Deliverer" shall come (Isa. lix. 20; Rom. xi. 26), and "they shall look upon Him whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for Him, as one mourneth for his only son" (Zech. xii. 10), or as the well-known hymn expresses it—

> Those who set at nought and sold Him,
> Pierced and nailed Him to the tree;
> Deeply wailing
> Shall their true Messiah see.

It is clear from Rom. xi. 26 that the Messiah's coming will find them in unbelief, and this will be the cause of their mourning. But if that coming were delayed until after the Millennium, when all had been put right, there would be nothing for them to mourn or wail about.

Luke xxi. 24—28 shows that the advent is distinct from the destruction of Jerusalem, and John xxi. 19, 22, 23 shows that it is not death, as is sometimes thought. Death is as it were a message from the loved One afar off, "Come to Me," which is not the same thing as that One coming Himself to fetch us.

What effect should this belief in our Lord's expected return have upon his people to-day? Take a simple illustration. A young man goes to Australia to prepare a home for his betrothed whom he leaves in England, promising to fetch her when all is ready. In course of time a mutual friend announces to the lady that her lover will shortly be here. He is surprised to notice a troubled look on her face, which he fails to understand, until someone explains it by saying, "I have seen her many times walking out with another." And when the Church takes the arm of the world, and walks with it, no wonder she does not like to be reminded of her Lord's return.

Mr. Miller followed up this solemn line of thought by reference to Matt. xxiv. 49—51, where discord and sin are the result of thinking "My Lord delayeth his coming." Alluding also to John xiv. 1, he asked: Are we troubled at the Lord's absence? Do we miss Him? After his burial the disciples went to their homes, but Mary Magdalene remained at the sepulchre weeping. They had resources, she had none; her Lord had been everything to her, and now He was gone; and it was to her that the Lord appeared first after his resurrection. Hers was an attitude which the Lord loved, and, perhaps, there was no one in the world who so met the desire of the Father's heart as Mary Magdalene. It is far more important to have the waiting spirit than to hold particular "views" as to the manner of his return.

Mr. Shuldham Henry showed from the Thessalonians that the coming of the Lord was the backbone of Paul's preaching, the allusions to it in every chapter of the Epistle each teaching different lessons, and all arguments brought out being based upon it.

THURSDAY.

The greater part of the day was occupied with brief accounts of the

THE LORD'S WORK.

West Cork.—Mr. Leonard, an American evangelist, has seen wonderful results amongst farmers who have been saved, and have been meeting in each other's houses.

Gospel Tent Work.—Mr. Vicary described the work at and around Weston-super-Mare, which he has carried on for sixteen years. One tent has been multiplied to eight, seating 2000 people. In winter, cottage meetings are held in the villages, which are greatly blessed.

Bible Carriage Work has also been carried on for four years in connection with the last named. The tent forms headquarters, and the surrounding district is worked by the colporteurs with the aid of the carriage, who call from house to house, visit the sick, and witness for the Master. Mr. Leonard Weaver described similar work in the large towns of Lancashire and Yorkshire, and in the market-places. His first step is to call on local Christians, and obtain their aid. On one occasion a clergyman, a Methodist, and an Exclusive Brother, spoke from the same platform, and congratulated each other that they had met for the first time. In a large Midland town the gatherings in the market-place grew so large that the Mayor gave the workers a street all to themselves where they had very blessed results.

Ireland.—The Irish Evangelisation Society was represented by Mr. J. Barton, the secretary General Rice and Mr. Hardman spoke of work in Kingstown and co. Armagh respectively.

Policemen had a warm friend and advocate in Miss Gurney, who is carrying on a useful work amongst them. She said that there is great fear of man in the "force," and many men who had previously been earnest for Christ, and in some cases Sunday-school teachers, had lost their savour since joining the force. She pleaded that Christians should take more notice of these men who render such good service, but who very seldom receive any words of cheer from those whom they so faithfully serve.

Miss Macpherson told stirring tales of her East-end experiences. A Scotch lad, who had been brought from a wretched den, was sent to Canada, where he did well, and is now a missionary in China. "So don't you be terrified, you young fellows," she said, "about the difficulties in the way. God can make the way plain for you." A little girl had been taken from a father who had stabbed her mother with a carving-fork, and five children from a father who, urged by others, killed his wife in broad daylight. Facts like these testify better than words to the important nature of this noble work.

THE FOREIGN FIELD.

A letter from Mr. Radcliffe, characteristically earnest and to the point, was read by Mr. G. F. Trench, calling for volunteers to occupy the field in various foreign lands.

Russia.—Lord Radstock gave some most interesting instances which had come under his notice. Two prominent workers had been banished; one had to walk 1000 miles in chains to Siberia, but his joy was that he would "now have the privilege of preaching the Gospel to the prisoners," who could not otherwise be reached. In St. Petersburg the "open meeting" principle works admirably, because when the gatherings are broken up by the police—as is invariably the case when discovered—the converts are each competent to minister the word to others, and thus, as in the early days of the Church, the scattering of the people secures the scattering of the seed. In fact, on one occasion a number of imprisoned converts were released, because by their testimony "they did more harm in prison than out!"

Mr. F. S. Arnot.—Mr. Henry Groves announced that Brother Swann wrote from Central Africa, in November, that he was within fifteen days of this valiant young missionary and hoped to visit him.

France and Spain were represented by Mr. Charles Faithfull, who spoke warmly of Mr. Fenn's work in Madrid, and that of Messrs. Wigstone and Blamire elsewhere, and described his own mission to the sailors of all nationalities in Marseilles.

Germany.—Pastor Rohrbach, of Berlin, said that he gained his first ideas of evangelistic work from Mr. Moody, and when he read of the work of Robert Moffat in Bechuanaland, he asked "Cannot the same power be brought to bear upon Germany?" He was glad to say that the initiatory work of Dr. Schluembach, Dr. Somerville, Dr. Ziemann, and others, had done a great deal for the cause of evangelisation.

South India and the Argentine Republic were respectively pleaded for by Messrs Creagh and Hewin.

Mrs. Guinness drew a very dark picture of the needs of heathen lands. While acknowledging an immense advance in missionary effort during this century, she pointed out that the increase of population far outbalanced the progress made. If there were one missionary for every 10,000 heathen, there would be now 100,000 in the field; but there are only 6000, whilst in England there is a worker to every hundred of the population.

The evening was devoted to praise, and over forty requests were sent in for blessings, personal and evangelistic, experienced during the last year; then Mr. Trench gave an address from Matt. xii. 18? "Behold my Servant." Men only beheld Him as in xi. 19, and the Pharisees as in xii. 24.

The Lord Jesus bears witness to Himself (a) in xi. 11. If the least in the kingdom was greater than John, who was greater than all who had preceded him, how much greater than all must the Head of that kingdom be! (b) In xii. 5, He is greater than the Temple, with all its stupendous magnificence. (c) Than the Sabbath (xii. 8), the greatest of all the Mosaic institutions. (d) Than Jonah (xii. 21), great as he was. (e) Than Solomon (xii. 22) in all his glory, as the very type of the Son of David. But though this glory of Christ was "hid" (xi. 25), yet He was the revealer of the Father, as against the Temple and its ordinances. His was the true Sabbath "rest" (xi. 28). "Learn of Me," not of Jonah or the prophets. "Take my yoke," as King, greater than Israel's monarchs.

This is the Master we are called to serve. Behold Him, God's beloved Son, and the Lamb of God. If we get our hearts filled with admiration for Him, our heads, our hands, and our feet will follow in his blessed service.

Mr. Bennett, of Liverpool, gave an exposition of 1 Pet. ii. 6,7, followed by an address from Mr. W. D. Dunn upon "Abiding in Christ" (1 John ii. 28), who first summarised the First Epistle of John: Chapter i., Cleansing from all sin (ver. 7); ii., Spiritual Growth; iii., Sonship; iv., Love of God; v., Faith that overcometh the world.

Second, he pointed out four blessings, which children of God have a right to claim: (1) Forgiveness of sins (ii. 12). (2) Cleansing from all unrighteousness (i. 9). (3) Fellowship or partnership with God (i. 7). (4) An unction from the Holy One (ii. 20).

Third, he showed three things to be got by abiding in Christ: (1) Victory over sin (iii. 6). (2) Prayer answered (John xv. 7). (3) Fruitbearing (John xv. 5).

A Conference of Christian workers, on Friday morning, brought the gatherings, which had been much enjoyed, to an appropriate close.

OPENINGS AT THE CAPE.

In a letter recently received, Mrs. Osborn writes from Cape Town respecting her outward voyage and the aspect of affairs at the Cape:—

We had no difficulty in holding meetings on board; we had two every Sunday in the second saloon, which were well attended. Amongst the passengers were about fifty young men coming out to find employment. Many of them attended our meetings, and one of them became an anxious inquirer. Two or three times a week Mr. Howe and I visited the forecastle, and had singing and speaking with the sailors. On other evenings we had little gatherings of Christians, of whom we found there were several in the ship. Every morning, after breakfast, we had a Bible-reading for an hour in our saloon; we were seven travelling together, and a few others joined us at the readings, which we all found profitable.

We have had some hearty welcome meetings since our arrival, and now are settling down to our work. We shall be deeply thankful for prayer that we may be directed by God as to extending that work. There is a change in this town; many of the young people are actively engaged in spreading the Gospel, and it is very different from what it was seven years ago. I hear that in many other parts of this colony Christians are stirred.

This is the time for working men to come out here—mechanics, not labourers. There is a rush to the gold fields from this and other large towns, and situations are being left vacant. A contractor engaged on a building here has been obliged to send to Johannesberg, in the Transvaal, for mechanics. Do encourage Christian mechanics who are anxious to be soul-winners to come, that we may have lights in the colony. Joiners, wheelwrights, engine-fitters, and masons would find openings. The third-class fare from London to Cape Town is fifteen guineas; agents, Messrs. Donald Currie and Co., 3, Fenchurch-street, London, E.C. A large firm of printers, who have all the Government printing, are much in want of hands. When Parliament meets, they will have much extra work. This would be the opportunity for Christians to come.

Miss Edith Arnold, Woodville, Welling, Kent, appeals for books for the children's library in a poor mission school; the children range from three to sixteen years of age.

THE THAMES CHURCH MISSION

The annual meeting of this Mission on Friday afternoon, in Willis's Rooms, proved very successful. The Bishop of London was in the chair. The room was tastefully decorated with flags and banners, mottoes and texts, and here and there was displayed a quantity of nautical gear, the whole producing a very good effect.

After devotional exercises, Rev. H. Bloomer presented the report, which was of deep interest, not only from the fact that the annual record of work done was higher than in any previous year, but from the clear enunciation of the principles upon which the Mission works. The report abounds in touching instances of the conversion of many ungodly sailors, and the audience had further evidence of this in the faithful testimony borne by the senior chaplain, Rev. W. R. Gibson, and Messrs. Carter and Loman, missionaries. The last named is quite a veteran in the service, having been connected with the Mission for forty years. For incidents of the work we must refer our readers to the report itself. We feel that many on reading it will join the Committee in their note of praise to the Lord, that He has enabled them to accomplish so much.

The Chairman said the report contained a great deal to encourage them, and even the less satisfactory portion if it should stimulate to further exertions. God's blessing has rested on the work, and it is a great pity that the means at command has not been more adequate.

Prebendary Billing testified to the improved condition of the sailors to be met with in the streets at the East-end, and also of the bargees and firemen who are sometimes met with in the lodging-houses. He believed that the change is in a measure due to the efforts of the Thames Church Mission. He had seen so many instances of the blessing it had been instrumental in bringing about that, from his heart, he wished the Society God-speed.

Canon Hoare's speech which followed made many regret that he is so seldom heard in London. It was eminently characteristic of him—kindly sympathetic and powerful. He pleaded very earnestly on behalf of the seamen, than whom, he said, there is no more important body of men in the community. Introducing many incidents that had come under his own experience, he added point, and force, and interest to his appeal. His final word, that more prayer, more faith, and more courage are needed, found a responsive echo in many hearts.

Mr. G. L. Dashwood in a speech full of rich, quaint humour, pleaded for the funds necessary for the new launch.

TEMPERANCE AND LIFE ASSURANCE.—A few days ago, a Conference on this subject was held at Exeter Hall, under the auspices of the Blue Ribbon Life, Accident, Mutual and Industrial Life Insurance Company, Limited. It was shown that total abstinence has lowered the rate of mortality among those who practise it, and the effect of this upon life assurance is obvious. A resolution was adopted, pointing out that it is to the interest of all abstainers to obtain for themselves and their families the advantages to which their total abstinence entitles them.

CAMBRIDGE. — The correspondent of The Record writes:—Deep interest in the great missionary cause has been stirred up by the news of Bishop Parker's death, and in other ways, and I hope we may very soon see many good and devoted men volunteering for missionary work. Not a few earnest men here are being strongly drawn towards the work of the China Inland Mission. One thing is very clear: the missionary spirit abroad here is on the whole, by the mercy of God, marked by a deeply and decidedly spiritual tone, and by a conviction of the blessedness of entire devotion to the will of God for his work.

The Annual Sale of Work in behalf of mission and parochial work in the district of St. John the Evangelist, Islington, is to be held on Thursday and Friday, June 21 and 22, at "Worthing House," Montfort-terrace, Barnsbury, Islington, N., not on June 19 and 20, as stated. Clothing, fancy articles, flowers, and fruit, will be gratefully received by Mrs. Charles Ough, addressed as above.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
Case of DISEASED LUNG at YEOVIL.

In February of last year I was applied to by Mrs. JAMES on behalf of her daughter. The patient's father (the late Rev. —— JAMES) was Baptist minister in the town for many years.

One lung was reported to be diseased. The cough and other symptoms were very severe. Encouraged by the benefit that friends in the town had received, the mother wrote to me.

In five weeks I heard that there was much improvement. In May Mrs. James wrote me: "My daughter is now pretty well. With many thanks, &c."

On Nov. 2 I received the following: "I am thankful to say my daughter continues well, but as the winter is on us I wish to keep your remedy at hand, as I am sure it is a valuable one. . . In many cases where I have recommended it, it has been greatly blest."

Having written recently to enquire, I received a report as follows: "I am thankful to tell you my daughter continues well. She has passed the winter well."

EXTRACT from a LETTER of Rev. J. BEALE, of OTHERY, BRIDGWATER.

"DEAR MR. CONGREVE,—I am thankful to say that in all the cases in which I have recommended your medicine it has had the best results."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

"It was a dark page in my experience, when first I knelt at the feet of a mortal to confess what should have been poured into the ear of God alone. I cannot dwell upon this; but a brief time before it would have for ever put to rest my longings after Romanism. Though I believe my confessor was, on the whole, as guarded as his manner was kind, at some things I was strangely startled, utterly confounded."—Extract.

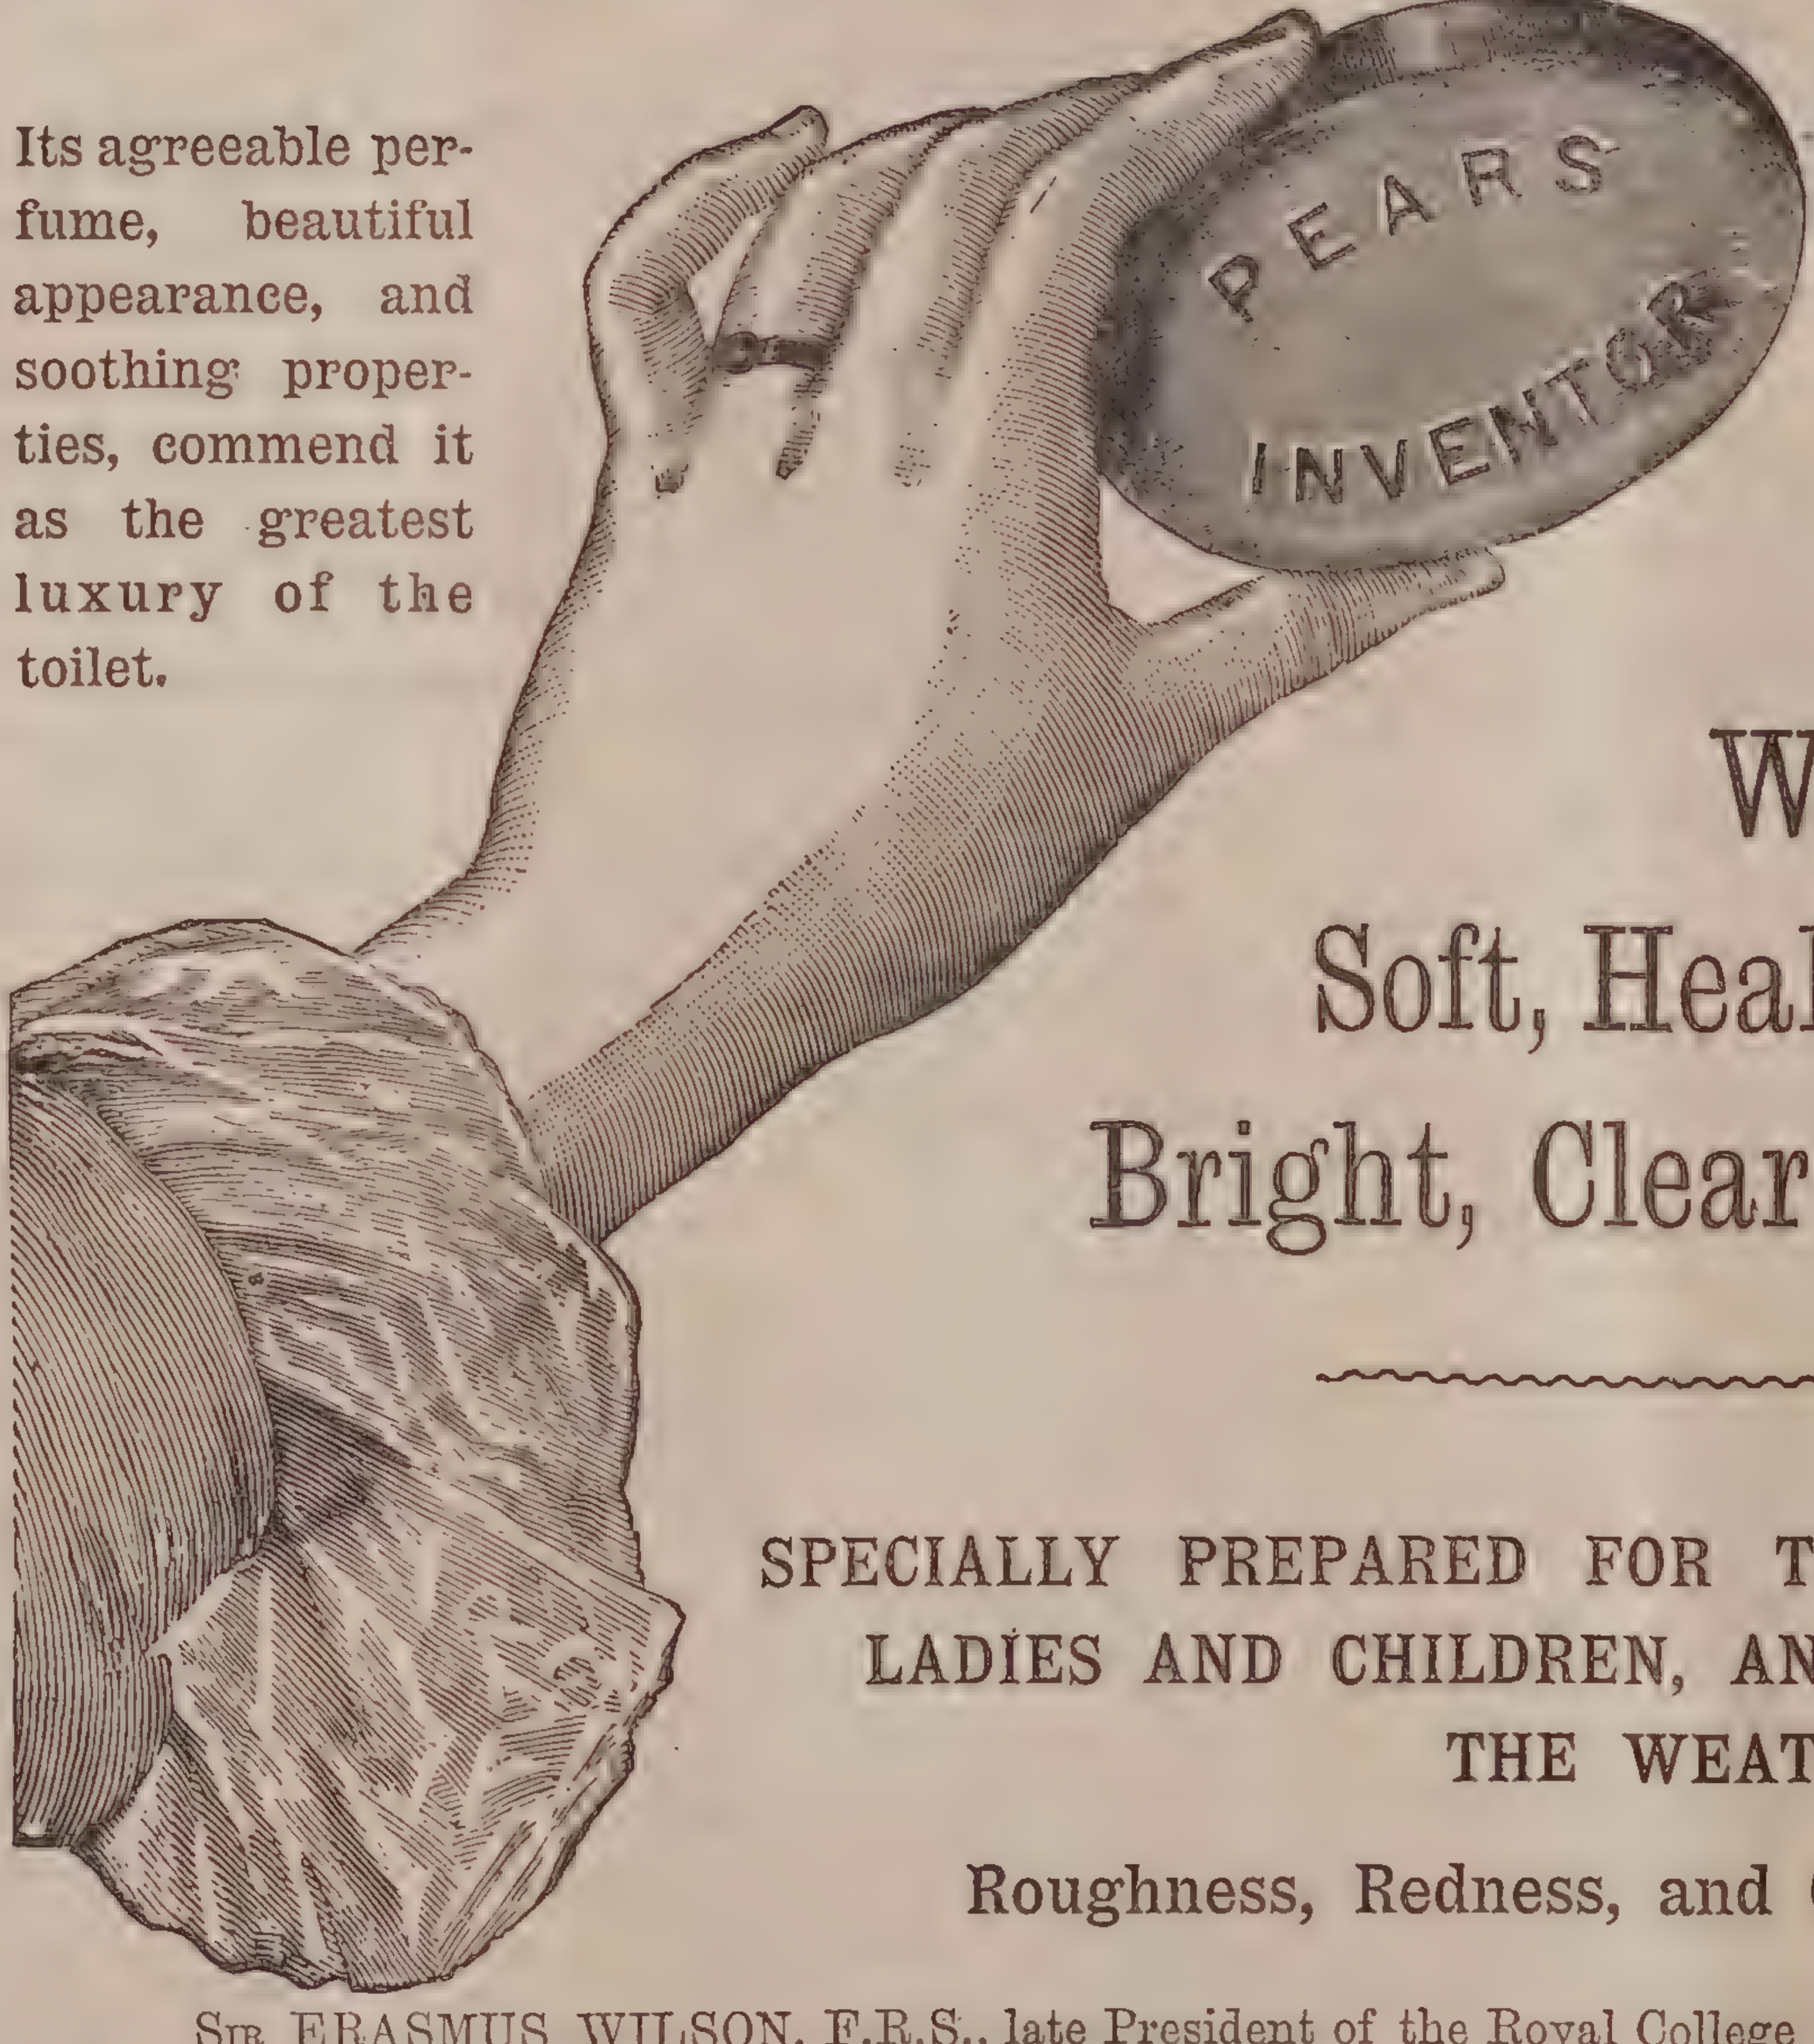
Pears' Soap

Its agreeable perfume, beautiful appearance, and soothing properties, commend it as the greatest luxury of the toilet.



Fair,
White Hands.
Soft, Healthful Skin.
Bright, Clear Complexion.

SPECIALLY PREPARED FOR THE DELICATE SKIN OF LADIES AND CHILDREN, AND ALL SENSITIVE TO THE WEATHER.

Roughness, Redness, and Chapping prevented.

SIR ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S., late President of the Royal College of Surgeons, England, writes, in the "Journal of Cutaneous Medicine":—"The use of a good Soap is certainly calculated to preserve the skin in health, to maintain its complexion and tone, and prevent its falling into wrinkles. . . . . PEARS is a name engraven on the memory of the oldest inhabitant; and Pears' Transparent Soap is an article of the nicest and most careful manufacture, and one of the most refreshing and agreeable of balms for the skin."

MR. J. L. MILTON, Senior Surgeon to St. John's Hospital for the Skin, London, writes:—"After fifteen years' careful trial in hundreds of cases, nothing has answered so well, or proved so beneficial to the Skin, as Pears' Transparent Soap."

PEARS' SOAP is sold everywhere in Tablets, 1s. each. Larger sizes, 1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. (The 2s. 6d. Tablet is perfumed with Otto of Roses. A smaller Tablet, unscented, is sold at 6d.) Insist on having PEARS', as injurious imitations are often substituted for extra gain.

FRIENDS' YEARLY MEETING.

E great debate on the Declaration of Chris- n Doctrine by the Richmond (Ind.) Confer- ce drew together perhaps the largest endance for many years. Long before 10 n. on Tuesday week the meeting-house was owded. Solemn silence reigned for a time, d earnest prayer followed. Then the depu- ion one by one reported. No written count can convey the earnest feeling that nd such thoughtful and considerate expres- n in the five hours' discussion of the day.

The deputation that had been present at the chmond Conference, and those agreeing, as- rted that the Declaration was not a creed t a summary, and was only advisory; was eded in America, owing to the influx of con- rts; had in it nothing new; would unify the urch; and be useful to outsiders. The idea "creed making" was not thought of. As e oldest of the Yearly Meetings Great Britain uld not stand alone, and ought to give the cument a "sympathetic acceptation." On e other hand, it was argued that we had no eed of it here; that the tap-root was disci- inary proceedings and ecclesiasticism, and at we must check uniformitarianism; that e document contained more than was funda- ental, and some things that were doubtful or roneous; was a creed, and that it would not nd to unity, but the reverse; Quakerism is berty, and a "paper union" would not unite s, our union must be in a living Christ; ur Book of "Christian Discipline" is clear nd ample, and we could only accept the eclaration with mental reserve; it would averse the great law of unity in variety; that he Bible is our only creed, and the Holy pirit our one Guide, and that thus we have hat William Penn called "the double and greeing testimony." Having escaped the yranny of priest and bishop we must keep lear of every other.

There were many who wished to speak, but ime did not permit, and so the clerk (Joseph . Fry) produced the following able minute, as xpressing the sense and judgment of the neeting. It practically received the unani- nous assent of the great assembly, though, ccording to the uniform practice of Friends, o vote was taken:—

We have received the report of the Deputation ap- ointed by the last Yearly Meeting to attend the Con- erence at Richmond, Indiana, in the autumn of 1887. This meeting rejoices in the brotherly unity and confi- ence which marked its proceedings, and in the trust hat the result of the deliberations will be productive of he welfare of the Society. We are also thankful that he members of the Deputation were enabled to dis- harge this service of love in connection with our Friends in America, in harmony and mutual confidence.

We have considered the "Conclusions" of the Con- erence, and the "Declaration" of Christian truth as held by Friends adopted by it, both read in our separate meetings yesterday, and received them as faithfully reflecting the proceedings and views of the Conference. They are to be printed with the proceedings of the Yearly Meeting; but, inasmuch as this meeting had no opportunity of entertaining for itself the question of the need of such Declaration, and has now no opportunity of revising that which has been presented; and, inasmuch as many Friends have expressed an unwillingness at the present time to adopt any further Declarations than those previously made and recorded as to our Christian faith, it is to be understood that whilst reaffirming our adherence to the fundamental scriptural doctrines always held by us, this meeting refrains from expressing any judgment on the contents of the Declaration now produced.

We cordially thank our dear Friends in America for the brotherly confidence which they have shown us, and for their kind reception of our Deputation; and we trust that they will feel assured of the earnest desire of this Meeting to maintain with them the relations which have hitherto bound us together in the unchangeable faith of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Thus a great and burning question was settled by a wise compromise, and the harmony of the body remained unbroken, and indeed undisturbed.

The great event of this Yearly Meeting was now over, but not the interest, or duty to be done. The Friends' Temperance Union and Home Mission Annual Meetings were profitable times, and the social reunion of the committee and workers and guests of the latter body has not yet been equalled for numbers, interests, and hope.

In the Yearly Meeting, peace committees were encouraged in all the Quarterly Meetings, and we were informed that just one hundred years ago the great Anti-Slavery war began by the presentation of a petition from Friends by William Wilberforce. It was cheering to hear that 34,000 people are in connection with our schools and missions, and that in Madagascar the ten missionaries of Friends have in charge 133 congregations, attended by 36,000 hearers, and that spirituality deepens there.

Correspondence with ten American yearly meetings, and with Friends in Australasia, Scandinavia, India, Syria, Germany, France, and Constantinople, occupies time and imparts the sense of responsibility; yet the work has been done in harmony and brotherly and sisterly condescension and love.

Cardiff, Sixth Month 4. Wm. Hobson.

One of the features of the Yearly Meeting has been the blessing resulting from the meetings held for young men in the old meeting-house, conducted by John T. Dorland, Jun., of Canada. Himself a young man and a most earnest minister in Christ, his stirring addresses have been listened to with great attention. Much good has resulted in the conversion of some, and the building up of others in the faith.

John Dorland is in many ways a remarkable man. His secret evidently lies in his intense convictions, and his deep-rooted faith in the atoning blood and keeping grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. He speaks plainly as a young man to young men, and his voice, very clear and strong, has a special charm given to it by his Canadian rendering of many words and sentences.

The last meeting was held on the Thursday the day before the sittings closed, and was one of much blessing. Many rose to confess their Lord before their fellows, whilst others asked to be prayed for. The address was from the passage, "My beloved is mine and I am his," and with loving and earnest words did the speaker press all in the room to an instant and full surrender of their all to the guiding Spirit of the Master, so that He might lead them into all peace.

The Committee of the Friends' Christian Fellowship Union have arranged for a series of Bible-readings for the coming week, to be conducted by this brother, at various meeting-houses in and about London, so that the work may be continued among young Friends.

ASHLEY MISSION, BETHNAL GREEN.—The Annual Meeting of the Ashley Mission was held on Monday week at the Mission-hall. The Hon. Lionel Ashley, president, took the chair, and gave an account of the operations carried on in this extremely poor district in the East of London—viz., large mothers' meetings, classes for factory girls, Band of Hope, Gospel temperance work, Sunday-school, Band of Mercy, Scripture Union, &c. Lady Hope gave a bright, stirring address, and Mr. George Williams spoke a few earnest words, having been introduced to the meeting by Mr. Lionel Ashley as an old, valued friend of his late father, the Earl of Shaftesbury. Miss Bontein, 22a, Devonshire-street, Portland-place, W., is the hon. lady superintendent.

THE MADRAS CHRISTIAN COLLEGE mutiny has been practically settled. Fines were imposed upon the ringleaders, and about twenty expelled. The young Brahmin whose proposed baptism caused the trouble has yielded to the pressure of relatives and friends, and thus declared himself "not worthy" of Christ (Matt. x. 37). We cannot forbear an expression of wonder that the mutinous students should think it worth while to accuse the authorities of "trying to undermine the religion of the Hindu pupils, and to induce them to become Christians." Of course the school seeks to induce its pupils to become Christians. If it does not, it is false to its trust. A mission school that does not seek the salvation of its pupils might better be closed.—Bombay Guardian.

ON THE BLACKDOWN HILLS.

My Dear Sir,—Many readers of The Christian have doubtless been our helpers in prayer since the removal of my beloved father from the scene of his many labours to be "with the Lord," and many letters expressive of heart-felt sympathy have been received by us, which have proved no small cheer and comfort in our sorrow and loss. For both prayers and sympathising words I desire to express most hearty thanks. "Hitherto" we have to speak of nothing but "goodness and mercy." We have been "helped." No branch of the work on the Hills has, thus far, been closed or restrained; and for this we "thank God and take courage." Helpers have kindly come forward to fill the gaps.

My father-in-law (Mr. James Showell, of Kendal) has been with us for five weeks, rendering most efficient and acceptable service in preaching and pastoral work. Other brethren have been our succourers besides. We are looking forward with pleasure to much valuable help from our friend and brother, Mr. Douglas Russell, who, for the work's sake, purposes (D.V.) with his family spending several weeks on the Hills, instead of visiting the seaside; and, while deriving benefit physically from the pure air and charming scenery, he will endeavour to help in the work of the Lord in the various mission stations around—an example which many of the Lord's servants, who have time and ability, might well follow. How delighted we should be to welcome such to our neighbourhood. There are seven mission stations on the Hills that would be open to them, and we should be thankful for such help.

Specially thankful should I be if some earnest servant of Christ, with an evangelist's heart and some little private means, were led to come and reside among us for the sake of the Lord's work, and the blessing of precious souls. There are plenty of open doors, and people are thirsting for the word. It is no difficulty whatever to get a most attentive and appreciative congregation. Oh, that some may be induced to say to the Lord of the Harvest "Here am I, send me!"

We are hoping to commence our summer tent work shortly, we trust the Lord will appear for our help. One of our tents was very much damaged last autumn by the gales, and will need a considerable outlay to fit it for use again. We are having it repaired in the belief that the Lord would be the more pleased that it should be put to active service than that it should remain idle all the summer. Scores of precious souls have been "led to repentance" under its roof, and we trust the Lord will not allow such blessed work to be stayed for lack of means.

The need among our village populations of the simple Gospel is truly great; its urgency none know as those whose privilege it is to "dwell among the plants and hedges with the King for his work." It is this pressing need that leads me to desire to continue the tent preaching as in former years. We seek the prayers and succour of the Lord's people. We are working often at "high pressure," but it is really high pleasure. "The night cometh when no man can work"; till then we would seek to "occupy" for Him. "Brethren, pray for us."—Yours very faithfully in the Lord,

W. J. H. Brealey.

DEATH OF A PHILANTHROPIST. — Miss Beatrice Clugston, the well-known founder of the Dunoon and Kirkintilloch Convalescent Homes, was found dead in bed on Monday morning, at her temporary residence, 3, Arran-place, Ardrossan, where for fifteen months she had been enjoying rest from her philanthropic labours. She was left by her attendant, and retired to rest about ten o'clock the previous night in usual health. Miss Clugston was sixty-one years of age. Death resulted from disease of the heart.

☞ We specially ask the attention of our London readers to the opening services of the new Talbot Tabernacle, Talbot-road, Bayswater, on June 12, 13, 17, 21, 24. The principal meeting will be on Wednesday, 13th, at seven. Our dear brother, Pastor Frank H. White, well deserves the sympathy of all Christians who love the truth. Mr. George Williams will take the chair, and Rev. C. Spurgeon, Messrs. Bevan, Denny, Reginald Radcliffe, and Dr. Barnardo, will be the speakers. In the afternoon, at 3.30, Dr. Saphir will preach. On Sunday, 17th, Dr. Gordon, of Boston, at 3 (to children) and at 7; and on June 24, Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, at 3 (to young men) and at 7. Particulars on page 31.

Letters to the Editor.

THE SALVATION ARMY AND BAPTISM.

Dear Sir,—Your correspondent, Mr. Booth-Tucker, omits to give Paul's reason (which is all-important) for discontinuing to baptize the Corinthian converts. In 1 Cor. i. 15, it is stated thus—lest it should be said that he had baptized in his own name. Mr. Tucker further says, that though Paul was eighteen months in Corinth, and had hundreds of converts "he scarcely baptized a single one of them." It is true that Paul only baptized a few, but it is recorded in Acts xviii. 8, that "many of the Corinthians hearing, believed, and were baptized;" consequently someone baptized "many" Corinthian converts, although Paul did not.

I would take the liberty of earnestly and affectionately suggesting that Mr. Tucker follow the Word of God instead of "other evangelists;" then he will find that he has no "right to shelve" that which is commanded by the risen Saviour, and likewise by the Holy Spirit (see Matt. xxviii. 19, 20; Mark xvi. 16; Acts ii. 4, 38). I would remind him that God gives the Holy Spirit "to them that obey Him" (Acts v. 19), and that although the Salvation Army may "insist on their converts having the baptism of the Holy Ghost," they cannot produce from the Word of God any evidence to prove that the Holy Spirit will be given to the disobedient.

The New Testament does not say anything about "ministerial and lay" baptism, and in the absence of any command as to who may baptize "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," surely any obedient believer in the Christ may baptize any convert who believes, repents, and confesses with the mouth the Lord Jesus.—Very faithfully yours, H. Clench.

Dear Sir,—Few, if any, of your readers who reverence the Word of God could have read Mr. Tucker's letter on the above without the deepest pain. For my part, I remember nothing in your columns which has grieved me more. The splendid self-devotedness of our brother, and the rare example he has set us all, in his willingness to be made all things to all men, that he might by all means save some, only makes one sorrow the more, that such a man should be found openly defending the neglect of one of Christ's appointments, on the grounds set forth in his letter to you of last week.

Only once does Mr. Tucker appeal to the Scriptures—to 1 Cor. i. 14, where he says: Paul "boldly alleges that he was not sent to baptize, but to preach the Gospel, and thanks God that though he spent a year and a half in Corinth, and had hundreds of converts from idolatry, he scarcely baptized a single one of them." Now, what Paul did say is this: "I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius; lest any should say I baptized in my own name, for Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel." But has Mr. Tucker failed to see what is so evident in this passage—that the thankfulness of the Apostle is not that the converts at Corinth were not baptized, for they were (see Acts xviii. 8), but that in the Divine Providence it was so ordered that he, Paul, baptized but a very few of them. And why? Lest any should find any apparent support for their miserable party spirit. If Paul did not himself baptize the converts, his fellow-workers did. No doubt, as did the Apostle Peter (Acts x. 48), he left, as a rule, this part of the work to others.

The Lord, we are told, did not baptize; but his disciples, in his name. Moreover, when Paul says Christ "sent me not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel," there is a plain allusion to his Apostolic commission. It was as an Apostle he thus wrote, and as such his main business was to preach, to bear testimony to those doctrines of which water-baptism was the divinely appointed expression and confession, rather than actually to baptize. That Paul by so writing did not intend to depreciate water-baptism is evident from what we read elsewhere of both his teaching and practice—on the former in Romans vi. 3 and Col. ii. 12, and on the latter in Acts xvi. 15, 33.

A case more in point to quote, I think, would have been the practice of the Evangelist (not Apostle) Philip, who did just as Mr. Tucker does, I doubt not, in India, "preached Christ" to the people; but, unlike Mr. Tucker, he must have enjoined baptism on his professed converts, else it could never have been written "when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women" (Acts viii. 12). Whether Philip himself baptized them, it is not said. That he baptized the believing Eunuch is expressly stated (see next chapter). Surely the question raised by your former correspondent, "Z. M.," can only be settled by an appeal to the Scriptures of truth, and not to "six," or even six hundred, years "of experience" of the most devoted man, or men, that ever lived.

Again, Mr. Tucker seems to think that because other evangelists may fail in sufficiently pressing home the necessity of a full consecration to God on the part of their converts (for this is what I gather he means by the baptism of the Spirit, and not the miraculous reception of the gifts), he may neglect the plain teaching of the Word as to water baptism, as if two wrongs could possibly make a right, or my brother's shortcoming in one respect cover or atone for my failure in another. Moreover, do not entire holiness and full obedience go together? Is it not true that the more we are filled with the Holy Spirit, the more jealous we shall be over every jot and tittle of our Lord's will, as expressed in his Holy Word?

Surely the little company who gathered together at Cæsarea to listen to Peter's preaching had received the "one essential baptism of the Spirit," for it is said that "the Holy Ghost fell on all them who heard the word," and "they heard them speak with tongues and magnify God." Yet we find Peter urging this, not as a reason for dispensing with the outward ordinance, but rather as a plea for its immediate observance. "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we" (Acts x. 47). Take, too, the case of Paul himself. It was "immediately" after he became filled with the Holy Ghost that he "arose and was baptized" (Acts ix. 18).

Then Mr. Tucker points to the difference of opinion among Christians as to the "how," "when," "where" of baptism, and adds, "If such would only agree among themselves on these questions, we should willingly adopt the use of it ourselves." But is there a single point of Christian faith or practice on which differences do not exist in the professing Church? So far as I know, all Christians save the Quakers, or very nearly all, agree that water-baptism in some form or other is obligatory on a Christian profession. It is true the "Friends" reject both ordinances, but on very different grounds to those on which Mr. Tucker rejects baptism. They do not claim any "right to shelve the question." How sad to read such words as these! I myself have seen instances of what has looked like "shelving" Christian truth, but I never before heard of a child of God claiming a "right" to do so. The "Friends" do not "shelve the question," but try to show that the spiritual reality, of which the outward rite is the expression, is all that the Lord meant his followers to heed. Can Mr. Tucker name one single Christian missionary of any denomination who deliberately and systematically shelves the subject of Christian baptism?

Another reason urged is that the baptized backslide in such large numbers. Alas! so do the unbaptized. But all such reasoning is farthest from the point. The one question is, What did the Lord enjoin? Did He, or did He not, mean that word of his in Matthew xxviii. to hold good to the end, come what may? "Go ye therefore, and disciple all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the age." Under whose authority are we in this matter? Our own, or some other man's, be he minister, pope, general, or bishop, or are we under law to Christ?

Is not Mr. Tucker's reasoning essential popery? Rome makes void the commandments of God by traditions; the Salvation Army does the same by the authority of "six years' experience." Rome contends that the end justifies the means. So does Mr. Tucker. Has it come to this that we poor servants know best—are even wiser than the Master Himself? I note the several tests that Mr. Tucker mentions, and no doubt these do most severely try some of his converts; but then, many of these "tests" are not of Divine appointment. One Divine command is worth a hundred humanly devised laws. Oh, when shall we, who profess holiness, be content with the Lord's own and best test of all, "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me."

But that I have already greatly drawn upon your space, I would notice other points in Mr. Tucker's letter, such as "dislike of controversy." Alas! nowadays we should have to give up every precious truth in the Bible if this objection were a valid one. None of us loves controversy for controversy' sake. Some, like the writer, shrink from it intensely; but necessity is laid upon us, that w should "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints." Hence this letter from your faithfully in Christ, Frank H. White.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

Mark iv. 12.—"That seeing they may see, and no perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, an their sins should be forgiven." This latter part puzzle us, and if you could clear up the passage we should b much obliged. Ernest Neal

We have received replies to this question from Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, Charlotte Curry, Rev. W Sandford, E. H. W., Clementina Kingdon, E. P. G. Colborne, F. A., Paternoster, A Mancheste Bible Student, W. J. R., Frederick Tappolet, Semper Paratus, Walter Leach, Mangalore, E. S E., and Busy Bee. Most of the writers direc attention to the light thrown upon the verse by the marginal references, and it is also pointe out that the full drift may be easily gathered fro the parallel passage in Matthew's Gospel. Take with Isa. vi. 9, these New Testament passage clearly show that hardness of heart stood in th way of the people in question being "healed," o having their sins forgiven. On God's part there i implied a willingness to heal or forgive; but at th same time the heart-hindrance of man is severel reproved. Having seen Christ's miracles, th Jewish leaders and their followers refused t receive Him. Having heard Christ's teachings they would have none of them; they took them no to heart.

At the beginning of his ministry, our Lord di not use parables. When, however, his direc teaching was met with scorn and unbelief, an some of his hearers sinned against the Hol Ghost, He spoke largely in parables, which, whil instructive to the truth-loving, were dark to thos who were wilfully blind. They were speciall addressed to those who had "ears to hear."

One correspondent points out that Christ had fourfold system of teaching:—(1) Verbal instruction with exposition of the Old Testament Scriptures; (2) verbal instruction with miracles; (3 parables for the multitude, and plain words for th disciples; (4) denunciation for the perverse, an Gospel mysteries for the obedient hearer. Thu the meaning of Matt. xiii. 10—15; Mark iv. 12 Luke viii. 10; and John xii. 40, is evidently this "To you (my disciples, who have willing hearts) i has been given to recognise the mysteries of th Kingdom of God, but the rest (who receive not th truth, these mysteries are given) in parables, tha having had the power, but not the desire to se (the truth), they might not exercise it (to their ow greater destruction), and that hearing they migh not understand" (only to cavil and object). Me thus escape the greater responsibility of opposin themselves to the truth. Then follows the explanation of the parable of the Sower to the disciples.

It is worthy of notice that the passage Isaia vi. 9 is quoted in all four Gospels, and also by th Apostle Paul.

Compare John xii. 39—43, with Isa. vi. Dr Kay remarks in the latter passage that "The sentence of judicial blindness on Israel synchronises with the commencements of historical life among the Gentiles." So Paul, at Rome, quoting th words of Isaiah, adds to the unbelieving Jews, "B it known therefore unto you that the salvation o God is sent unto the Gentiles, and they will hea it." Israel was not only blind, but blinded, as symbolised in the man of John v.; and sight could only come to them through the true Siloam, the Sent One of God. Judicial blindness is the necessary consequence of wilful blindness. "To the frowar thou wilt show Thyself froward." "Whatsoeve a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

John emphasises the fact that these seemingly harsh words were spoken by Isaiah "when he saw his glory"—the glory of Jehovah-Jesus—"an spake of Him." If they had believed Him they would not have crucified Him. And if, as a nation they had turned to God and been healed, Jesus would not have been glorified through death and resurrection, and the Gentiles would have remained in darkness.

St. Chrysostom says: "It was not because Isaiah said so that they did not believe; but because they would not believe, that Isaiah said this."

ABOUT SCOTLAND AND SCOTCHMEN.

This corner of the Empire seems to furnish its e proportion of material for the literature of the y. Five volumes before us may be grouped ether. THE HOMES, HAUNTS, and BATTLE-ELDS OF THE COVENANTERS, by A. B. Todd (J. mmell, Edinburgh) is a well-written record of ble testimonies borne for liberty of conscience, d for Reformation truth. It is somewhat diffi-t, in those days of freedom and full toleration, to lise the conditions of religious life in the mili-t and ruthless times of the bloody Claverhouse d Archbishop Sharp. The evolution of history y bring round such times again, and there can be better way of keeping alive the old covenanting irit of heroic fidelity to God and the Bible, than e study of such narratives as these.

THE SCOTTISH COVENANTERS: A FIFTY YEARS' RUGGLE FOR RELIGIOUS LIBERTY. By Rev. omas J. MacCartney. 1s. 6d. T. Woolmer. The any thrilling incidents of an ever-memorable apter of seventeenth-century history are here pre-nted in an essentially popular form. The book is ustrated, and while likely to prove very attractive ading to youth in general, it is also calculated afford timely and important instruction in these ys, when the great price paid for religious liberty our land seems to have faded from the memory many Christian teachers and people.

Another book in the same historic school is lizabeth Sterling's STANDARD BEARERS; or, eroes of the Scottish Faith. 3s. 6d. Hodder & oughton. The "heroes" of this roll-call range om St. Ninian, supposed to be the first recorded ospel missionary to the northern part of this land, the fourth century, down to Knox, Andrew Mel-lle, and the Covenanters, to whom the preceding lumes refer. Miss Sterling's birds'-eye sketches e deeply interesting, and the fruit of much pains-king research into the records of the past.

A most excellent pendant to the foregoing vols. RELIGIOUS LIFE IN SCOTLAND, FROM THE RE-ORMATION TO THE PRESENT DAY. Edited by ev. N. L. Walker. T. Nelson & Sons. With such a ide sweep and scope the work is of necessity much mpressed; but that is no disadvantage in an age hen the masses of the people have no time to ad elaborate histories. The time covered is ivided into five periods. Professor Lindsay etches the Reformation period; Rev. C. G. IcCrie deals with the events and the influences of ovenanting times; Dr. Blair succinctly records the clesiastical and spiritual upheavals of the little-nown Secession time—harbinger of the still more nportant Disruption era; Dr. Landels brings us own to the days of the Haldanes and the revivals f religion that sprang from the labours of these wo faithful witnesses in a worldly and time-serv-ng generation. The Editor himself ably conducts he reader through the movements of the last half entury, embracing the Gospel endeavours of Mc-heyne and William Burns; the stirring days of the isruption; the founding of the Evangelical Union hurch; the labours of Robert Cunningham, rownlow North, and their contemporaries; the isits of Messrs. Moody and Sankey; the recent tirring of religious interest in the universities ith which the name of Professor Drummond is o closely associated; and even the outbreak of the Down-Grade" controversy. As may be judged rom our brief synopsis of the contents, this is no ommon book; it well deserves adoption as a school anual, though, of course, it is written from the ree Church point of view.

We are glad to see that a new edition has been alled for of MEMORIES OF THE PAST, the collec-ion of personal reminiscences and biographical ketches written by the late Rev. J. Dodds, of unbar. Mr. Dodds came in contact with some of he most famous Scotchmen of his day; he was an cute observer and wielded a free and sympathetic en. His reminiscences are therefore well worthy f preservation as a valued contribution to the his-ory of the time. (Macniven & Wallace.)

SCRIPTURE OUTLINES FOR GOSPEL ADDRESSES. y J. H. Jordan. 2s. 6d. Hawkins. Here are utlines, principally in acrostic form, of two undred addresses. Other Scripture studies are dded, and then come a hundred and sixty Sunday-chool lessons for teachers. The book will prove of reat service to many who are engaged in present-ng Gospel truth to children and plain people.

WORDS OF WARNING RESPECTING THE JESUITS. By Henry H. Bourn. 6d. Partridge. In addition to an account of the rise and progress of the Jesuits, there is in this very useful pamphlet much information respecting the constitution, objects, and methods of the order. Warning is certainly opportune, and we trust that many will realise the fact by perusal of these pages.

HESTER CAMERON'S THREE OFFERS AND OTHER TALES. 2s. 337, Strand. This exceedingly interesting little volume, by Emily Foster, deserves to be widely circulated. It consists of several well-written stories, showing very clearly the dangerous path of the moderate drinker, and the evils to which the habit leads. The book will be most useful in any Band of Hope or temperance library.

COURSE OF BIBLE INSTRUCTION. 2s. Bemrose & Sons. Rev. William Arthur writes the introduction of this useful book. The portions which form the basis of the work are those of the "Syllabus of Bible Instruction for Scholars" of the London School Board. Suggestive selected notes accompany the lessons, and at the end of the book are a few appropriate hymns, with tunes in both notations.

PALESTINE LESSONS TO MY CLASS. By Henry Stanley Newman. 7s. Partridge. In 1887 Mr. Newman realised a long-cherished desire to visit the Holy Land, and step by step he trod the paths which were consecrated long ago by the foot-fall of the Saviour. Returning home, he gave the very instructive results of his observations and study to the large adult class which he conducts on Sunday mornings. Hence the title of this very acceptable book, which is embellished with forty tinted engravings, and two maps. As a popular and attractive compendium of information—historical, topographical, and archæological—throwing great light upon many Biblical statements and teachings, this work is calculated to serve a useful purpose, and therefore we heartily recommend it.

THE PROTESTANT OBSERVER.—This new monthly paper has made an excellent start. Its columns are filled with matter bearing on topics of urgent importance and the present time, and we trust that it will render much valuable service in the cause of liberty and God.

MESSRS. CASSELL'S SERIALS.

The serial issue of The Old Testament Commentary for English Readers has reached Part 45, bringing the work, which is uniformly thorough in point of learning, as far as 1 Chron. xxvi. Part 10 of The Crown Bible, a very useful illustrated edition of the Scriptures, extends to Psalm cxv. Of Milton's Paradise Lost, illustrated by Gustave Doré, and edited, with notes and a life of Milton, by the late Rev. Dr. Robert Vaughan, five parts have now been issued; the completed book will be an edition de luxe of the famous epic. Part 53 of The Encyclopædic Dictionary, a work of great erudition, ends with "outstrip." The Countries of the World, of which Part 49 has been published, is alike instructive and entertaining. The republication of Rev. Dr. Wylie's excellent work, The History of Protestantism, is very timely. We hope that in this commemoration year, many will embrace the opportunity of reading this exhaustive and well-illustrated book. The monthly parts cost 7d. each.

An excellent series of leaflets for letters, entitled, "Leaflets for all Seasons," is issued by the Christmas Letter Mission, 66, Mildmay-park, N. They are in both poetry and prose, and are sold at 1s. 6d. per 100 copies post free.

The latest addition to Messrs. W. B. Horner & Son's excellent series of "Penny Stories for the People" is WILL FULLERTON'S FOLLY, by Sydney Watson—a wholesome story, pointing more than one good moral, as well as to Him who said, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

PASTOR CHINIQUY writes that he has retired from his pastoral charge at St Anne's, Kankakee, Illinois, and is now devoting himself exclusively to the work of lecturing on behalf of Protestanism.

COVERTED CATHOLICS.—A committee has been organised at Yew York to secure a suitable place of worship for the people converted from Roman Catholicism by the efforts of Father O'Connor, editor of The Converted Catholic.

UNITED STATES.—Father Bouland, one of the most eminent members of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States, has gone over to Protestantism; his conscience will not permit him to submit to the latest dogmas of the Vatican.

MR. WARD BEECHER'S SUCCESSOR.—A Reuter's telegram from New York announces that Rev. Lyman Abbott has been elected to the pastorship of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, which has been vacant since the death of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher.

ALGIERS.—Pastor Borel, agent of the McAll Mission, reports progress in this difficult land. The gospel halls are gradually getting filled. At Rouiba, an hour's ride from Algiers, a meeting was recently begun with sixty-two persons. Many other encouraging facts are reported.—Le Signal.

INTOLERANCE IN RUSSIA.—A telegram from Cracow states that the Prefect of Police of Moscow has ordered all Jewish residents, excepting merchants of the First Guild, to leave the town within a fortnight. More than 200 Jewish families coming from Moscow have passed through Cracow within the last two weeks on their way to the United States.

HOLLAND.—The evangelical population founded a union for the purpose of establishing schools independent of the State, because the law forbids the reading of the Bible and Christian teaching in official schools. These independent schools are prospering; at the end of 1886 there were 441, in which 71,000 children receive a good education.—Journal Réligieux.

GERMANY.—Herr Rieks, Roman Catholic priest at Heidelberg, who 14 years ago was the chief agent in the Old Catholic movement, now charges it with having become essentially political, with nothing but the form of Catholic, whose foundation lacks all religious faith. He has therefore with part of his flock come out as the Evangelical Pastor of this new church.—Le Christianisme.

CALCUTTA.—The liquor dens of this city (says The Witness), are an abomination that maketh desolate. While trade is brisk on every day of the week, Sunday is always the busiest day. No man can estimate the vileness, the brutality, the bestial selfishness, and Satanic cupidity of the liquor traffic, who does not visit these grog-shops on the Lord's day. The sight of so many Europeans degraded and almost dehumanised by drink will make the stoutest shudder. Yet Government sanctions the traffic, and promotes the official that fills the treasury with this blood-money.

EVANGELISING JEWS.—The revival of Gentile hatred against the Jews has always been the sign of the commencement of a new historical period for the elect people. The oppression of the Pharaohs preceded the Egyptian exodus. The return of the captivity soon followed the machinations of Haman. The fury of Antiochus Epiphanes broke out shortly before the birth of the Messiah. We may therefore hope for some new deliverance to the Jews at this time. The attention of Christians in France and Switzerland is being increasingly directed to their evangelisation, and societies are being formed, having for their object Evangelisation, properly so called, material and spiritual care of converts or proselytes, and the preparation of missionaries. —Le Evangéliste.

RUSSIA.—A correspondent of The Times writes:—Famine is steadily doing its gruesome work in Russia just now. The peasants are suffering unheard-of misery, which the Government seems far more concerned to hide than to relieve. Hundreds—aye, thousands—have died of hunger during the past six weeks, and large numbers are being carried off every day. Though the Russian peasantry are in the main characterised by a degree of resignation and self-abnegation bordering on heroism or madness, exceptions are not wanting to prove the rule, and in several places the population are showing unmistakable signs of a determination to fall back on the law of nature, according to Hobbes, and struggle for their exisience, in the literal sense of the expression. Foreign Jews are having a hard time of it, especially in Odessa, where large numbers of them have hitherto resided, some of them having spent twenty years and more in banks and counting-houses in the city, and enjoyed the confidence and respect of their fellow-citizens.

PROFESSOR H. DRUMMOND addressed a gathering of gentlemen at Grosvenor House, the residence of the Duke of Westminster, last Sunday afternoon. He will speak in the same place on the next two Sundays.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the Tent Mission, South Norwood, which opens on Friday, June 8.——For blessing on special addresses, by Mr. W. Taylor, of the Evangelisation Society, at the Cage-lane Mission Hall, Plumstead, during June.

With last week's Methodist Times was issued a special supplement containing gratifying reports on the spiritual condition of the churches, as shown by the conversation on the state of the work of God at the annual district meetings.

Sunday Afternoon, June 17.

Melchizedek.—Psalm cx.; Hebrews v. 6—11.

The "Lord" of Psalm cx. must be the Lord Jesus, for this Psalm was quoted by Him to prove He was greater than David (Matt. xxii. 41); by the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, to prove that Jesus is greater than the angels (Heb. i. 13); and by Peter, to prove that He is Lord as well as Christ (Acts ii. 34). "This Psalm," says Dr. Perowne, "is more frequently cited by New Testament writers than any other single portion of the ancient Scriptures. We have in this Psalm a reflection of the history of Melchizedek, and an anticipation of the One who is his great Antitype. The priesthood of Melchizedek was typical of that of our Lord in several particulars. It was—

(1) A Divine Priesthood (Heb. v. 10), "called of God."—"Therefore," says Trapp, "He truly is so, for persons and things are as God calleth them." All true priests were called of God, but the priestly office usually depended upon parentage. This was not so in the case of Melchizedek. He was specially called without reference to parentage. In this sense he was "without father, without mother" (Heb. vii. 3). Comp. "Priest of the most high God" (Gen. xiv. 18). The Lord Jesus was designated for his office (Ps. cx. 1), and anointed for it by Jehovah (Luke iv. 18).

(2) A High Priesthood.—Melchizedek was a high priest (Heb. v. 10). Other chiefs might act as priests to their respective tribes (Exodus ii. 16), but Melchizedek was probably above them all (Heb. vi. 20). This is pre-eminently true of the Lord Jesus. He is above all as to (a) his character.—"Other priests were compassed with infirmity" (Heb. v. 2). In Jesus was "no sin" (1 John iii. 5). (b) His offering.—Others offered blood of bulls and goats (Heb. ix. 13). Jesus "his own blood" (Heb. x. 12). (c) His anointing.—The high priest alone was anointed on the head in the service of consecration (Lev. iv. 3, xxi. 12). Others had only their garments sprinkled (Exod. xxxviii. 41). Comp. anointing of Jesus by the Holy Ghost. (c) His functions.—Only the high priest carried the blood into the most holy place on the Day of Atonement (Lev. xvi.; Heb. ix. 7). The high priest blessed the people (comp. Melchizedek blessing Abraham, Gen. xiv. 19). Comp. Acts iii. 26.

(3) A Royal Priesthood.—The person designated a priest in Ps. cx. is evidently a king. David calls Him Lord (Ps. cx. 1), and assigns to Him the place of authority ("my right hand"). "Under the law," says Dr. Alexander, "there was an impassable barrier between the royalty and the priesthood." Note Uzziah's vain attempt to bridge it over, and the results (2 Chron. xxvi. 16—21). Melchizedek was (a) King of Righteousness (Heb. vii. 2).—He was on the side of the right when he blessed Abraham. Fitting type of Jesus. He is righteous in Himself (1 John ii. 1); He speaks in righteousness (Isa. lxiii. 1), reveals it (Rom. i. 17), loves it (Heb. i. 9), and reigns in consequence of it (Isa. xxxii. 1). (b) King of Peace.—Mechizedek took no part in the war with the kings, and probably his subjects lived in peace as the result of his righteous administration (comp. Isa. xxxii. 17; Ps. lxxxv. 10). Those who will not have Jesus for their Ruler cannot have Him as their Saviour (Rom. x. 9).

(4) A Perpetual Priesthood (Heb. v. 6) "for ever."—Ordinary priests ceased their ministrations at fifty years of age. No such limit in the case of Melchizedek (comp. "without end of life"—that is, probably, a fixed legal end of official life, Heb. vii. 3), or of Christ (Heb. vii. 25).

(5) A Sympathetic Priesthood.—Melchizedeck brought forth bread and wine, symbols of strength and joy (comp. Luke xxii. 19, 20). Abram expressed his gratitude by offering tithes (Gen. xiv. 20). Must have been a large offering, for he was "rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold" (Gen. xiii. 2). Oh for grace to emulate his thoroughness ("of all") and his thankfulness!

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for June 10 (Joel ii. 28, 29):—"And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions: and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit."

Sunday Afternoon, June 17

THE GREAT COMMISSION.

Matt. xxviii. 16—20. Golden Text: Ps. lxviii. 11.

In these verses we have the eighth recorded appearance of Jesus to his disciples after the Resurrection. It is probable that the 500 mentioned in 1 Cor. xv. 6 met at this time with the Apostles, which would account for the place of meeting, a mountain, where all could see Him; in Galilee, removed from the jealous watchfulness of the rulers at Jerusalem, the scene of the greater part of Christ's earthly ministry, and the place where most of his followers would be found.

A mountain.—Probably the same as Mount of Beatitudes.

Jesus had appointed.—This meeting had been foretold by Jesus (xxvi. 32). Again announced by the angel (xxviii. 7), and by the Lord Himself to the women (ver. 10). The place may have been marked out at any of these times.

Ver. 17.—When they saw Him.—Nothing is said as to the manner of his appearance, but that there was something grand, majestic, sweet, we gather from the fact that the assembly fell at his feet in awe and reverence.

Some doubted.—I.e., some of the 500, for the doubts of the eleven had been wholly set at rest. This was the first time that most of them had seen Jesus since the Resurrection, and unbelief struggled with faith. "They doubted that we might never doubt."

Ver. 18.—Jesus came and spake.—Drew near to them, as perhaps they feared to approach Him. Vv. 18—20 cannot give full account of the talk which Jesus had with his disciples. Doubtless there were many questions answered, many fears removed, many misconceptions cleared away. Matthew gives us a very condensed summary of the whole.

The foundation of the commission.—"All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth."

Power implies here power and authority, power coupled with right. All power in earth, therefore the right to advance his kingdom in his own way, to send his servants wherever He will; the power to subdue enemies, to overcome the devices of evil men, to use all events for his glory. In heaven.—All the power of God, the power of the Holy Spirit, the riches of pardon, grace, and glory, to carry out the great design of bringing the world to the knowledge of Himself.

The Commission itself:—

(1) It is laid on every disciple. Go ye.—Not only the eleven, but all the five hundred, and through them upon the whole Church, whom they represented, women as well as men. (In the Golden Text the word for preachers is in the feminine gender). Boys and girls, and all who "hear," are bound to echo the glorious "Come" which they themselves have heard. Go implies activity, energy, not sitting down and expecting people to flock round and hear; but going out to the careless and needy, and those who sit in darkness, and the shadow of death. What are we doing?

(2) It binds us to a world-wide proclamation of the Gospel—all nations. None too far off, or too degraded. "God loved the world" (John iii. 16); "Christ gave Himself a ransom for all" (1 Tim. ii. 6), and all must hear the good news. John's vision of the redeemed Church in glory, gathered out of every kindred and nation and people and tongue, is an encouragement to faith, if such is needed.

(3) It is threefold in character:—

(a) Make disciples of all nations.—Teach here (ver. 19) is a different word to that in ver. 20. It is rather to enrol as pupils than to teach, to bring others into an attitude of listening to the words of Christ. When a nurse is teaching a little child to walk, and wants to bring it to any point, she walks backwards, in front of it, drawing it, winning it to follow; then slips aside and leaves it at the desired place. Teachers and all workers want to win and draw others; and, slipping aside themselves, leave them as pupils at the feet of Jesus.

(b) Baptizing them.—Leading them to make a public profession of faith. This is necessary for the honour of God and for their own spiritual life and walk.

Into the name, &c.—Shows the deep truth underlying this profession, the living union of the believer with the Lord. Name, not names, implying oneness. Unity in trinity.

(c) Teaching them, &c.—Training and p ste work. Conversion is the beginning, not the end Christian life. The babes in Christ need tend and feeding, and nourishing till they grow develop to the measure of the stature of the ful of Christ.

Observe: shows loving, watchful obedience, ke ing and seeking for all the commandments (1 Ch xxviii. 8). Not picking and choosing for oursel but willing for all that He wills.

(4) The promise attached.—"Lo, I am with alway, even unto the end of the world." All po in Him, and that power ever present; all wisdom Him, and that wisdom for us; all grace in H and that reservoir of grace with us; all love Him, and that love ever with us. "They w forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord work with them" (Mark xvi. 20), and the Acts of Apostles are a continuation of the Lord's own w (Acts i. 1). Workers may not always realise presence, but the fact remains. Let us pray, "O Thou mine eyes."

Alway (lit., all the days).—Days of darkness a apparent failure as well as days of gladness. Wo (lit., the age), the present human system.

Last words.—How precious are the last words those whom we have loved on earth, how sacred trust which such words have conveyed to us! Th how precious and sacred to every one of Chri followers should be this last charge; how shou every heart yearn to fulfil its part of the glori work!

Marching orders.—The Duke of Wellington o met a young clergyman, who asked him, "Does your Grace think it almost useless and extravag to preach the Gospel to the Hindoos?" The Du immediately replied, "Look, sir, to your march orders: 'Preach the Gospel to every creature.'"

AUSTRALIAN NOTES.

COMING VISITORS.

The churches of the colony of Victoria are loo ing forward with great pleasure and interest to approaching visit of Dr. Maclaren, of Manchest Dr. Hannay, the representative of the Congre tional Union of Great Britain, is also expect with pleasure, while the evangelists of the colo are cheered by the prospect of the sojourn amo them for a time, of Mr. George Clarke, who is conduct evangelistic services throughout Victo in June.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATIONS.

While the resources of Victoria are being tax to provide a fitting celebration of the Centenary the Australian Continent by a great Internatio Exhibition in August next, religious moveme are not forgotten. Bishop Goe, head of the Ang can community in Melbourne, has just held a la meeting of Victorian clergy to consider the b method of holding a simultaneous parochial missi in connection with the Centenary in July. T general plan of a mission was discussed. Religio movements of a similar kind are to be held in t other colonies.

THE GAMBLING SPIRIT.

Many will regret to hear that a motion co demning the raising of money for church purpos by bazaars, raffles, and similar entertainments w lost at the recent meeting of the New South Wa Episcopal Synod. The gambling spirit is strongly developed in the colonies that the church ought to join together in a "solemn league a covenant" against it. How can our churches p test against gambling if their own hands are n clean? The people should sustain the churches wit out being cozened into doing so, by "race-game and "art-unions."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Henry Thorne has recently given his address entitled, "From the Stage to the Cross, or the Story of my Life," to very large audiences at Carlisle, Tewkesbury, Cheltenham, and Stroud.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, of the Children's Special Service Mission, is conducting meetings at Great Malvern. There were large audiences on Sunday, the opening day of the mission, and a good work is confidently expected.

Gloucestershire.—Successful mission services have been held recently at Arlington and Poulton, conducted by Rev. James Sprunt, of Marylebone, London. The word has been preached "with signs following." Mr. Sprunt is now conducting a mission at Winson.

Atherstone.—Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has concluded a very successful mission here. The meetings were attended by many Christian people, and they found much spiritual profit. A number of persons who had not previously realised their lost condition as unrepentant sinners, sought pardon and found peace in believing on the Lord Jesus Christ. The mission included services to men and women in factories, and an address, to men only, on the subject of purity. Altogether, there are many reasons for thankfulness to God for Mr. Hallowes's visit.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has closed a remarkable series of revival services at St. Paul's, Minnesota. At the last meeting it was stated that there had been not far from 2000 professions of faith, and that 1350 persons had handed in their names signifying an intention to join some church. Professor and Mrs. Towner attended, and sang several melodies. Dr. Munhall advised all the young men to join the Y.M.C.A., and the ladies to support the Young Women's Temperance Union. A number of pastors bore testimony to the power and spiritual character of Dr. Munhall's preaching. One of them remarked that the meetings had abundantly proved the reality of Christian love and fellowship in the city.

Malta.—During the past fortnight, meetings have been held here at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, Vittoriosa, by Mr. J. W. Moodie. The meetings, especially those at Fort Manoel, have been well attended; some of the noisiest audiences have been awed into perfect silence as Mr. Moodie reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, and several of the soldiers led to decide for Christ. Will our readers pray that God may prosper the work on the island; also that He will bless the work at Gibraltar, where Mr. Moodie now is? A Tract Mission has been started in Malta: tracts, copies of The Christian, and other papers will be thankfully received by Mr. Boyle, Scripture-reader, Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, 104, Strada San Lorenzo, Vittoriosa, Malta.

Mr. James B. Wookey desires us to state that he has removed his private residence from 90, Almack-road, to 139, Powerscroft-road, Clapton, London, E.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken will conduct a mission in Christ Church, High Barnet, from June 17 to July 1. Prayer is requested for a blessing on these services, and praise for what the Lord has done during the Mission in Belfast.

Mr. John M. McAuliffe writes from Lorraine Villa Tunbridge Wells:—I have begun my summer work in villages with the Wayside Bible Carriage. I purpose labouring in the Peak district of Derbyshire and the West Riding of Yorkshire this summer. May I ask the prayers of your readers, that it may please our God to give his blessing. We shall be glad to give to any Christian walking in sound doctrine and in soberness of life a warm welcome, and we will find them work to do.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following Missions have been arranged in connection with this Society for June. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by our readers. Revs. W. Hay Aitken and Dr. Morris: June 16—July 2, Christ Church, Barnet. Rev. R. Catterall: to June 12, Burnage, Manchester; June 17, St. Matthew's, Manchester; June 24—25, Church Kirk, Accrington. Rev. A. R. D'Arcy: June 14—20, Christ Church, Malvern. Rev. J. H. Haslam: June 10, Parish Church, Gravesend; June 11, St. Barnabas', Sutton; June 17, Emmanuel Church, West Dulwich; June 24, Parish Church, Dartford. Rev. J. Stephens: June 9—22, Gawsworth; June 23—July 4, Middleton St. George.

SPAIN.—The parish church of Molin-de-Rey, in the environs of Barcelona, has just been the scene of an event uncommon in Spain, or indeed anywhere else. The priest in preaching against the liberal schools, declared the children were in these schools being led to the galleys. Whereupon a high functionary of the town stood up and indignantly said, "You lie!" This was the signal for a tumult, many others shouting, "Yes, you lie; these men are right." The priest was obliged to take refuge in the sacristy, the church being quickly emptied of the faithful.—Le Signal.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Yorkshire Evangelical Union will hold its annual meetings at York on Tuesday and Wednesday next, Bishop Hellmuth presiding.

Rev. Prebendary Hunt, well known as a staunch evangelical clergyman; has resigned the vicarage of Holy Trinity, Weston-super-Mare, which he has held since 1861.

The meeting at Sion College, in connection with the newly organised Ladies' Home Mission Union of the Church Pastoral Aid Society, announced in our last issue for June 8, is unavoidably postponed.

Captains Rhodes and Allison, the two working-men missionaries of the Church Army in North India, report well of their work, in which they are much encouraged; there have already been several conversions as the result of their labours.

Rev. Walter Bradbury has concluded a mission in the Parish Church of Wadsley, Yorkshire (population 6000). The vicar's last words were, "You will have no reason to regret taking this mission." It is expected Mr. Bradbury will return for another mission to the children in the winter.

The consecration of Holy Trinity Church, Latimer-road, better known as "The Harrow Mission Room," took place on Saturday. The building is seated for over 700, and was built by the Harrow boys and friends, along with a contribution from the Bishop of London's Fund. Rev. W. Laws is the incumbent.

At the invitation of Rev. Prebendary Mason, a large number of Jews attended a special service in Christ Church, Birmingham, on the evening of Trinity Sunday, when Rev. M. Wolkenberg, preached a special sermon on the subject of the Trinity. It is felt that these services, which have been held occasionally for some years past, have been productive of great spiritual good both directly and indirectly.

In the C.M.S. College in Tinnevelly, South India, Rev. H. J. Schaffter, the principal, has been much encouraged by the conversion of a young Brahmin student, who had formerly been a bitter opponent; he has already been the means of bringing a wealthy friend to Christ, and has so influenced others that quite a dozen are stated to be "trembling on the brink," and to be saying to the two first, "We come, too, if you hold fast."

Rev. W. A. Rice, curate of St. Luke's, Wolverhampton; Rev. A. E. Johnston, curate of St. Luke's, Dublin; and Miss Edith Baldey, daughter of Rev. F. Baldey, of Southport, have been accepted for missionary work abroad by the Church Missionary Society. More than 340 offers of service were received by the Society in the year ending April 30, and of these forty-six were from Christian women. Forty-three candidates were accepted, including twelve ladies.

At Saltley, a suburb of Birmingham, there is a population of 8000 souls, consisting chiefly of the artisan and labouring classes. The district includes in its area two large railway carriage works, gas works, rolling mills, small arms factory, bicycle works, and paper mills. In this centre a mission-hall has been opened, under the vicar, Rev. John Longley, an earnest and hard-working clergyman. The mission-hall secures the advantages of Sunday evangelistic service and Bible-classes for both young men and young women; and also, during the week, of mission service, lectures, &c.

PRESBYTERIAN.

At St. Andrew's Church, Torquay, a recent sale of work on behalf of missions in China and Formosa realised £173.

President Cleveland attended the centenary gatherings of the two American Presbyterian Assemblies, and urged the union of the two bodies, which separated thirty years ago on the slavery question.

Mr. J. T. Morton, of Caterham, following up his generous offers to the foreign missions of the English Presbyterian, Free, and United Presbyterian Churches, purposes supporting for three years a medical missionary and two native assistants in connection with the Irish Presbyterian Church at a new station in India.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. J. Ossian Davies, of New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N., has accepted the invitation to the pastorate of Richmond Hill Church, Bournemouth. He has been induced to take this step on account of the ill health of his son.

Rev. E. Reeves Palmer, having relinquished the superintendence of the British and Foreign Bible Society's work in Spain, is about to enter upon the pastorate of St. Andrew's Congregational Church, North Shields. Rev. John Jameson, U. P. missionary, has assumed the charge of the Bible Society's agency in Madrid.

Rev. Samuel Pearson preached his farewell sermons in Great George-street Chapel, Liverpool, on Sunday week. The congregations were very large, and it was evident that the members of the church felt deeply the departure of their esteemed pastor, who has so faithfully laboured among them during the past nineteen years. On Sunday last Mr. Pearson entered upon the pastorate of Highbury-quadrant Chapel, which has been vacant since Dr. Llewellyn Bevan left for Melbourne. There were large congregations.

Mr. A. J. Swann, of the London Missionary Society, previous to returning to Mission work at Kavala Island, Lake Tanganyika, Central Africa, was presented at Highbury Chapel, Bristol, with a cheque for £25 wherewith to purchase a harmonium. Mr. Swann has already spent five years in the work, having held the position of mate on the mission steamer Good News, Capt. Hore being in command. The health of Capt. Hore having broken down, necessitating his departure for England, Mr. Swann goes back to succeed him in his duties. He sailed on Thursday last.

METHODIST.

A series of special services have been held at Yarmouth, with cheering results.

Rev. H. Little, of Negapatam, India, is anxious for Mr. Champness to send out a Joyful News evangelist, if possible a mechanic, who could teach the native lads "to work at their trades."

With few exceptions the annual meetings of the Wesleyan district committees have petitioned Parliament against the compensation clauses of the Local Government Bill, and against the licensing of immorality in India.

SALVATION ARMY.

Twenty officers in Canada have volunteered for India.

Work is to be commenced in Dublin immediately, a building having been secured.

Largely attended holiness meetings were held in Exeter Hall on Monday and Tuesday last.

The "Life Guards" are to commence a march through Berkshire and Oxford, on June 11. Meetings will be held in a large number of towns.

Eleven members of Parliament paid the fines imposed upon the last batch of soldiers sentenced at Torquay, in order to prevent their imprisonment, pending the result of the effort to repeal the clause in the Torquay Harbour Act.

Eight Salvationists have gone to Maidstone gaol for preaching in the village of Sundridge, near Sevenoaks, and twelve more are undergoing seven days with hard labour, having been charged with obstructing a roadway in a little country hamlet, called Brasted, in the same locality.

BAPTIST.

The forty-seventh annual meeting of the Baptist Tract and Book Society was held last week. The report stated that free grants of 591,439 tracts and handbills had been made to 300 places in England and Wales, 21 in Scotland, 3 in Ireland, and 15 in foreign parts.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon is still suffering severely from the effects of a chill contracted about a fortnight ago, and there is little likelihood of his being able to resume his ministerial duties for some time longer. His place at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday morning was taken by Dr. Sinclair Paterson.

A memoir of the late Rev. George Pearce, who went as a missionary to India in 1826—sixty-two years ago, on June 22—and died there in June last year, has been published. It contains the story of a devoted and exceedingly useful life. Rev. Thomas Evans, who has himself laboured in India for thirty-four years, is the writer.

At the annual meeting of the Leicestershire Baptist Association at Syston last week, a letter was read from the secretary of the Leicestershire and Rutland Congregational Union, proposing that there should be a united meeting of the Congregationalists and Baptists, with a view to considering the desirableness of a union of the two bodies. It was decided to hold a meeting as suggested, and to invite the general Baptists of the country to take part.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A successful series of Gospel temperance meetings were addressed in Dublin last week by Canon Basil Wilberforce.

During the year twenty-five women sought the shelter and help of the Belfast Prisongate Mission, and several hopeful conversions have taken place. There are now sixty inmates in the Home, which is nearly self-supporting.

A new Methodist mission tent has been pitched at Derrygonnelly for a series of special evangelistic services. The congregations are large, and the services are proving a signal success. Rev. J. S. M'Dade is the missioner.

The Methodists of Belfast are going to organise a town mission. A number of gentlemen interested in the question met last week, and promised a sum of £250 a year for five years towards the expenditure, and are about to ask the coming Conference for a minister to take charge of the work.

Gospel meetings have just been held in the Methodist Church, Comber, by Rev. Henry Ball and others; in Bantry and Kilorglin, by Rev. Charles Inwood; and in the Methodist Church, Stephen's-green, Dublin, by Rev. Thomas Cook, British Conference evangelist. In each case souls were won for Christ.

The Methodists of Belfast have had a large and influential meeting to consider what steps should be taken for further aggressive work in this large and ever-increasing town. It appears the population is increasing at the rate of 4000 each year. The question of increased church accommodation and mission work among the masses is, therefore, an engrossing subject among all the churches.

The annual meeting of the Irish Congregational Union, and the annual Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, were held in Belfast last week. The annual meeting of the General Assembly takes place this week. At the union meetings delegates were present from the Congregational Unions of England, Wales, and Scotland, and Rev. Henry E. Bennett, of Sligo, was elected chairman for the coming year.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. R. J. Bryce, LL.D., Reformed Presbyterian minister, Belfast.—Mrs. Rebekah Maria Morley, widow of the late Mr. Samuel Morley.—Mrs. H. Baker, sen., of Cottayam, Travancore, for seventy years a missionary of the Church Missionary Society, in India; in 1819 she went to Travancore, where she continued to labour to within a week of her death. "Thousands and tens of thousands have heard from her lips the story of the Cross, and many will one day call her blessed."—Rev. Devasagayam Gnanamuttu, a native pastor of the Church Missionary Society at Tinnevelly, South India, since 1847.—Rev. Dr. John Hannah, archdeacon of Lewes, Sussex, and late vicar of Brighton.—Mrs. John Spurgeon, mother of Revs. C. H. and J. A. Spurgeon.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.—At the workers' meeting held on Friday, June 1, Mr. Isaacs earnestly pleaded for more workers, especially for the open-air work during the summer, also for the Boys' Institute, as some of the regular staff are leaving London. Help for the Scandinavian meeting is also much needed. A party of missionaries starting for the Congo—the Misses Butcher, Phillips, and Witham, and Mrs. Oram, lately a worker at the "Rest"—were present, and gave interesting accounts of the way they had been led to give themselves for work abroad. Mr. Stanley gave an address from Matt. xii. 18, 21, "Behold my servant," stimulating all workers to the imitation of Christ's service in its voluntariness, obedience, lowliness, completeness, self-denial, and restfulness.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

ZENANA BIBLE & MEDICAL MISSION.

Or Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, in co-operation with the Church Missionary and other Protestant Missionary Societies in India. Established 1852.

THE OBJECT OF THE SOCIETY IS THREEFOLD, VIZ.:—

1. To send to the women of India the Gospel, by means of female missionaries.
2. To alleviate their sufferings in sickness, and minister to their spiritual need, through the agency of duly qualified lady medical missionaries.
3. To promote education, especially among the higher classes, based on Holy Scripture.

The agencies it employs are:—

1. English lady Zenana missionaries.
2. Fully-qualified lady medical missionaries.
3. Eurasian and native assistants, Bible-women, nurses, &c.

Miss ALICE K. MARSTON, L.K.Q.C.P.I.
Miss MARY PAILTHORPE, M.B. London.

Others will have obtained their diplomas by next year.

There are 120,000,000 of women in India, one-third of whom are computed to be shut up in Zenanas. They can, therefore, only be reached by means of female agents.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Society's income has nearly doubled during the last seven years, and that its operations have considerably more than doubled, the present income is altogether inadequate if the appeals and calls from India for more missionaries are to meet with any response. £1,000 additional income must be raised during this year to carry on efficiently present operations. The Committee earnestly APPEAL for CONTRIBUTIONS towards this sum.

Donations and subscriptions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, the Lord Kinnaird, or by the Secretary, 2, Adelphi-terrace, London, W.C.

Bankers—Ransom, Bouverie & Co.

REV. GEORGE EVERARD,

Vicar of Christ Church, Dover.

BY voice and pen alike the subject of this brief sketch has for years been known to the public as a devoted minister of Christ. Diligent in religious effort, and fervent in spirit, he has ever endeavoured to serve the Lord with cheerfulness as well as godly fear. Not many men have been privileged to write so many tracts and books as Mr. Everard; in every case, however, there has been a high motive in publication, and while, on the one hand, solemn warnings have been uttered against corrupt doctrine, on the other hand, Christian counsels have been put forward to meet the circumstances of all classes and conditions of people.

Rev. GEORGE EVERARD, M.A., Scholar of St. John's College, Cambridge, is in no sense merely a nominal servant of Christ. His position as a clergyman is not owing to family advice or personal preference, but to religious conviction and an ardent desire to show forth God's praise. The story of his early spiritual experience is soon told. In 1846, when engaged in business pursuits in Manchester, he found the power of a new life in Christ; and without delay gave himself to the Gospel ministry, entering Cambridge in 1847.

Mr. Everard's first charge was at Ramsgate, where he resided from 1852 to 1854. He subsequently laboured at Marylebone and Hastings, and in 1858 was appointed to the vicarage of Framsden, Suffolk, which he held for ten years. Then, leaving rural life, he engaged in work in the Black Country of South Staffordshire, and was by no means the first to find much true spiritual metal and many bright Christian lights among the horny-handed colliers and iron-workers of that busy region. From 1868 to 1884 Mr. Everard laboured hard as Vicar of St. Mark's, Wolverhampton, and he was privileged to see many results of a very cheering character. Nearly 200 working men attended the Sunday morning school, and 150 attended the men's Bible-class. The church had about 600 communicants, and a great deal of temperance work was done.

Leaving Wolverhampton in 1884, Mr. Everard entered upon his present charge, Christ Church, Dover. Here every endeavour is made to bear a faithful testimony for Christ and his Gospel. On Sundays and week-days evangelistic work is carried on, and on Sunday evenings there are gatherings of from 150 to 200 of the lowest and poorest of the people.

Outside parochial duty Mr. Everard has conducted missions in various parts of the country. His chief work, however, has been by his pen, and, considering the large circulation attained by some of his writings, he may almost be described as a clergyman having the world for his parish.

"Day by Day," a book of counsels to Christians on the details of everyday life, has reached a circulation of over 40,000, and been blessed to many readers. A young man in Canada died with a copy under his pillow, and there was reason to believe that it had led him to seek and find the Saviour. Afterwards his father gave copies to each of his brothers and sisters. Of "Not Your Own," written for young Christians, about 44,000 have been sold. It has been translated into French and Tamil. A copy in the latter tongue was picked up by a native of Tinnevelly on a bookstall at Penang; it was the means of his conversion, and the native pastor at Tinnevelly, whom he subsequently assisted, found him a valuable helper. Other books published for Mr. Everard by Messrs. J. Nisbet & Co., contain plain advice about immorality, gambling, and similar sins; others, again, expose the errors of semi-Romanism, so common at the present day.

Upwards of 130 tracts and small books on the list of the Religious Tract Society and a very large number published by the Drummond Depôt, are from the pen of Mr. Everard. One of them, intended for mission purposes, "Only Trust Him," has been greatly owned of God in leading souls to find peace in Christ. The story is told of one young lady, who read a copy which had been sent to her mother in a letter. It was as a word from on high, inviting her to that surrender of self which is essential to the realisation of peace with God. Going upstairs, the young lady knelt down, and there and then gave herself to the Lord Jesus Christ. At the end of twelve months she wrote to the author, telling him of the abiding blessing she had thus found.

Plain, practical, and devotional, as well as containing many apt illustrations from common life, these publications all aim at pointing poor and weak sinners to the gracious and mighty Saviour.

We sincerely trust that Mr. Everard will continue to be blessed with health, and that, by God's grace, he may long carry on with unabated zeal and increasing success the pastoral work to which he is so much devoted. In addition to that, we hope that he may be able to write many more books and tracts, such as God will use to his own glory and the enlightenment of those who are sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death.

"A GLORIOUS VICTORY!"

Yes, "it was a glorious victory," surely, to secure the undivided acceptance from the House of Commons of the resolution demanding the immediate and total abolition of Government regulation of vice in India. Mr. A. S. Dyer, and his Parliamentary backers at home who did their part so nobly, deserve the heartiest thanks of the British nation for securing this result—one that was scarcely anticipated. It was brought about by the sheer moral force that characterised the speeches of those who supported the motion. It was, therefore, a distinct vindication of the law of God, as against the devices of men—a thing of which we see too few examples in our legislative halls.

Mr. W. B. McLaren, who submitted the resolution demanding repeal, acquitted himself finely, both in his marshalling of the miserable facts, and in the high tone of his arguments in support. It was worth a long sitting in the spectators' gallery to hear such views propounded, and earnestly enforced in Parliament, as that there is only one true standard of morality for man and for woman; that the dusky daughters of India are as valuable in God's sight as the wives and daughters of British legislators; and that the thing which is morally wrong can never be politically or physically right. Mr. McLaren's fervid peroration constrained some of the occupants of the ladies' gallery to indulge in hearty hand-clapping—a thing almost unique in the annals of Parliamentary incident. Sir Robert Fowler took equally high ground in seconding the motion from the Government side of the House; while Professor Stuart's bold and weighty deliverance completely cut the ground from under the feet of Sir Richard Temple, who attempted to argue that the motion was "unconstitutional," though he had not the courage of his convictions, and did not submit his amendment. With the solitary exception of Mr. Cavendish Bentinck, that unblushing advocate of the abominable Acts, every speaker, even on the Government side of the House, joined in condemning the practices exposed in Mr. Dyer's letters.

The spokesman of the Government, Sir John Gorst, went out of his way to defend the working of the Acts in England, but did not dare to contend for their continuance in India. His cautious, calculating phrases left the House in a state of uncertainty as to the practical action of the Government. It was soon made apparent to them that if they resisted the motion defeat was certain, and they bent before the gathering storm, rather than break under its power. And so it came to pass that the repeal resolution, on its first presentation to the House, was carried nemine contradicente. Mr. McLaren had remarked in his speech that there was no modern example of such rapid growth in the formation of a strong public opinion as this Indian question had shown. That opinion has been solely created by Mr. Dyer's letters, and the whole matter well illustrates the irresistible moral dynamic force that may be exercised by one determined, righteousness-loving man, gifted with adequate power of utterance. This aspect of the question furnishes much encouragement for all the reformers of to-day.

Though the upshot of the debate of Tuesday week is highly satisfactory thus far, the final conflict has yet to be fought out in India. This somewhat ominous telegram appeared in Friday's papers:—

Simla, June 7.

The action of the House of Commons with regard to the Contagious Diseases Acts in India will be discussed at the next meeting of the Vice-regal Executive Council, with a view to considering what course the Government should take in presence of the adoption of Mr. McLaren's motion. The members of the Indian medical profession have resolved to memorialise Parliament against the repeal of the Acts.

We cannot doubt the ultimate result, but there will be need of vigilant watchfulness till the foul and hateful system is utterly and irretrievably broken up. As Mr. Dyer now occupies a post of vantage in India, and has undertaken the editorship of The Bombay Guardian, we may expect him to complete the process of national enlightenment he has so well begun. He may be assured of the prayerful sympathy of the Christian public at home, and their co-operation in further public action, if it be found necessary.

LONDON CITY MISSION.—The annual evening meeting of this Mission was held last week, in Exeter Hall. Lord Kinnaird, who occupied the chair, said there was hardly a class of workers in this great city not reached by the agents of the Mission. While they gladly welcomed all adjuncts in the work of reclaiming the poor, those who were working on non-evangelical lines must excuse them if they said they could not depart from their old standpoint—the Gospel. The Mission had established a large number of mission-rooms in every part of London, but they should not rest content until every district that needed a mission-room had one. But they should never forget that the special work of the Mission was individual house-to-house visitation. Archdeacon Richardson said that the pressing question of the day was what was to become of the vast multitudes of people who inhabited this great city. There were a good many plans in operation for the solution of that problem, but they did not go deep enough. There could be no question that if they wished to reach the poor they must visit them in their homes. He believed that if philanthropists and social reformers would only go amongst the poor themselves and see their actual condition, they would be moved to give much more liberally than they now did. Sir Douglas Fox, Rev. James Chadburn, Mr. W. Vere (missionary), and others also delivered addresses.

DEMONSTRATION.

We weeping wives of England's soil,
Who dwell in caves or garrets cold,
Whose dress is rags, whose rest is toil,
Whose babes are blighted, starved, and old;
We come with lifted voice to thee,
Our Sovereign and our Gracious Queen:
Wife, widow, mother, grant our plea;
Upon thy woman's heart we lean!

We husbands, fathers, in a host,
With fervent protest, earnest prayers,
Who see our wives, our daughters lost
Thro' drink, and lust, and all their snares;
We come to you, our Nation's Mind,
Who make our laws and rule our day,
Be no "blind leaders of the blind,"
But sweep "th' accursed thing" away!

We brothers, who have sisters soiled,
We sisters, who have brothers slain;
By all that virtue guards unspoiled,
We come to you! Wash out this stain!
"Crusaders" 'gainst this deadly ill
We struggle upwards in the fight,
Toiling and panting up the hill
Of human wrong and Satan's might!

Give us a helping hand along;
Nor push us backward in the flood,
Where drifting souls in current strong
Are daily drowned in their own blood.
With broken hearts, and blighted fame,
In empty homes and pauper's bed,
Come, see the fruit of England's shame
Before you feed this hydra head.

Come, if you seem to doubt our word;
Come, and behold each East-end street;
Come where the publican is lord;
Come, see his victims at his feet.
His wife is dressed in silken sheen,
His children delicately shod;
His pony carriage "stops the way;"
His laugh is loud, his gold his god.

And must we pay to help his trade;
To line his pockets with our lives;
Stitch, stitch with needle, delve with spade;
And starve our children, and our wives?
Forbid it, Righteousness and Truth!
Forbid it, Justice balanced even!
Forbid it, Mercy, Love, and Truth!
Forbid it, Lord of earth and heaven!

"THE KING'S DAUGHTERS."

The world is seldom blessed with such a meeting, in numbers, in quiet enthusiasm, and in spirit as was lately held in the building of the Y.W.C.A., in New York City. It was a meeting of "The King's Daughters," assembled "in his name." There were ladies elegantly dressed, and close beside them hardworking housewives and shop girls and women neatly but plainly clad. There were grey-haired women and little girls, all under the magic power of his name and his love, on an equality, and almost every face beaming with tenderness.

"The King's Daughters," one lady speaker said, in concluding a beautiful address, are now working for home and foreign missions, educating men for the ministry, engaged in hospital work, fruit and flower missions, kindergartens, day nurseries, coloured homes, tenement houses, fresh-air fund, and countless small kindnesses which add as much to the sum of human happiness as greater charities. There are Sisters' Tens, Mothers' Tens, Old Maids' Tens, Happy Workers' Tens, with "How happy is our lot" as their motto, and the Happy Ten are sick in bed, being chronic invalids. Then there are the Sunbeam Tens, whose work is to keep the wrinkles off mothers' faces. To do deeds of kindness, to work out in daily life, in small as well as in great things, so called, the Christian law of love, is the ruling motive of this Association. What a harvest may be expected from those who surrender themselves "in his name" to the ministries of Christian love.—Christian Intelligencer.

The Missionary Conference.

The International Missionary Conference now taking place at Exeter Hall, the preliminary meetings of which we report to-day, marks an era in the history of missions, and an epoch in the evangelisation of the world.

The reception of delegates on Saturday was far more numerously attended, and greater enthusiasm was displayed, than anyone appeared to have anticipated — an enthusiasm which increases as subjects of deepening interest are brought under consideration.

Dr. Underhill's brief sketch of the preceding Conferences showed that the present gatherings are in continuance of a movement begun several years ago. But the present Convention is far in advance of its predecessors, and is at once a proof of, and a factor in, the onward tide of missionary interest, which places the preaching of the Gospel of the kingdom to all nations within measurable distance of the present generation. No one can be blind to the coincidence of the political movements which have thrown open the gates of all nations to the Gospel; the facilities of travel, which render access to them easy; the awakening of Christians to the Saviour's last command, and the rising spirit of obedient and believing enterprise, which is driving the Church into the wilderness of the nations, to be tested by and to overcome the devil.

The smaller meetings for members are, perhaps, the most important and the most interesting. Here theories and methods are discussed by men who have practically tested them, and who record the results of their experience; yet their testimonies vary, and there is a seeming diversity which proves to be consistent with substantial harmony, as the subject is thrashed out by successive speakers. They all agree in fundamental principles; but one emphasises one side, and another the opposite side, according to the circumstances in which he has been placed, and the view of each becomes modified and enlarged by seeing both sides of the question.

The need of a direct and unmistakable call to the mission field by the Holy Spirit is the first necessity; then there will be found, in the called, diversities as great as exist between the members of the body and their various functions.

Much difference of view was expressed as to Medical Missions—it being asserted on the one hand that a missionary must be qualified thoroughly or not at all. On the other, it was shown that all knowledge and skill may be utilised: the truth being that no one should pretend to more than he possesses, and that while the highest medical and surgical education is of the greatest value for the distinctively medical missionary, the least knowledge and skill in the treatment of the sick and suffering are useful adjuncts to distinctly spiritual work.

The replies of Dr. Bruce, Dr. Post, and Mr. Glenny to Canon Taylor's eulogy of Mohammedanism were crushing and complete; and the remarks of Sir William Hunter on the same subject verified and supported them.

The simple fact of so large a number of missionaries from distant lands (many of them unknown by name, because they have buried themselves for years among the heathen), meeting so many delegates from the Continents of Europe and America, as well as from all parts of our own land, cannot but result in thousands of Christian men and women being scattered everywhere, preaching the Word.

Priesthood v. Priestcraft.

God and Satan know that a confessional and a priest are absolute necessities to those whose consciences have become sensible of sin. God has met this need in the Throne of Grace and in our Great High Priest. Satan has invented a counterfeit in the confessional box and the earthly priesthood.

The only true priesthood, and that which God has consecrated, consists of (1) Jesus the Son of God, who has passed through the heavens and ever liveth to make intercession for us; and (2) his people on earth, whom He has washed from our sins in his own blood, and made kings and priests—a royal priesthood—to his God and Father. There is no other High Priest but Jesus, who is in heaven; no other priesthood on earth but that of all the saints.

Satan, however, has by means of Popery—his travesty of God's religion—set up a counterfeit confessional and a pseudo-priesthood. These are the pillars of his Dagon temple. It is by these Babylonish imitations of the truth—brick for stone, and slime for mortar—that he is undoing the Reformation, and turning the Church of England back to Rome.

A Romanising Ritualist, whom Mr. Gladstone forced on an evangelical congregation in the north of London, has published a Letter on Confession in the Church of England, in which it is said that "Confession is an instinct of nature—the teaching of human nature—but absolution is the gift of Christ." This is the truth which forms the thin end of the wedge of error. Here is the wedge itself:—

> You say you confess your sins to God. But how will you know when you are forgiven? When you have repented enough? Prayed enough? You want a Messenger, as Nathan came to David and said, "The Lord also hath put away thy sin," so the priest comes to the really penitent heart. "By his authority committed to me I absolve thee." And the heart that is really sorry believes it, and its faith makes it whole.

Thus with astonishing impudence the priesthood of Jesus the Son of God is set aside; the promise of grace to help in time of need to those who come confidently to the throne of grace is discounted by the intrusion of a sinful man; a contemptible imitation of the transferable Aaronic priesthood is foisted into the place of the Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedek; an order of dying sinners is interposed between the souls of men and the First-begotten from the dead, who, because He continueth ever, hath an untransferable priesthood, and is able to save them to the uttermost who come unto God by Him, seeing that He ever liveth to make intercession for them. The charlatanry which claims Christ's priesthood is only exceeded in arrogance by the claim of Antichrist to sit in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.

If even Jesus "were on earth He would not be a priest at all, seeing that there are priests who offer gifts according to the law." The claimant of priesthood other than that common to all believers must justify his claim, by having been in all points tempted like other men — without sin; by having offered up himself; by having died, and having been raised from the dead; by the declaration and oath of God; by the power of an endless life; by being king of righteousness, and king of peace; holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners; by having passed through the heavens, having been made higher than the heavens; having sat down on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens. The very mention of such a claim by any man other than Jesus the Son of God, is sufficient to expose its blasphemy.

This is the crowning point of the Gospel —we have such a High Priest—a Great Priest over the house of God; by whom we are bidden to draw near; to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus.

Surely if the Apostle were here in England he would repeat what he wrote to the saints at Corinth (2 Cor. xi. 3, 4, and 13 to 15):—

> I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve in his craftiness, your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity and the purity that is toward Christ. For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we did not preach, or if ye receive a different spirit, which ye did not receive, or a different Gospel, which ye did not accept,... such men are false apostles, deceitful workers, fashioning themselves into apostles of Christ. And no marvel; for even Satan fashioneth himself as an angel of light. It is no great thing, therefore, if his ministers also fashion themselves as ministers of righteousness; whose end shall be according to their works.

In permitting this false priesthood to be established in our midst, we are but following in the steps of Israel, who committed two evils: first, they had forsaken God, the fountain of living waters; and, secondly, they had hewn out to themselves cisterns, broken cisterns, which could hold no water.

The very hewing out of useless cisterns was a confession that water was a necessity. The taking up with a sinful priesthood is an acknowledgment of the need of a priest. It is also a proof that the true Priest has been forsaken. The first evil committed by evangelical Christians has been that they have neglected, forgotten, ignored the present priestly ministry of Jesus the Son of God, and not one Christian in ten appears to have any practical experimental acquaintance with the Son of God as the Priest after the order of Melchisedek.

Unless Evangelical Christians declare the need of a confessional and a priest, and display the banner of the truth—the Throne of Grace, the only true confessional, and Jesus the Son of God, the only Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedek—we shall protest in vain against the unclean confessional and the effeminating priesthood of Popery at Rome, or of Romanisers in England.

DOCK LABOURERS' MISSION.—The twenty-sixth anniversary of this Mission was recently celebrated. The women attending the mothers' meetings were provided with a good tea, and the children of the Sabbath-school were also entertained to tea. Many blessed testimonies were given of God's saving grace among the women and children.

WORK FOR GOD IN THE ARMY.—The annual meeting of the Army Scripture-readers' and Soldiers' Friend Society was held in the Lower Room, Exeter Hall, on the evening of the 1st inst. The Chaplain-General of the Forces, Rev. Dr. J. C. Edghill, presided. The secretary, Mr. W. A. Blake, read the yearly report. Eighty-one readers are employed at several military stations at home and abroad. Special attention is paid to temperance work. More agents are urgently needed; but in the present state of the funds the Committee find it difficult to maintain the existing staff. The income for the past year was £11,342 12s. 4d., and the deficit, including liabilities, is quoted at £1583 13s. 11d. Earnest appeals were made by the Chairman and subsequent speakers. Major Evered Poole, General Copland Crawford, R.A., with other officers and chaplains, took part in the proceedings.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent s Park Chapel·

XV.—The Divine Guest.—Gen. xviii.

When, in the course of some royal progress, a sovereign deigns to sojourn in the homestead of one of the subjects of his realm, the event becomes at once the theme of chroniclers, and the family selected for so high an honour is held in deepened respect. But what shall we say in the presence of such an episode as this, in which the God of heaven became the guest of his servant Abraham!

There is no doubt as to the august character of one of the three who, on that memorable afternoon, when every living thing was seeking shelter during the heat of the day, visited the tent of the patriarch. In the first verse we are expressly told that Jehovah appeared unto him in the plains of Mamre, as he sat in the tent door in the heat of the day. And in the tenth verse there is the accent of Deity, who alone can create life, and to whom nothing is too hard, in the words of promise which tell how certainly Sarah should have a son. And, besides, we are told that two angels came to Sodom at even. Evidently they were two of the three who had sat as Abraham's guests beneath the tree, which sheltered his tent in the blazing noon. And as for the other, who throughout the wondrous hours had been the only spokesman, his dignity is disclosed in the amazing colloquy which took place on the heights of Mamre, when Abraham stood yet before the Lord, and pleaded with Him as the Judge of all the earth.

It was thus that the Son of God anticipated his incarnation; and was found in fashion as a man before He became flesh. He loved to come incognito into the homes of those He cherished as his friends, even before He came across the slopes of Olivet to make his home in the favoured cottage, where his spirit rested from the din of the great city, and girded itself for the cross and the tomb. "He rejoiced in the habitable parts of the earth, and his delights were with the sons of men."

It is very marvellous! We may well ask with deepest reverence and awe the question of Solomon, when he felt the utter inadequacy of his splendid Temple as the abode of the eternal God: "Will God in very deed dwell with men on the earth? Behold the heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain Thee;. how much less this house which I have built." But this question has been for ever settled by God Himself, in the majestic words: "Thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive tne spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones" (Isa. lvii. 15). And the life of our blessed Master is a delightful commentary on these mighty affirmations. He said to a publican, "Zaccheus, make haste and come down, for to-day I must abide at thy house." He went to the home of Peter, and was ministered to by one whom He had raised from the gates of death. And after his resurrection, He entered the humble lodging of the two disciples in whose company He had walked from Jerusalem, seeking to dry their tears as they went.

Nor is this all. There is no heart so lowly into which He will not enter still. There is no home so humble, in which He will not make Himself a welcome inmate. There is no table so poorly provided, at which He will not sit, turning the water into wine, multiplying the loaves and fish, and converting the simple meal into a sacrament. As He sits at meat with those He loves, He still takes bread, and blesses it, and breaks, and gives to them. (Luke xxiv. 30.) To each and all He says, as He stands laden with raiment, eyesalve, gold, and viands for the evening meal. "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me."

Abraham evidently, at the outset, did not realise the full meaning of the episode in which he was taking part. We so often do not value aright circumstances and characters with whom we come in contact. It is only as we look back on them, as they pass away from us for ever, that we realise that we have been entertaining angels unawares. Let us so act always and everywhere, that as we review the past we may have nothing to regret; and may not have to reproach ourselves with having omitted to do something which we would have inserted in our programme, had we only realised our opportunities.

Abraham treated his visitors with true Eastern hospitality.—He ran to meet them, and bowed himself toward the ground. He proposed water for their feet, and rest for their tired frames, beneath the spreading shadow. He started his wife to immediate kneading of the meal for baking on the scorching stones. He ran to choose his tenderest calf, refusing to delegate the work to another's hand. He served them himself, and stood as a servant by their side, under the tree, while they did eat. Christians have not much to boast of, and a good deal to learn, as they consider the action of this old-time saint, and his dealings with the three strangers that came to his tent. The faith which he had towards God had a very winsome aspect towards men. There was nothing in him austere or forbidding, but much that was exceedingly lovely, and brimming with the milk of human kindness.

May it not be that Christ comes to us often in the guise of a stranger?—But we are too busy, or too tired, or too afraid of making a mistake, and, therefore, we either refuse Him altogether, or we treat Him so badly that He passes unobserved away, to carry to someone else the blessing which He would have left with us had we only shown ourselves worthy.

Does He not test us thus? Of course if He were to come in his manifested splendour as the Son of the Highest, everyone would receive Him, and provide Him with sumptuous hospitality. But this would not reveal our true character. And so He comes to us as a wayfaring man, hungry and athirst; or as a stranger, naked and sick. Those that are akin to Him will show Him mercy, in whatsoever disguise He comes, though they know Him not, and will be surprised to learn that they ever ministered to Him. Those, on the other hand, who are not really his, will miss Him, will let Him go unhelped away, and will wake up to find that inasmuch as they did it not to one of the least of these, they did it not to Him (Matt. xxv. 45).

There was much truth in the simplicity of the little German lad, who left the door open for the Lord to enter and sit with his mother and himself at their frugal supper-table; and who, as a beggar stood within the portal, asking alms, remarked: "Perhaps the Lord could not come Himself, and has therefore sent this poor man as his representative."

But God never leaves us in his debt.—He takes care to pay for his entertainment, royally and divinely. He uses Peter's fishing smack, and gives it back, nearly submerged by the weight of the fish which He drove into his nets. He sits down with his friends to a country marriage-feast, and pays for their simple fare by jars brimming with water turned to wine. He uses the five barley loaves and two small fishes, but He fills the lad with an ample meal. He sends his prophet to lodge with a widow, and provides meal and oil for him and her. And Abraham was no loser by his ready hospitality; for, as they sat at meat, the Lord foretold the birth of Sarah's child: "I will certainly return unto thee, and Sarah thy wife shall have a son."

Sarah was sitting inside the flimsy curtain of camel's hair, secluded after the Eastern fashion, for those of high rank; and as she heard the words she laughed within herself the laugh of incredulity. That laugh was at once noticed by Him from whom nothing can be hid, and whose eyes are as a flame of fire. "And the Lord said unto Abraham, Wherefore did Sarah laugh, saying, Shall I of a surety bear a child, which am old? Is any thing too hard for the Lord?"

With strange simplicity she answered through the curtain, denying that she had laughed; for she was afraid. But her reply was met by the stern and uncompromising asseveration, which was altogether final, "Nay, but thou didst laugh." These were the only audible words which we know to have passed between God and Abraham's wife, and they reveal the superficialness and unbelief of her nature. However, she seems to have been led by them into a true faith, for it is said, "By faith also Sara herself received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a child when she was past age, because she judged Him faithful that had promised."

Yes, this is the true law of faith.—Do not look at your faith or at your feelings, but look away to the word of promise, and, above all, to the Promiser. Study the punctuality of his orderings in the starry firmament. Are planets ever overdue? or do the seasons forget to revolve? Consider how accurately He has kept his word with the nations of the past, whose ruined cities attest his judgments! Has He ever failed to keep his word? Is there any conceivable reason why He should not keep it? His power is omnipotent; and would He ever have pledged himself to do what He could not effect? He is faithful that hath promised. Look from faith to the promise, and from the promise to the Promiser. And as we become conscious of the power of vision whilst we look on any object to which we may direct our gaze, so we shall become conscious of the presence and growth of faith as we look away to our faithful God.

"Is any thing too hard for the Lord?"—That is one of God's unanswered questions. It has lain there for 3000 years, perused by myriads, answered by none; unless, indeed, those words of Jeremiah are the only answer, which mortal man can give: "Ah Lord God! behold, Thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and thy stretched out arm, and there is nothing too hard for Thee" (Jer. xxxii. 17).

It may seem to you hard to the verge of impossibility, that ever God should keep his word, in the conversion of that friend for whom you have a warrant to pray, according to 1 John v. 16. Hard to vindicate your character from the aspersions with which it is being befouled. Hard to keep your evil nature in the place of death; and to cast down your evil imaginings, bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. Hard to make you sweet and gentle, forgiving and loving. Hard to produce from you the fruits of a lovely and holy nature. It may be hard, but it is not too hard for the Lord. With God all things are possible. And as Sarah found it, all things are possible to those who believe.

The one thing that hinders God is our unbelief. Sarah must believe, and Abraham also, ere the child of promise could be born. And so must it be with us. As soon as we believe, then, according to our faith it is done to us; yea, exceeding abundantly beyond all we had asked or thought.

It may seem hard that the sins of a life should be forgiven, but God will do it for any penitent and believing soul. "All who believe in Christ are justified from all things." It may seem hard that our naked souls should be attired in vestments fit for the royal palace, but it shall be so, if we believe, for the righteousness of Christ is imputed and reckoned to all who believe. It may seem hard that rebels should become children, yet this, too, shall be, for to them that receive Him He gives the right to become children of God.

You ask how to obtain this faith. Remember that faith is the receptive attitude of the soul, begotten and maintained by the grace of God. Christ is the Author and Finisher of faith, not only in the abstract, but in the personal experience of the soul. Faith is the gift of God. If, then, you would receive it, put your will on the side of Christ; not a passing wish, but the whole will of your being; will to believe patiently, persistently, yearningly; let your eyes be ever toward the Lord; study the promises of God; consider the nature of God; be prepared to be rid of everything that grieves his Holy Spirit; and it is as certain as the truth of Christ, that you will have begotten and maintained in you the faith that can move mountains, and laugh at impossibilities.

And to such faith God will come, not as a passing wayfarer, but to abide; to feast with the soul in holy strengthening fellowship; to fill it with the true laughter; and to leave behind it promises soon to become accomplished facts. "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God Himself shall be with them, and be their God."

A MISSION TO PARAGUAY.—An extremely interesting occasion was the meeting held in the office of the South American Missionary Society (1, Clifford's Inn, Fleet-street, E.C.), to bid farewell to Messrs. Adolpho Henriksen, J. C. Robins, and B. O. Bartlett, who go out under the auspices of the Society to carry the Gospel to the Indians of the Paraguayan Chaco—a vast territory untrodden by the foot of civilised man. Mr. Henriksen, who will be the leader of this enterprise, has lately been to "spy out the land," and has lived there for a short time. A cheering address, in earnest and often touching language, was delivered to the pioneer missionaries by the Bishop of North Queensland, who gave them much practical counsel as to their methods of procedure.

XI.—POOR ROBERT.

EVERYBODY was so sorry for Robert, and he was sorry too; but he declared it was of no use, he could not help himself. He was a most kind-hearted and amiable man, but unfortunately addicted to drink.

When I came to the parish in which he lived, I found Robert at every service and meeting which was held; but again and again he fell, from drink. Pledges were useless in his case; he had "tried them," as he said, "times without number." I suggested that he should give his heart to God, and then ask the Lord to keep him.

"No," he said; "no, I am sure that will do me no good. No one can keep me from the drink when the craving comes upon me."

He was poor Robert indeed! However, one evening it pleased God to touch his heart, and he yielded himself to Him. He sought for mercy and pardon for the past, and, to his great joy, obtained it.

Now he was happy indeed, and went on his way with a light heart. Temptations met him from time to time, but he did not yield. Sometimes, he said, he felt a strong desire for the drink, and by prayer obtained deliverance for the time. At best his was but an up-and-down life, in which he went forward trembling, not knowing how soon he might fall again. He had been told that there was a more victorious way for the child of God than that, but as yet he did not know or see it.

When the Prince of Wales was married there was a general holiday, which proved to be too much for poor Robert. Two days afterwards I was told that he had fallen again, and was worse than ever.

I immediately made it my business to go after him, hoping that kind words might bring him once more to his senses. His wife said to me, "Robert saw you this morning, and has gone off; he says he cannot face you any more, and he added, 'I may as well go and drown myself, for I am no good to anybody! I disappoint everyone who cares for me.'"

I was rather encouraged by this account, and therefore set out to search for him in all directions. Late in the evening, as I was about to give up inquiry, I fell in with him.

"Oh! there you are, Robert," I said; "how are you?"

Looking very sheepish, he said, "I am dreadful sorry that there Queen was married the other day."

"Why is that?" I inquired; "the whole nation is rejoicing in welcoming the new princess."

"They made me drink her health," he said, "and I got upset. It's no use; as I said before, I can't help it. I'm very sorry, if it's only for your sake; but indeed I can't help it. The chaps are delighted to see me tipsy; they think it will hurt you."

"So it does, Robert, very much, and it hurts the Master's cause too, which we have at heart. I am indeed disappointed about you."

"Well, now, that's just it. I said to my missus this morning, I may as well go and drown myself. I'm no good at all to anyone."

Seeing that the poor fellow was very disheartened and really sorry, I took him home with me. He had been starving for the whole day, and no doubt was weary and faint, as well as dejected. I therefore sent him to the kitchen to get something to eat, and after that I had a long talk with him. I said, "Robert, you tell me that you cannot help yourself."

"And that be the real truth, master," he replied; "no one wishes to do well better than I do; but there it is, you see, I can't help myself."

"Well, Robert, I must confess that I believe you when you say you cannot help it; but I want to tell you of One who can help you. Surely by this time you have had falls enough to know how weak you are. Once you thought that the Lord could not pardon your sins, but when you asked Him, how soon He forgave you. Now let us ask Him to take you in hand, on purpose to keep you from the drink, and other things besides."

Poor Robert shook his head, as if he could not believe in anything so good, or so easy as that.

"I tell you, Robert," I continued, "that I know what I am talking about, and I am sure it is as easy for the Lord to deliver you from drink, as it was for Him to pardon your sins."

"Of course, master," said the poor man, "I believe that the dear Lord can do everything; but how can I trust Him, if I can't—I have tried."

"My dear man," I replied, "I do not ask you to try, or to promise, or to resolve. What I ask you to do is, to give up the drink, and then give yourself over to the Lord's keeping. He can not only keep you from drink, but take from you the very desire for it."

"Yes, yes," said Robert, "the Lord can do all that for others; but you see it's not like that in my case. I see plain enough there's no chance for me. I may as well take and drown myself, that I may."

"Robert, I am asking you to do a far better thing than that," I said; "I want you to sign off the drink once for all—for life, you know. And then we will kneel down and ask the Lord to forgive you for all the past, and keep you in the future."

He knelt down, but I could see plainly that he had but little faith in doing so. After a time it seemed as though something was beginning to dawn upon his mind.

He said, "Of course I can see the dear Lord can do it, and it would be better for Him to cure a bad case like mine. I think I begin to see what you are driving at. I know," he added, "some people who say they have lost all taste for the drink, and that they can pass the public without fear or desire to go in!"

"Yes," I said, "and that is what the Lord can do for you also; and He will do so, if you will only let Him. Let us thank Him for it beforehand."

We did this; and in a short time Robert rose from his knees with a hope he had never known before. Though still weak in himself, he became strong in the strength of another. The Lord enabled him to resist temptation, and made him a very different man to what he had been.

It was a sad day for poor Robert when I was called to leave the parish and go to another; but he continued to trust in the Lord, and was kept.

Five years afterwards, when I was passing through the parish again, a friend came up to me and said, "Poor Robert is dying, and wishes to see you. His life has been marvellously sustained for more than a fortnight, but he cannot last much longer. He has been asking the Lord to let him 'set eyes on you once again.'"

I went as soon as I could, and found the dear man peaceful and happy. "Thank you, thank you greatly," said the dying man, "for all your kindness to me. God bless you again and again." He then closed his eyes, and said, "Now, Lord, let thy servant depart," and in less than half an hour he was gone.

CHILDREN'S FRESH-AIR MISSION.—Last year 1762 poor children living in Holborn, Clerkenwell, St. Luke's, and other poor districts of London, were, by this agency, sent into the country, and boarded with cottagers for two or three weeks. The efforts of the Mission are mainly directed to assisting ailing children, and in numerous instances signal benefits have been derived. In a great measure the gratifying success which has attended the efforts of the Mission is due to the hearty co-operation of the ladies and gentlemen who form the band of "country workers." The secretary is Mr. A. Powell, St. Peter's School, Onslow-street, Clerkenwell-road, E.C.

The Centenary of Foreign Missions.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE IN LONDON.

Reception of Delegates.

The great Conference on Foreign Missions is in progress at Exeter Hall, and so far the proceedings have been an augury of important results. A hundred and thirty societies are represented by men of many nations and languages, from both hemispheres. On Saturday afternoon a meeting was held for the reception of delegates. It was certainly an occasion long to be remembered by those who attended. The Large Hall was filled with ladies and gentlemen, all of whom seemed to be thoroughly sensible of the epochal character of that which had called them together. The President of the Conference, the Earl of Aberdeen, performed the duties of the chair with much grace and manifest pleasure, and right cordially received the delegates.

And what an assemblage of delegates it was! Some were representative, and others delegates at large. From all parts they came, in units from the East, in scores from the West. The company included Oriental and Australasian ecclesiastics; labourers from the Dark Continent and the isles of the sea; organisers from America, and missionaries and teachers of various grades and many denominational communions from the Continent of Europe and the great empires of Asia. In the ensemble there was a token of the essential oneness of the Church, and in many a breast there were joyful emotions at the infallible proofs that, though strangers as to earthly relations, all were of heavenly citizenship in the Lord Jesus Christ.

After hearty hand-shakings and happy reunions and recognitions by those who had been long separated, the meeting took a "platform" character, for the exchange of friendly greetings. "All people that on earth do dwell," having been heartily sung, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe led the meeting in prayer. The petition expressed with remarkable fulness and precision the spiritual breathings of those assembled.

THE CHAIRMAN'S WELCOME.

The Earl of Aberdeen said: My first and most pleasant duty and privilege are, on my own behalf and on behalf of the Committee, and all concerned in the organisation of this Conference, to offer a most hearty and cordial welcome and greeting to the delegates who have assembled here from various parts of the world. And I may safely go on to offer an interchange of thankful congratulation not only to the delegates, but to all of those assembled here in such manifest hearty sympathy with the objects of this gathering. Many for some time past have been looking forward with trust and confidence to the blessing of a great stimulus concerning missions, as resulting from the Conference that is now inaugurated. If anything were needed to confirm and establish such confident anticipation, it would be the appearance of, and especially the spirit that animates and pervades, this great gathering. I believe I am only speaking the mind of the Executive Committee when I say that the assembly to-night far exceeds our expectation and anticipation, not only as regards its magnitude, but, as I said before, as regards the enthusiastic cordiality that animates all here assembled. It is not too much to look forward to this series of gatherings as forming an epoch in the history of foreign missions. You all know the prayerful preparation, the great care and consideration with which all the preliminary arrangements have been carried on during many months past, and we are not only justified in now looking forward to such blessing as I have alluded to, but we are bound to do so, and with that spirit of expectation which, we may be sure, will not be disappointed. You are quite aware, too, that this gathering is essentially one of greeting and welcome; and it will be my pleasure to call upon those who have been specially requested to take part in this meeting of welcome. The speeches will therefore be short, but not the less weighty. I may be allowed in this public manner to express regret that Lady Aberdeen has not been able to be present to see so many friends, but we hope next Saturday at our country place, a few miles from London, to see as many friends as possible.

THE HISTORY OF THE CONFERENCE.

Dr. Underhill, chairman of the Executive Committee, stated the origin and purpose of the Conference. This assembly is the fourth Conference on Missions held in this country. The original conception may be traced to a meeting of gentlemen in 1854, in New York, which, however, lasted only a day and a half, and was chiefly confined to a consideration of the general principles of missions. That Conference was almost immediately followed by two deputations to India and the neighbouring islands—one by the Board of Missions in America, and one by the Baptist Missionary Society. These deputations called together a Conference of their respective missionaries throughout India, and most important and valuable results followed. It is probable that these Conferences gave rise to the idea of a general Conference in Bengal of all the missionary agencies; for, in the autumn of 1855, a large number of missionaries gathered in Calcutta, and spent four days in fruitful deliberation. Other Conferences were subsequently held in India and China.

In this country a small gathering of the friends of missions took place in 1854, but it was almost entirely of a private character. Its deliberations were confined for the most part to general questions and matters relating to the time being. The next important Conference was summoned in Liverpool. It lasted four days, and some important minutes were framed and adopted. Some of those minutes remain as admirable guides and teachers to-day.

Eighteen years elapsed before another Conference was called in this country—eighteen years of great progress in Christian missions. In 1878, a gathering of missionary bodies was held at Mildmay. The deliberations were spread over four days, and embraced a wider range of subjects than on any previous occasion. Then for the first time Christian women came to the front as co-operators in the great missionary enterprise. Then we began to gather in results, not only as to the work itself, but also in the missionary spirit which pervaded the churches at home. Then, moreover, we had to consider matters of a more secular kind, such as the emancipation of the slaves in the West Indies, and church order and polity.

Since that Conference was held ten momentous years have gone by—years of hard labour, and of unexampled success in foreign work. There have sprung up many questions of great interest and importance—some of them requiring most delicate handling and consideration—affecting the social condition of the people among whom our missionaries labour; some of these are questions deeply affecting the welfare of the people in the life to come. Many of these questions are not to be settled in a day, but can only be settled by experience—by the accumulated knowledge of the men who have to confront them. Such questions include polygamy, the power and influence of caste, and the clothing of the barbarian. Then there is the important question whether some plan may not be adopted whereby missionaries may be prevented from coming into collision. In some places workers are numerous; in other places there are no workers at all. Cannot there be some understanding among the societies as to whither efforts should be directed? Again, there are the subjects of medical missions, and the work of women in the field. Among other topics, too, are those brought to the front in consequence of the commercial spirit of the age, which throws great obstacles—as for example, liquor and opium—in the way of the Gospel.

At this Conference we have present some one hundred and thirty or one hundred and forty brethren from the United States, who are, like ourselves, engaged in all parts of the mission field. We rejoice to meet them in such numbers, and to witness such a splendid proof as this gathering affords of the power of Christ's Gospel. After all our Lord's prayer is fulfilled, and there is not only "one Shepherd" but "one flock." We recognise each other as brethren in the same Lord, heirs of the same glory, and workers in the same vineyard.

Rev. F. E. Wigram, hon. sec. of the Church Missionary Society, spoke a few words of welcome to the visitors. His recent travels had, he said, accentuated his conviction that those workers are most owned and blessed of God who have most learned the secret of self-obliteration, and have most drunk in the fulness of the Divine Spirit.

Having spoken in illustration of the power of a Christian life, Mr. Wigram said: You all know, I am sure, that if there is to be success in the mission field, there must be on the part of those who manage affairs at home, a seeking with humble prayer for the Holy Spirit's guidance, for spiritual men to do spiritual work. We must watch those whom we send forth, and if we discover that by some misapprehension we have sent out a man who does not respond to the proper description, we must get him home again. We want none but those who can go in the strength of the Divine Spirit. What a comfort it is—I speak from a very happy experience—when the council chamber is the chamber of prayer, and the Holy Spirit's presence is sought to guide, to direct, to over rule!

What a wonderful thought it is that we have gathered together from all parts of the world in this Metropolis of the world—if we may venture so to speak—and we are all here to take counsel together upon the Lord's work! Let us ever come to the meetings of the Conference with a deep consciousness of our own insufficiency, with a firm conviction that if there is to be any real profit, any abiding fruit, it must be because the Holy Spirit presides over our meetings. Let us realise that He is with the lips and the hearts of the speakers, that He is with the intelligence and the mind of the hearer; that He is guiding and counselling all our deliberations! What a happy thing it is that, in the midst of all those diverging views which unhappily keep us apart—and I cannot minimise them, but recognise that some of us hold as essential what others do not—what a comfort it is that we are come together for the practical work of advancing the cause of the Gospel, all holding one Body, and one Spirit, one Lord, and one Hope of our calling!
